The office of the Dispatch will soon be moved out near the corner of Washington street and Fifth avenue. This will be an important matter for the employes, but it will be better quarters, I am sure. The present building is altogether too hampered. The place affords an opportunity for the Dispatch to spread itself, but is too far away from the real business portion of the city.

"We propose to sell to the employer eight hours out of twenty-four, and do as we please with the remaining sixteen."

ABOUT SIGNS.

It is evident that printers do not make all the mistakes in spelling. I have observed some signs on my daily rides to and from Boston and Cambridge that convinces me that the painters often fail in this direction. One sign announces "Danceing Every Sat. Evening;" another, "Parties Useing These Scales," etc.; "Optician's" has an apostrophe; and still another makes 'Bargains', Bargains' " plural possessive; any one can get "Razos Concaved" and patronize the "Largest House Furhishers in Cambridge" within the space of one block. I saw on an apothecary's store "Minard's Preperations," on an awning "Wholsale Tobacconist," on the window of a candy store, "Confectionary," a glass sign told of "Schmidt, the Flowerist," and one, elaborately flourished, announced "New and Second Hand Frnitue"; a delivery wagon had "Fanuel (Faneuil) Hall Market"; quite near West Boston bridge there is "This Warf to Let," and a market displayed "Deleware Grapes" and "Rocky Ford Mellons." I have also seen "Spend Five Minutes Tonight whit (with) Dr. Felt's Foot Soap." On one of the bulletin boards on Newspaper Row recently was recorded, "Jeromfe Begins Equitable Investigation." The printer might get the blame of this from some persons, but the mailing room is probably responsible. There is a street in Cambridge that has at one end of it a sign reading "Forest street" and at the other end the sign reads "Forrest street." In the West End of Boston there is a hotel with a sign on the outside wall, "Merrill House," and on the door it is "Merril House." Speaking of signs, a gentleman's furnishing store in Cambridge displays a unique one, "The Tog Shop."

To digress—Riding up to the composing room a short time since, I asked the elevator boy if Mr. Young was employed on the paper, as I had not seen him for some time, and he said: "There are two of 'em—one in the circulation department and one in the editorial room." I told him I meant the reporter, and he said, "Oh, he is the romantic editor." Now that was a feature I had never heard of in connection with a newspaper, so I inquired what his duties were, and the boy said: "He goes to all the theaters and writes up about the plays and the actors!"

T. J. WHITTEM.

Boston, Mass.

SAVANNAH, GA.

Savannah is still in the world of progress and holding on to life. The members are kicking out their wrinkles and hustling. The result is very gratifying. Four good members were added in July, and a few more are waiting for the next meeting. Since Mr. Hays visited this city, the buzz of the "saw" has been heard all over the city, and as the hum dies away you can still hear the echo of his words—"organize"—and that's what we are doing.

There are several "paralytics" here that we can't talk union matters to. They are afraid they will have to strike (their boss or somebody) as soon as they become unionized, and they are slow to grasp an explanation of what being a union man really means to them. Therefore, we have placed them on cold storage for a later day.

Work is good here, and every printer in town is busy. A demand for good job hands, also machinist-operators.

Big preparations are being made for Labor day, when all the union bodies in the city will parade, something like 1,500 will be in line. The typos will be there, you bet.

We are agitating, working and looking for eight hours on January 1. Some of the boys are already sleeping eight hours, so they will be used to the new division of the time—eight hours' work, eight hours' play and eight hours' sleep. Some of them are sleeping less than eight hours. Yes.

Vice-President McNally is doing good work among the boys and is ever ready to help the cause.

Among the new faces in the city, we see—Billy Ainsel, Alonzo Collins and Al Taylor.

Frank Pelot and Orlando Hodges have left the smell of the sweet magnolias and gone to seek their fortunes in other wild countries.

One daily newspaper, two job shops and a smaller newspaper strictly union; four job shops and a big daily running open shops and closed ears, is the situation here now. My kingdom for a change.

Eight hours is a mighty good thing,
Much depends on how 'tis said;
If we should ask for it now,
Our bosses would drop dead—
And then we should be out of a job.

More anon.

In Memoriam

WILLIAM W. HOLT.

Resolutions adopted by Mobile Typographical Union No. 27:

This union deeply deplores the death of its esteemed member, William W. Holt, which sad event occurred in Mobile on June 19, 1905. Mr. Holt was for nearly twenty years a member of this organization. He learned the printing trade in its jurisdiction and ranked as an excellent craftsman. He was industrious and capable, and proved faithful to every obligation to his employers and to the union. He fought long and nobly against the disease which terminated his life, and now that he has gone from our midst, his memory will be ever cherished by his coworkers in his chosen calling.

It is ordered that this memorial be entered in the minutes and published in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

WILLIAM P. SKELLY.

The following resolutions were adopted by the chapel of the Sudwarth Printing Company, of Washington, D. C.:

Whereas, It has pleased the Almighty, in His divine wisdom, to remove from this life Brother William P. Skelly, chairman of our chapel; and,

Whereas, We, his fellow craftsmen, and fellow employes of the Sudwarth Printing Company, feel that in him we have lost a true friend and faithful coworker for the cause of unionism; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, and of the Sudwarth chapel, over which his jurisdiction was, extend to his family our sincere sympathy in this their dark hour of bereavement; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of our deceased brother, and a copy be sent to THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL and Trades Unionist for publication.

WILLIAM H. CLAUSER.

William H. Clauser died Sunday morning, August 13, 1905, of pulmonary tuberculosis of which he had been afflicted for the past five years, which was the immediate cause of his death. The deceased was 32 years old and a native of Leavenworth, Kan., where he received his education and learned the printing trade upon the old Evening Standard. He was a member of Typographical Union No. 45 (at one time he was president for a short time); he also belonged to the Modern Woodmen. The funeral took place Tuesday, at 2 P. M., under the auspices of local Typographical Union No. 45 and the Woodmen Lodge. After services conducted by Rev. Kottich, of the German Methodist Church, his remains were laid to rest in Mount Muncie Cemetery. He leaves a wife, Mrs. Lina Clauser, and a son, father and mother and three brothers to mourn his demise. Mr. Clauser had endeared himself to the members of Typographical Union No. 45 by his kind acts and his endeavor to assist any one in trouble. Leavenworth Union No. 45 extends to the family of our departed brother our sincere and heartfelt sympathy in this their hour of bereavement; that the conception of life has at all times been the inspiration of his friends and made it impossible for any man to call him an enemy; that his courage and ability lifted him high in the estimation of his friends.

SAMUEL L. GRAY.

The following resolutions were adopted by Vincennes (Ind.) Typographical Union No. 395 at its regular meeting held on Sunday, August 6, 1905:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty Providence to call from our midst on Thursday, July 27, 1905, one of our beloved brothers, Samuel Lineberry Gray, who had shown great devotion to our organization, and in every way possible had done all in his power to advance the cause of unionism; and,

Whereas, In his sudden demise we recognize the loss of a true and tried member, who always "carried his card up-to-date;" a loyal friend and an upright and honorable citizen, who, although having in his career a full share of the trials and tribulations incident to the life of a printer and soldier, never shrank from duty nor deviated from the conscientious discharge of the same; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we sympathize with the family of our deceased brother, who died in the flush of manhood that gave him hope of many years of life and usefulness, which hope was blighted by a fatal malady; and, be it further

Resolved, That as a mark of respect our charter be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days; that these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the union; a copy sent to the bereaved widow, and a transcript forwarded to THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL for publication.

THOMAS HUGHES.

Albuquerque Typographical Union No. 304, at its regular meeting held July 2, adopted the following resolutions on the death of Hon. Thomas Hughes, who died July 1 at his home in Albuquerque, N. M.:

Whereas, In His infinite wisdom the Supreme Foreman has seen fit to call from his labors the Hon. Thomas Hughes; and

Whereas, Brother Hughes had been for many years an active member of this organization, of late years an honorary member, and always a true friend of his fellow craftsmen; therefore, be it

Resolved, By Albuquerque Typographical Union No. 304, that in the death of Thomas Hughes this union loses a steadfast friend and this community a valuable citizen, and that our sincere sympathy be extended to the bereaved family.

Resolved, That as a mark of our deep respect this union do now adjourn, and as a body attend the funeral of our late brother.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the meeting of this union, and that a copy be furnished to the daily papers of Albuquerque and to THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL for publication.

WILLIAM P. WALKER.

The following resolutions were adopted by Chicago Mailers' Union No. 2 at its last meeting in July:

Whereas, The Almighty Father, who doeth all things, has seen fit to call from life and its duties our brother worker and former member, William P. Walker, whose death occurred July 24, 1905, of pneumonia. He had been with the Inter Ocean chapel a number of years.

Resolved, That this union greatly deplores his demise, and that his loyal spirit and fidelity to our principles shall be held in loving remembrance by this union; also,

Resolved, That this union extends its sincerest sympathy to the family of our late brother, and assures them that we share in their grief for the departed husband and father; be it further

Resolved, That a copy be sent to his wife and family; and, be it further

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to our deceased brother's memory, the charter of our union be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days; also

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread in full on the minutes of this union.

FRANK C. GOODEVE.

On Thursday, July 6, 1905, Frank C. Goodeve, a well-known member of New York Typographical Union No. 6, died after a brief sickness of cancer, aged forty-eight years.

Mr. Goodeve at the time of his death was a member of the Martin B. Brown job chapel, of which department he was assistant foreman, having been employed in the office for the past fifteen years.

The funeral, which took place from his late residence at Jersey City, was largely attended by members of the craft in general. At a meeting of the chapel of which he had been a member, resolutions of sympathy were adopted, a floral offering was sent to the bereaved family, and a committee appointed by the chairman attended the funeral. Mr. Goodeve is survived by a wife and three daughters. His aged mother also mourns the loss of a devoted son.

THOMAS F. SCHOLES.

Resolutions of condolence adopted July 10, 1905, by New York Mailers' Union No. 6, on the death of Thomas F. Scholes, who was drowned off Sandy Hook on July 5, while on a fishing excursion with a number of his fellow workmen. Desperate efforts were made by his companions, but, being unable to swim, the outgoing tide carried him beyond reach of assistance. His body was recovered on Rockaway Point on July 11, and was buried on July 13, in Greenwood Cemetery.

Whereas, Thomas F. Scholes, recently deceased, was a member of Mailers' Union No. 6, and one of its most beloved and honored members; therefore, be it Resolved, That No. 6 take this method of expressing to his relatives and friends its appreciation of his inspiring work; that his exceptional tenaciousness has at all times been a pre-eminent feature of his life. Thomas F. Scholes was always a stanch union man, and held the positions of vice-president, recording secretary, a member of the allied trades council for several years, and delegate to the A. T. Convention of 1903, all of which offices he filled with great executive ability.

Resolved, That we hereby extend to the bereaved family our sincere and heartfelt sympathy; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be copied in our minutes and published in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

MARTIN LUNDWALL, JR.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by Bozeman (Montana) Typographical Union No. 551, at a special meeting, on the death of President Lundwall:

Whereas, Death has entered our ranks for the first time and removed from our midst our president, Martin Lundwall, jr.; therefore, be it

Resolved, That No. 551 takes this method of expressing to his relatives and friends its appreciation of his many sterling qualities in his association with his fellow men. His quiet, unostentatious life was an example all might emulate. He was generous and kind-hearted to a fault; he could look every man in the face with a genuine, friendly greeting—for there were none who had aught but a friendly feeling for him; while his untiring efforts in the interests of his employers seemed to be his highest aim, never apparently thinking of self until forced to do so; and be it

Resolved, That we, who knew of the many high traits of character toward his friends, and especially to his immediate relatives, refrain from offering them meaningless condolences, feeling that their knowledge of the fact that we knew him and loved him well, may help to lighten the burden that oppresses the home that shall know him no more; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, and inscribed upon the records of this union; an engrossed copy presented the family of the deceased, and that our charter be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days; also that a copy be furnished the city press for publication.

LORENZO D. EVANS.

At a meeting of Bradstreet chapel, New York, held on August 9th, the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased the Almighty God to suddenly remove from our midst our respected foreman and brother member, Lorenzo D. Evans; and,

Whereas, The Bradstreet chapel desires to place on record its appreciation of his honorable and straightforward disposition, and of his consideration and thoughtfulness of the interests of the men under his charge; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Bradstreet chapel, in meeting assembled, extend our heartfelt sympathies to his bereaved widow in this hour of her sadness; and, be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to his widow; that a copy be caused to be printed and hung in a suitable place in this office for a period of thirty days as a mark of respect to his memory; and that they be caused to be printed in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL and the New York Unionist.

HOMEMADE PHILOSOPHY.

(From Pennsylvania Grit.)

Most of our hates grow out of our fights for the dollar.

Misery loves company a little bit more miserable than itself.

You can kill anything with satire but a fool and a politician.

If we never envied the man on the pinnacle of fame we would never try to climb.

People who pant for glory should have a change of pants to wear when glory fades away.

Let us try to live peaceably with our neighbor in our joys, the same as we do when sorrow bows us down.

Some men know all about God's plan of the universe, but know nothing at all of their own spleen or appendix.

If modern history is so full of errors, how can we believe the old traditions worn threadbare through talk?

If the most illiterate dead man could come back and write the story of "Life Beyond the Grave," he would become a millionaire.

I wonder if the first feeling after getting into heaven will be like the one we experience when an aching tooth suddenly stops aching?

In stormy weather the country people can't go to church, and in nice summer weather they don't want to go; but they may be saved between showers.

Official Budget

THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL

ISSUED ON THE FIFTH OF EACH MONTH.

AT ROOMS 640-650 NEWTON CLAYPOOL BUILDING, INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

J. W. BRAMWOOD, Editor and Publisher

Entered at the postoffice, Indianapolis, Ind., as second-class matter.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.—One dollar per annum to any part of the United States or Canada; foreign, $1.50 per annum; single copies, 10 cents each.

To insure prompt insertion, all official matter, communications and advertisements should reach this office BEFORE the TWENTIETH OF THE MONTH PRECEDING PUBLICATION.

Advertising rates made known on application. All letters and remittances should be addressed to the editor and publisher.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES.

Items for the official columns of THE JOURNAL should be prepared on a separate sheet, and the style of the paper followed as closely as possible. Such items should not be made a part of a letter dealing with other subjects, for if this is done the items are likely to be overlooked, even though the greatest care be exercised. Write as plainly as possible—especially proper names—using one side of the sheet only. Communications must in all instances be accompanied by the author's name and address. All official matter must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH, to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. The observance of the foregoing will tend to insure what is desired by all—promptness and accuracy in the publication of official matter.

THE JOURNAL MAILING LIST.

When a member requests a change in his JOURNAL address, he should give the name and number of the union with which he is affiliated, together with his present and former address.

Additions to the mailing list can only be made when received through the local secretary. Members not receiving the magazine should furnish the local secretary with their addresses.

Additions, corrections or alterations reported by local secretaries should be kept separate from other correspondence. When a member deposits his card, and his name is reported for the subscription list, the secretary should state where the member previously received THE JOURNAL, and give the name and number of the union with which he was affiliated. When a member draws his card, is suspended or expelled, or in any manner ceases to be an active member of the local, the secretary should request that his name be dropped from the mailing list.

A large number of those who take cards and remove to unorganized towns fail to renew their cards. To prevent loss in such instances, it has been decided that members holding cards, and located outside of the jurisdiction of a local union, must either deposit their cards with the nearest union and pay dues each month, or pay International dues in advance, in order to get THE JOURNAL. Where a card-holder pays his dues to the local in advance, a specific report should be made by the secretary upon the case, in order that the name can be placed on the list and the magazine sent to the member for the time for which dues have been paid.

The 25th of each month is the latest date upon which changes for the succeeding issue can be made on our mailing list.

Upon request, secretaries will be furnished with a copy of the list of their members to whom THE JOURNAL is being sent.

All correspondence regarding THE JOURNAL should be addressed to J. W. BRAMWOOD, Newton Claypool building, Indianapolis, Ind.

UNIONS IN ARREARS AUGUST 26.

Section 1, article ix, of the constitution, requires that: "International dues for each month shall be collected by subordinate unions and transmitted to the secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union before the twentieth of the succeeding month." Under this law the July per capita of all unions was due at headquarters not later than August 20. The following unions were delinquent on August 26, having failed to make their returns.

In this connection attention is directed to section 7, article vi, of the by-laws, which is as follows:

"Sec. 7. No funeral benefit claim shall be allowed unless the deceased was possessed of a current working card at the time of his death, nor shall a funeral-benefit claim be allowed if, at the time of death, the union of which deceased was a member is in arrears for per capita tax to the International Union."

COMMUTATION RAILWAY RATES FOR WORKMEN.

United States Consul McNally calls attention, in a report issued by the department of commerce and labor, to an interesting fact connected with labor in Belgium. It relates to the liberal rates granted by government railways to workmen, enabling them to have their homes in the country districts. He says: "The recent publication of the railway statistics shows an interesting increase in the matter of weekly commutation tickets issued to the workmen of Belgium, which is, of course, for the third-class compartments. In 1870 there were issued 14,000; in 1875, 200,000; in 1885, 667,000; in 1900, 4,500,000; and in 1904, over 5,000,000. If we reckon on an average of 45 tickets a year for each person we find that some 110,000 workmen live in the country and are employed in the cities. This of course does not include those traveling on the small-gauge lines, trams, and other transportation enterprises.—New York Journal.

A BADGE of SERVITUDE

That's what the union button has been called by a number of irresponsible union haters. We quite agree with these gentlemen. It is a badge of servitude—servitude to principles of justice, servitude to principles of honor, servitude to ideas of decent conditions in the industrial world. Show that you are a union man not merely a member. The I.T.U. Button is the handsomest "badge of servitude" made. It is neat in design and is made of heavy rolled gold warranted not to break nor tarnish. They cost but fifty cents. Don't put it off any longer. Get one now. Address all orders to

The Monotype

"Like the Sun, it shines everywhere"
—Shakespeare

THE MONOTYPE, like the sun, shines everywhere and on every one alike.

It is not only to the master-printer that its advent brings relief from care and from worry.

To every one in the office, not even excluding the humble but necessary "divil," The MONOTYPE is a help and an assistance. The general lightening of the labors of pressmen as well as of compositors is the most notable result of the first MONOTYPE installation in any establishment.

THE CENTURY

9000 PRINTED SHEETS Pile from Press No. One	TWO PILES OF PAPER ILLUSTRATING THE VALUE OF INCREASED OUTPUT	12000 PRINTED SHEETS Pile from Press No. Two

These two piles of paper were printed, each upon a different make of press, in a nine hour workday. The fixed charges for operating each press, however, were the same; that is to say, to pay the running expenses of each press per day, the same number of sheets had to be run, say 6000.

Therefore the press that printed pile No. One showed a net profit to the printer of 3000 sheets, while the press which printed pile No. Two showed a net profit of 6000 sheets.

One hundred per cent increase of profit in favor of the press which printed pile No. Two; that is to say, press No. Two made double the money for the printer who ran it than press No. One.

We claim simply that the CENTURY will turn off a greater day's work than any other press; and that it will make for you double the money that most presses can.

Remember it is the last few thousand sheets of a day's run that pay your profit: the first thousand pay only your help and your expenses.

MEN AND THEIR METHODS.

BY JOHN EDWARDS.

SO far as is possible the consumer should purchase articles known to have been made under proper conditions. Such conditions imply the right to use the union label, and it is incumbent on all good union men that they act up to the moral obligation. They should do as they would like to be done by. It is unfortunate that this duty weighs lightly upon large numbers of otherwise good union men, who persist in buying in the cheapest market and thus aid in keeping up the conditions in other trades that they have been the bitter opponents of in their own. This is an anomaly that is passing strange in these days of militant unionism —militant because it has to fight for what it gets.

There is no excuse for neglecting this duty of patronizing the man who uses the union label or those who observe the rules and regulations of a trade in places where the label is not in vogue or where it is not feasible to use it. Why clamor for union conditions for one's self and not aid in securing them for the man who would like them? Why give union made goods the go by and buy things that tell by their looks that they have been turned out of sweat shops? It is a curious commentary on the ways of human nature that it requires protection for its own interests and is not willing to extend similar help to others.

Theoretically the free trader should be a non-unionist, but what do we find? The union man who is a free trader, so far as concerns the political economy of his country, is the strongest advocate of protectionism when his wages and hours of labor are in question. Why? Because if he did not protect his interests his employer would seek to buy his services for about one-third or one-half what the union says he must receive. It is up to the unionist who is also a free trader that he shall patronize his fellow unionist who may favor protection in union and in political economy. There are many free traders who are forced to acquiesce in the protection theory when the question of wages arises. The open shop will naturally tend to the cheapening of labor, in which case we shall see a quick acceptance of the idea that it is better to have a little protection in certain cases.

Preferential dealing means patronizing the man who can show the union label. It may also be defined as the practice of buying goods only from men who observe properly the standard rules and regulations of each trade. Of course, the standard rates may occasionally vary; they have been on the upward path for the past fifty years, and it is evident to all that in many cases desperate efforts are being made to force them down. As a consequence it may be said that the standard regulations for any one trade mean the best that can be obtained at a certain time in a particular locality.

The importance of public opinion, or rather its moral pressure, is generally admitted, or should be. The influence of trade unions has been an important and necessary factor in securing the improvements that have been made. So has the labor legislation enacted in the various states. But the efficiency of these improvements depends in the main upon the existence of a well-informed public opinion which is in turn inspired by a sense of its responsibilities socially. How often do we not see that this social force is lacking, or that the chief requirement of the condition of things is that it should be exerted actively so that the laws should be more thoroughly carried out. From time to time evasions of the law are noted by the press, evasions which are sometimes remedied, but more often are not.

The law and public opinion are not everything in these matters. The latter can support the former, but in turn it asks that those whom it has helped by its support shall do the right thing by others. In all the outcry about the evils of the sweating system one thing stands out clearly—the blame for the system lies upon the general body of consumers. Consequently, it is indeed strange—to say the very least—that the upholders of unionism should tolerate and aid the system by purchasing goods made in sweat shops. In plain English, such actions mean kicking your brother workman good and hard when he is down, helping to keep him down, and also injuring the maker and seller of union made goods. Nothing can be plainer. Yet it is done every week by the union man or by his better-half—who is satisfied that her husband shall get union wages but proceeds to buy in the cheapest market. The good soul may have heard of the union label, but forgets all about it when buying goods. There are plenty of stores whose proprietors observe the standard rules of the trades their employes work at, and who consequently deserve the first consideration from those benefited by the unions, yet who are passed by because others sell (non-union) goods cheaper.

The consumer who buys in the cheapest market generally—one might almost say always—gets stuck. The union man or his wife who patronizes the trading stamp store is a loser. Why not buy in the shop that sports the other and more legitimate stamp —the union label? The trading stamp is a detriment to wage earners, who should by now be tired of being the tools of a lot of grafters, and should show their disapproval of this mode of fleecing. Some unions have denounced the scheme by resolutions. The cost of the trading stamp scheme, like that of most other schemes, no matter how theoretically plausible, is necessarily borne by the customer, either by increased cost on merchandise or by the lowering of the quality of the merchandise. The scheme means that money is extracted from the merchant at the expense of the customers on the pretense of giving them something for nothing. This subject is referred to because it is simply inconceivable that those who are benefited by the union label—which is an altogether different kind of trading stamp—give it the cold shoulder and buy of those who are willing, with the aid of another stamp, to do them.

The intense competition among retailers and other kinds of middlemen is due mainly to their anxiety to attract customers by dangling bargains before them as lures. In the desire to get something cheap it is sometimes forgotten that it may turn out to be nasty. One should not delude one's self, however, into thinking that because the common methods of buying and selling are not illegal they are therefore justifiable morally. Too much emphasis can not be laid upon the fact that those people who buy goods in a store for their own use are indirectly the employers of those who have made the articles, and are consequently largely responsible for the conditions under which they work. Furthermore, it is thought that all honorable tradesmen, storekeepers and the like, would readily adopt a standard in regard to such matters as hours and conditions of employment, wages, overtime and apprenticeship in order that their workpeople should have a decent living, if they could trust the public to protect them from the unfair competition of less scrupulous rivals. Then let the union man show the public the way in this matter. He will be thought all the better of if he sticks to his creed practically.

In some industries it has been found convenient and practical to publish lists of those business men who observe the requirements of the unions. There are, of course, certain obvious difficulties in preparing such lists, but proper care will secure accuracy and perfect fairness of treatment to all concerned. It may also be necessary to observe certain legal and technical proprieties in getting up such lists. In some cases such work is done by auxiliary bodies. How widely different in character these auxiliaries may be is found in two cases which are illustrations of the statement. The printers of the United States have auxiliary federations of women—their wives and sometimes female fellow members—who do effective work of this sort. In England the Christian Social Union countenances the lists issued by trade and labor councils for the use of that union and the public in general. The Christian Social Union endeavors to develop and give expression to a social conscience, possessing a sense of moral responsibility in regard to the purchase of goods, and then appeals to the practical men of business, both employers and employed, to provide information as to fair and proper standards. Indeed in two cities, London and Glasgow, the local branches of the Christian Social Union undertook the responsibility of issuing such lists. The work called for careful investigation of the working conditions in each trade, the formulation of a code of rules, and consultations with bosses and workmen in regard to the practical effect of the regulations proposed. This method has been successful. The experience gained shows how much can be done even by a small group of people who are really in earnest about their Christianity, who have been at some pains to see how their principles are meant to apply to the conditions of industry and commerce, and who are prepared, if necessary, to make some personal sacrifice in order to be true and just in all their economic dealings. It appears, therefore, that it should hardly be necessary to impress on the union man that he ought to support unionism not by word of mouth but by deed. As an observer of the conditions of life it is regretfully admitted that numbers of union men are somewhat lax in carrying out the principles of their creed once out of sight of the union's meeting place—a laxity which it has been attempted in some trades to correct by means of fines—but much could be done toward bringing them to a realization of what is due from them in this respect. It is hoped that this appeal will have some effect on those unthinking men who forget to see that the union label is on the goods they buy.

It will interest the large number of union printers who are able to read or can speak French to learn that strenuous efforts are being made in Paris to simplify the orthography of that language, but some of the authorities are bitterly opposed to all changes suggested, among them François Coppée. French is practically a sealed language, inasmuch as the academy passes upon all changes and additions about every ten years, and is loath to allow the introduction of new words or words from other languages. We take up anything and everything from foreign tongues, provided we have the necessity.

Last year, in this column, in referring to Russia, it was suggested that perhaps the advance guard of modern civilization was seated on the Japanese gun carriage. All the world knows now that there was some truth in the idea. Word comes that unionism, comparatively a recent growth in Russia, is spreading rapidly. There are now strong organizations in various industries, not alone in the large cities but in regions where one would hardly expect to see or hear of unions. Organized effort has led to considerable improvement in conditions of labor. May the good work go on! When the workmen secure the political advantages that we enjoy—which they undoubtedly will—there will be no necessity to compel the printers to leave their employment, as was done several times during the strikes last winter in St. Petersburg. There is little doubt that the Russian workman is thirsting for freedom of speech and press.

There is nothing at which some of our non-union friends will stop when they want to cast a slur on unionism. In commenting on light weight book paper made from esparto, the New York Evening Post, a bitter opponent of unionism and manned by non-unionists, said that certain publishers were asked why such paper was not utilized more generally by the makers of books in America, and that one of them declared "that difficulty had been experienced with the union printers who declined to use the new (sic) material for their work as it had not been approved by their organization." This is an astute way of poisoning the mind of the public against the union printer. Why the Post should give currency to such a barefaced lie is inconceivable. The union printer does not care a continental what his employer uses in the way of paper. It is, of course, useless to ask such a paper to undo the damage it has done in this respect.

Recently some interesting facts concerning pensions, etc., in Germany were printed in this column. The man who reads and studies the article referred to will hardly be unprepared to hear that there are no tramps or hoboes in Germany. When the German workman becomes old or an invalid the state pensions him. The tramp does not haunt the highways and byways and make a general nuisance of himself, as with us and some other countries. Every loafer is required to give an account of himself, and has no inducement to remain idle. True to its paternal instincts the government puts him at such hard work that the would-be idler finds it incumbent on him to seek some other—more congenial—employment as soon as possible.

The world's growth in the printing and publishing of newspapers is strikingly shown by some recently published figures which it were well to reprint in THE JOURNAL. It appears that Germany stands at the head of Europe in the number of newspapers, it having over 5,500, of which 800 are dailies. England is second with some 3,000, of which 809 are dailies. France comes third with 2,800, of which a quarter appear daily, bi or tri weekly. Italy has 1,400, while in order follow Austria, Spain, Russia, Greece and Switzerland. These figures refer only to newspapers. It is not so long ago that Paris boasted of 3,000 publications of all sorts, the dailies numbering 140, the weeklies 781, and the monthlies 933. In the provinces there were 3,849 "journals." The patriarch of French publications is the Gazette de France, founded in 1631. Of the 140 Paris dailies it should be stated that some exist only in title, for in several cases the same matter is utilized under different names.

In the United States there are 20,879 newspapers—more or less since the census was taken. The first six states, in the number of their newspapers, rank as follows: New York, 1,936; Illinois, 1,726; Pennsylvania, 1,393; Ohio, 1,218; Iowa, 1,082; Mississippi, 1,045. Alaska has two dailies (one of which lately installed a linotype) and the Philippines four. We don't make such a bad showing, do we? Besides, we publish newspapers abroad. All the newspaper reading world knows of the Paris edition of the New York Herald, and of the Paris edition of the New York Times, published during the last exposition in la ville lumière. It will be news to many that Galignani's Messenger is dead; it died last year. It was the oldest newspaper printed in English on the European continent—ninety-one years old. It had many rivals—ephemeral with one exception, the Paris edition of the New York Herald, started in the late eighties. It is stated that Mr. Bennett negotiated for the purchase of the Messenger, and in fact controlled it for a month, but a restriction involving the retention of the name Galignani led to the failure of the negotiations. Mr. Bennett thereupon acquired the Morning News, which was transformed into the European edition of the Herald, an up-to-date American newspaper.

John I. Davenport, day editor of the New York Tribune when Amos J. Cummings was night editor, and Greeley was in his editorial prime, was, like Cummings, a rare raconteur of Greeley stories. One that Davenport loved to tell was about an error for which Greeley himself was responsible. Greeley, an authority on election figures, one day went into the Tribune office, overjoyed that the republicans had carried Westchester county in a local election. He wrote an editorial on the subject, and put a comparative table, taken from the Tribune Almanac, in the article. When the paper appeared the figures were misplaced, the republican vote appearing in the democratic column and vice versa. Greeley was in an awful temper and vowed, after much blankety-blanking, that he would kick the proofreader out of the place. He would not be made a fool of in that way, etc. This in the editorial room. Upstairs he told the proofreader that he ought to be kicked from one end of the composing room to the other. The man thus berated hunted up the copy and held it before Greeley with but one remark: "Read that, sir." Greeley read it; and then his face assumed a look of mingled contempt and disgust. The error was Greeley's. Then he turned his back to the proofreader, lifted his coat-tails and said loudly: "Here, Sam, kick me, and kick me till I holler."

One of our daily contemporaries, appealed to by some one as to the advisability of becoming a printer, utters a great deal of truth. It says that it would not advise any young man to take up a trade like printing, simply because it is too limited. "Once a printer, always a printer. This is not literally true, perhaps, but it comes near enough the truth to warrant second thought before entering such a trade." The applicant was further advised to take some position that would give him more elbow room; anything but to become a machine before he was twenty. This is very good advice in its way and should be spread widely. The intelligent compositor always remains a printer. What is it in the business that keeps a man in it once he has learned it? Unless one has capital one always remains an employe; the exceptions prove the rule. There are few other trades in which a man requires so much capital wherewith to start in business, that is, in the larger cities. And our reading tells us that many a printer has wished that he had been brought up as a farmer. Or some other gainful occupation.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE HYPHEN.

BY JAMES ARMSTRONG, JR., SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

"Brevity is the soul of wit."—Shakespeare.

THE essence of all progress is brevity. Its chief object is the economy of time and labor. This truth is equally manifest throughout the whole of human affairs. The law of development may be broadly generalized as that process which tends to a minimum expenditure of energy and a maximum achievement of results.

The object of syntax, which is the government of language by certain and invariable rules, is to reduce the time and energy to be devoted by the listener or reader to an understanding of it to a minimum; and the laws of speech find a counterpart in the laws of society, whose desirable aim is the reduction of the time and energy to be devoted by the individual to selfsupport to a minimum. Ungrammatical speech, therefore, is in a sense unethical speech; and unethical laws may in a sense be said to be ungrammatical legislation. The fundamental evil of both bad grammar and bad legislation is that they entail alike a waste of time and energy upon those whom they affect.

Punctuation, which comes after grammar in the order of linguistic evolution, finds the generic root of its utility in the same thing that syntax and government do. From the primitive picturewriting of savages to the hieroglyphics of such semicivilized races as the ancient Egyptians there was vast progress, and from hieroglyphic-writing to the alphabetical-writing of such more highly civilized peoples as the Greeks and Romans there was still greater progress. In the natural order of orthographical evolution picturewriting came first. It was followed by symbolwriting, which was essentially an abbreviated form of its predecessor. Then came alphabetwriting, which so far is the highest form of thought transmission.

When men first began to represent ideas with pictures, and with pictures I include the rudest kinds of signs, it is reasonable to believe that the pictures were placed together as closely as possible. In removing a load of brick from a wagon to the pavement, it is natural to place them close together. It is both laborsaving and timesaving. A series of pictures representing an idea was not separated from another series representing another idea, on the same papyrus. The writer economized his time and labor by placing them indiscriminately together. What the writer gained, however, was lost to the reader, upon whom was thus imposed the double labor of deciphering the pictures as a whole, and then segregating the various ideas contained in the whole. We know that such was the case with the ancient WRITTEN languages. Both the Greeks and the Romans began with the first letter and ended with the last, between which there was not only no punctuation, but not even a segregation of the letters into words. His Commentaries, as Cæsar set them down, ran thus:

omniagalliadivisaestintrespartesunamquarumbelgaeincolunt, etc.

A book written in that manner taxed the time of the reader to the utmost. There was progress when it was written thus:

omnia gallia divisa est in tres partes unam quarum belgae incolunt, etc.

The segregation of the letters into words, however, was not enough. And after awhile there occurred the idea of a further elucidation of the text by a separation of words representing a complete idea from those representing another complete idea; and the period was invented. The segregation of completed ideas was an advance. Next came the subdivision of sentences, or the segregation of two or more ideas combined to make a single idea. "All of Gaul is divided into three parts" is a complete idea—"one of which is inhabited by the Belgians" is another; and there is a priori evidence to think that the colon or its equivalent followed the period. Then came the semicolon and then the comma. The exclamation-interrogation-and-hyphen-points came last of all. Passing over any reference to the exclamation-and-interrogation-points, let us see if this can not be illustrated. I will set down a sentence without punctuation, save the period, and then introduce the colon, semicolon, comma and hyphen in the evolutionary order they must occur for the fullest elucidation of the meaning of the sentence. Thus:

At the one extreme we have those war like tribes which subsisting mainly by the chase make the appliances for dealing with enemies serve for procuring food and have sustaining systems represented only by their women who are their slave classes while at the other extreme we have the type as yet only partially evolved in which the agricultural manufacturing and commercial organizations form the chief part of society.

Attempting to represent the evolutionary process which I conceive that punctuation has undergone, I would place a colon before "while" and a semicolon after "food" and "society." Such are the main divisions of the sentence, and by the introduction of the colon and semicolon the reader is enabled to grasp its meaning more readily. And now introducing the comma to subdivide the main divisions, I would write it:

At the one extreme we have those war like tribes which, subsisting mainly by the chase, make the appliances for dealing with enemies serve also for procuring food; and have sustaining systems represented only by their women, who are their slave classes: while, at the other extreme we have the type, as yet only partially evolved, in which the agricultural, manufacturing and commercial organizations form the chief part of society.

The only words in the sentence above which at all call for the hyphen are "war like" and "slave classes." Written as two words, there is some mental confusion, however slight, in grasping their correlated meaning, and a consequent waste of the reader's time. They should therefore be either hyphenated or consolidated. I would consolidate them, and in order to fully illustrate my conception of the function of the hyphen, I will substitute "belligerent resembling" for "warlike" and "working man elements" for "slaveclasses," and hyphenate them thus: belligerent-resembling-tribes and workingman-elements.

In the evolution of language the simple words preceded the compound, and the hyphen was not invented until it was suggested that the slight mental confusion, which inevitably arises when two or more words representing a single idea are disjoined, might be eliminated. By way of example take the sentence: "The smoke creating quality of coal." There is a possible momentary misconstruction of the word "creating." Perhaps a second is lost. Such phrases occur in nearly every page of any largesized book, and in the aggregate there would be considerable loss of time, hence something should be done to economize the second. Perhaps the thought occurs to consolidate the words thus: The smokecreatingquality, etc. But this is more wasteful of time than when written as three words. It has the fault of presenting too many letters to the eye at once to be segregated into words that may be seen at a glance. Consolidated, it is seen at once that they stand for a single thing or idea, but the reader has to disintegrate them mentally and reconsolidate them before he grasps their meaning. Such loss of time suggests the possibility of presenting it to the eye as at once connected and disconnected, and the hyphen is invented and we write it: The smoke-creating-quality, etc. There can now be no confusion, for the hyphen is a sign that the meaning of the words compounded must be mentally suspended until the final hyphen is reached. If we write "smoke creating quality" the mind is confused just as the eye is confused if we write it "smokecreatingquality." Herein we see that the only function of the hyphen is the avoidance of both optical and mental confusion, the endurance of which entails a loss of time to the reader.

The hyphen itself, however, is capable of producing, under another form, the very evil it was designed to correct. It takes up room, and if used unnecessarily it inevitably causes books to be more expensive both to publisher and reader, thus indirectly entailing a loss of time on both producer and consumer. Typographically, it takes as much time to pick up a hyphen as it does a letter; and the unnecessary hyphens in any largesized book represent so much work at the case. Suppose you have a library of 1,000 volumes of 500 pages each that cost $1 a book. Say there are ten unnecessary hyphens on every page. There are 5,000,000 hyphens in your books. Two hyphens make an em. With composition at 10 cents per 1,000 ems, there is an additional original cost to the publisher of $250 for typesetting. Another result is that the book is larger than it might be, which entails an expense for unnecessary paper. In a word, the book for which you pay $1 should be sold for at least 90 cents. The extravagant use of the hyphen alone, to say nothing of other punctuation-extravagances, has cost you $100, which in my case would represent twentyfive days' labor. I would, therefore, eliminate the hyphen as much as possible, and would write "the smokecreating-quality," etc.

There is no economy in writing today and tomorrow, etc., with the hyphen. It should also be dispensed with in words compounded of nouns and participles, and adjectives and participles, regardless of whether the noun or adjective is the first or second word, as almsgiving, broadminded, publicspirited, etc., as well as those made up of two nouns, as typesetter, fishmonger, fellowman. This rule should hold in all compounds when the first or last word is not greater than a trisyllable, as everybody, boardinghousekeeper, etc. When both the first and the last words are trisyllables and multisyllables they should be hyphenated, as linotype-operator, automobile-station, torpedoboat-destroyer, etc. And the hyphen should be omitted in all words compounded of "over," "under," "ex," etc., as overproduction, underconsumption, undergraduate, expresident, etc. The same should hold good with all words made up of "trans," and "inter," "sub," etc., as transcaspian, transsiberian, interstate, etc.

The basic idea of my conception of the use of the hyphen is the utmost economy of the reader's time and energy. This is primary, and secondary is the same thing on behalf of the publisher. In accordance with this idea, the following would be a rule at once easy and without exception: Hyphenate all words compounded of simple and other compound words which contain six or more than six syllables. On account of the many silent letters in the English language this rule will seem merely technical at times, but in such cases the language should be blamed rather than the rule. For instance: Typewritermaker and typewriter-repairer seem eccentric, as there is a difference of only three letters in the two words. A phonetic system of spelling would almost wholly eliminate this objection. Again, there is as much reason as there is little custom for consolidating several English words meaning different things into one word meaning one thing, as there is for doing the same thing with foreign words. We do not object to "anthropomorphic," "hieroglyphic," etc., which are made up of Greek trisyllables and dissyllables, and there is absolutely no reason why English words made up of English compound words should not be consolidated in exactly the same way.

It is contended by many printers that the standard of newspaperwork should not be as high as that of bookwork. The wish of the linotype-operator is to have as many spacebands in a line as possible. The cause of this is apparent, whether he is working under a timescale or a piecescale. It is to avoid handjustification, which in the former case calls for extra exertion for which he gets no pay, while in the latter case it tends to shorten his string and thus lessen his earnings. Indolence on the one hand and thrift on the other, therefore, on the part of the printer both militate against a proper use of the hyphen. Nor is this all. The proprietor is not so much interested in the niceties of punctuation as he is in the most type for the least money. He stands in the same relation to the public that the employe stands to him, and he exhibits the same kind of human nature in dealing with the public that the employe exhibits in dealing with him. He wishes all he can get for the least he is forced to give. As the printer is not especially interested in economizing for the proprietor, neither is the proprietor especially interested in economizing for the public; and proprietor and printer together care nothing about the time that the reader may lose in rereading matter that is made obscure by the omission of the hyphen. The proofreader also comes in for his share of the blame, since he is not inclined to mark any more errors than the occasion demands. And what is true of the hyphen is true of all other punctuation.

And now, remembering that the newsgatherer and other writers of the morning daily are made of the same clay as the printer, proofreader and proprietor, each and all cultivating habits of carelessness through both indolence and thrift, it will be seen that the daily newspaper both typographically and editorially can not be other than semibarbaric. The editorial-writer must have two columns a day regardless of whether he has anything really worth saying or not. The general motto is quantity, rather than quality. The reporter must produce a maximum of copy in a minimum of time. The printer must do the same in regard to typesetting. The proofreader is demanded to be speedy rather than accurate. In every department where the copy is handled before it reaches the proofreader, there is the same hasty and consequent faulty construction of English, with the result that he has time alone to mark only the more glaring of typographical errors.

The proprietor justifies himself for his share of blame by citing the demands constantly made upon him by the competitive system, under which he is living. The editor, reporter, telegraph-editor, copyreader, compositor and proofreader justify themselves by citing the demands the proprietor makes upon them for quantity rather than quality, a result of the competitive system. The general public accepts the competitive system as the best and most permanent of social institutions. The proprietor, therefore, has no motive for the reversal of his motto of quantity rather than quality, and until he demands a reversal of it, the same motto will continue to be the inspiration of every department of the paper.

The corollary which is to be drawn from the foregoing remarks that seemingly are of little relevancy is that the proofreader on a morning newspaper must compromise between the absolutely correct and the relatively correct. To punctuate it correctly he would frequently have to rewrite an entire item, while to insist upon the absolute use of the hyphen, he would be compelled to rephrase many parts of an item. For all practical purposes, therefore, he will omit the hyphen as much as possible in newspaperwork. The greater part of the public that reads newspapers is not spirited enough to notice or care whether it is printed public spirited or public-spirited or publicspirited. It is not familiar with any but the English of overworked reporters, and since such

English is nearly always of uniform impropriety, the public is used to it and readily understands it. It will make no difference if typesetter is one word and coal miner two. If the printer makes it looking glass, running board, drinking water, etc., don't change it, as neither the mind nor the eye of the average reader is trained to an appreciation of typographical exactness. Permit the compositor to get all the spacebands in a line that he can, otherwise he will class you as a "sharpshooter" and try to make it unpleasant for you. The chief thing that John Smith is interested in is to see his name spelled correctly and that when his daughter gets married none of the costumes or weddingpresents is left out of the writeup. Let his wife give a card party of four handed euchre or a cardparty of fourhanded-euchre, according to the bias of the printer who gets the "take;" but don't let it appear Ara- for Isa- bella or pean de sou for peau de soie. "Country society," almost illegibly scrawled by various and sundry rustic ignorami, should be read carefully, for it is nearly all of a personal nature, and there is the same vanity about names and weddingpresents, etc., while a piece of reprint about the heliocentric or some other equally interesting theory may be railroaded fearlessly. I say this without sarcasm, as illustrative of the practical side of proofreading.

When I first began proofreading, some years ago, I had six machines to look after. Not knowing at that time any more about the business than how to mark such errors as I happened to find, I read everything by copy from the markets to the editorial. The effect of reading aloud against the noise of a composingroom for eight hours was extremely fatiguing. Upon turning over in sleep a pain through the chest would often awaken me. That was six years ago. Now there are nine machines for me to look after, and the "ads" have increased proportionately. The volume of work has increased 50 percent, while my exertions have decreased in the same ratio. I have been forced to protect myself against the competitive system. I make no attempt, under existing conditions, to read proof absolutely well, but only relatively well. Like water, my moral standard rises to the level of the moral standard of those about me, from the proprietor to the galley-boy. To attempt to rise above the general moral standard would be an injustice to the proofreader in many ways. He is absolutely under no obligation to do something that nobody else does. Moreover, he is not encouraged to do so by his fellow-unionists. The local scale for proofreading is $4 a day, regardless of the number of hours, with no overtime for afternoon composition. The operator gets 50 cents an hour straight. The scalecommittee failed to protect the foreman, machinist and proofreader, hence they must protect themselves. Again, the proprietor fails to give the proofreader sufficient and efficient assistance, another injustice. Just as a railway superintendent, as was once confessed to me, will neglect to repair a bridge until a wreck occurs, so does the proprietor neglect to adjust the work to the capacity of the employe until he discovers through the repeated failure of individuals that he must so adjust it. Why then should the proofreader do himself the injustice of trying to maintain a high standard of work, when it is neither appreciated nor paid for?

The Philosophy of the Hyphen must therefore give way to the Philosophy of the Individual. "Unto thine own self be true and it will follow as the night the day thou canst not be false to any man."

Some stories and "pomes" have been going the rounds lately concerning pi. One of the best is about Joel Chandler Harris, the author, and his definition of pi and pie. The story runs that Uncle Remus had been bothered considerably by three ladies with whom he was playing whist, who had been plying him with foolish questions. Finally one asked him the real difference between pi and pie. Mr. Harris said that pie was the foundation of New England's wealth and the basis of indigestion; pi was the raison d'être of profanity and the sine qua non of dialect stories. Young men in the business will do well to make a note of this definition. Most of them are fonder of pie than of pi.

THE EIGHT-HOUR CONTEST.

RESULTS UP TO SEPTEMBER 27, 1905.

OFFICIAL BATTLE CRY OF THE I. T. U.

We propose to sell to the employer eight hours out of twenty-four, and we will do as we please with the remaining sixteen.

THOUGH the result of the contest for eight hours that has waged since September 8 is set forth in the "What We Are Doing" columns in this issue of THE JOURNAL, it is deemed advisable at this time to present a statement of the accomplishments in this direction since the inauguration of the movement. The data appearing herewith includes a list of the unions having the eight-hour day prior to September 8, 1905; those that had arranged for it prior to that date; a list of unions that have secured eight-hour contracts with all offices within their jurisdiction since September 8, and the names of unions that have secured contracts covering a portion of their members and that are now engaged in a strike affecting the offices refusing to sign eight-hour agreements.

In the latter column Chicago and St. Louis are included, although official reports show that in the former city some 241 firms, employing some 2,000 book and job members of No. 16, have signed an eight-hour agreement, leaving but 550 members on strike. In St. Louis only 88 members were on strike when this article was written, agreements having been signed with offices employing seven-eighths of the book and job members of No. 8. With few exceptions, the situation in the two cities named is a fair index of the conditions elsewhere.

Gains are being made daily, and our members are confident of success. In several instances local unions have informed the International officers that no International assistance would be required, as the locals were in position to amply finance the fight.

WHAT is your union doing to keep the label in the public eye?

Trade Union Benefits.

At the recent convention there was considerable discussion on the subject of making membership in the International Typographical Union more desirable by an extension of the beneficial features of the organization. Many arguments were presented on both sides of the question, the editor of THE JOURNAL taking the position that the proposition was commendable, but that it would be impossible to put it into effect until the membership became educated to the idea of higher dues. At the same time it is rather interesting to know what other organizations are doing in this line. Joseph R. Buchanan, the veteran labor editor of the New York Journal, says:

In this connection it is interesting to consider what one British trade union has done and is doing in the way of extending benefits to its members. We have some unions in the United States which have records to be proud of, when their age and the obstacles against which they have to contend are considered. But the engineers' society of Great Britain has shown the magnitude to which such a feature of unionism may be made to grow.

All the paying members of the engineers' society are entitled to share in the benefit features of the organization.

For the past quarter, ending with June 30, the following sums were paid out by the engineers under the various heads recognized as union benefits: Donation, $123,445; sick, $61,440; superannuation, $141,820; funeral, $19,975; contingent, $6,070; benevolence, $4,970. Thus a total of over $357,000 was paid out in three months in benefits to its members by the engineers' association, and the reserve fund at the time of the report amounted to $3,049,140.

There are many other organizations which have beneficial adjuncts of a like nature, but we know of none with a record like the above.

"NOT in Any Trust" is a catchline used by a number of firms to boost the sale of their goods. Several of the concerns using this are notoriously non-union, but seek to create the impression that they are for the "common people" by the use of the phrase quoted. A man need not be in a trust to run a scab shop. It's a cheap appeal, and unless it is backed up with the union label, it should be disregarded.

Note and Comment

OFFICIAL BATTLE CRY OF THE I. T. U.

We propose to sell to the employer eight hours out of twenty-four, and we will do as we please with the remaining sixteen.

THE Crowell Publishing Company, of Springfield, Ohio, has announced its intention of establishing an open shop, and is advertising in a number of papers for non-unionists. The Crowell company publishes The Woman's Home Companion, and Farm and Fireside. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

SECRETARY MACINTYRE, of the United Typothetæ of America, in his report to the recent typothetæ convention at Niagara Falls, said he deemed it "unwise" to go into the details of the San Francisco fight on the union shop and eight-hour day, which was conducted by him. "Embarrassing" would have been a better word.

THE employer in the small town who was inveigled into sending his $10 to John Macintyre, secretary of the United Typothetæ, must feel somewhat similar to the rural visitor to Chicago who "bought" the Masonic Temple from a pleasant stranger, at a bargain. In neither case were the goods delivered. If the employer in the small town thinks the typothetæ is going to waste any strikebreakers on him, he is badly mistaken—there don't seem to be enough to go around.

IN the review of the Toronto convention in the September JOURNAL the proposition by Delegate Crosman, of Boston, was referred to as a "resolution endorsing single tax." In the correspondence department of this issue Delegate Crosman points out where the editor of THE JOURNAL was in error in so classifying the resolution. In the same review it was stated that "Delegate" Goodkey, of Washington, introduced a proposition, when it should have been "Mr." Goodkey, as the gentleman was not a delegate.

HUMPHREY O'SULLIVAN, the "rubber heel" man, recently presented Lowell (Mass.) Union with a check for $500, as his first installment to help the union gain the eight-hour day. Mr. O'Sullivan is an oldtime member of Big Six and has for a number of years been engaged in the rubber heel business. He announced that there "was more where this comes from." While it may not be customary, the editor of THE JOURNAL would like to announce that Mr. O'Sullivan makes fine rubber heels.

THE secretary of York (Pa.) Union No. 242 asks THE JOURNAL to request all secretaries to write to Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, 206 Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, D. C., secretary of the International Reform Bureau, asking him to have the label appear on all his religious literature. The firm which does his work is working ten hours a day, and the bulk of its work is for Dr. Crafts.

THE Colorado State Federation of Labor, at its recent meeting, passed resolutions endorsing the demand of the printers for an eight-hour day and pledging support to that end. John E. Collett, president of Denver Typographical Union, and a delegate from No. 49 to the Birmingham convention in 1901, was unanimously elected president of the state federation.

THE Montana State Federation of Labor, at its recent session held at Great Falls, passed resolutions endorsing the eight-hour campaign of the International Typographical Union and pledged support to the printers in the shorter workday movement.

THE Labor day edition of the Labor Journal of Rochester, N. Y., contained a section devoted to the labels of various organizations. This part of the paper was printed in colors, and is worth keeping.

THE Toledo (Ohio) Printing Press Assistants' and Feeders' Union is sending out circulars to all the locals of that body urging the immediate termination of the contract of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America with the United Typothetæ of America. The circulars set forth the narrowness of the contract, depriving the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, as it does, of the right to lend assistance to any organization in the printing trades. It is also asserted that the agreement is manifestly unfair, because "on and after January 1, 1906, it will reduce the wages of the members of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union of North America, because the International Typographical Union will eventually secure the eight-hour day, and we will be compelled to work eight hours with a reduction in wages or nine hours, as the employers see fit." The matter contained in the circular was endorsed by Toledo Printing Pressmen's Union.

If an employing printer closes his shop for seven weeks rather than meet the eight-hour demand, he is as much loser in time on the year as if he had granted the shorter day. And some of them have done this. They have said the eight-hour day would ruin them. Yet they are willing to close down for a length of time amounting to much more in a year than the difference between the nine-hour day and the eight-hour day. Consistency, thou art a jewel.

Do you remember, dear reader, the fit thrown by a writer in the Bloomington Pantagraph recently, on the question of the shorter workday, in which he characterized the demand for the eight-hour day as a "crime against heaven"? Well, the Pantagraph Company has signed an agreement with Bloomington Union, conceding the eight-hour day. That's all.

According to the New York papers, Paul Kelly, the motorman on the elevated train which plunged to the street and caused the death of so many people in that city recently, was a strikebreaker in the interborough strike there some months ago. He came from St. Louis at that time to take the place of unionists who were out. Immediately after the awful catastrophe he disappeared. "By their works ye shall know them."

The man who sets the scare headlines for the yellow newspaper is a believer in the policy of the big stick.

The Peterborough (Ont.) Trades and Labor Council has pledged its moral and financial support to the printers in their fight for the eight-hour day.

The call for the twenty-fifth annual convention of the American Federation of Labor has been issued. The sessions this year will be held at Old City Hall, in the city of Pittsburg, beginning at 10 o'clock Monday morning, November 13.

The indignation of the average political worker at the sight of a card without the union label on it during campaign time, and his utter indifference to the label the rest of the time, are but a few of the many funny things in the world.

The Hollenbeck Press, of Indianapolis, the office printing The Journal, was one of the first in the city to sign an eight-hour contract. It is the second largest establishment in the Hoosier capital. Please put The Journal in the eight-hour list.

Secretary Gavitt, of Pueblo (Colo.) Union No. 175, writes The Journal that September 15 was the last day for giving notice of a desire for a change in the book and job scale of that union. As no notice was received, the contract will stand until October 15, 1906. The employers are evidently pleased with the shorter workday there.

The recent convention of the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union at Chicago adopted resolutions favoring the present law excluding Chinese, and advocating a much stricter law as regards immigration generally. Copies of these resolutions are being sent to all subordinate unions with the intention of obtaining as many endorsements as possible.

Peaceable Persuasion Declared the Same as Violence.

It remained for a Cincinnati judge—Judge Hosea, of the circuit court—to take the all but final step in the matter of injunctions.

The iron molders' union of that city had a strike on against a local firm. Non-unionists were being imported to fill the places of the strikers. An injunction was issued by the court ordering the unionists to refrain from:

(1) Hindering, obstructing or stopping any of the business of plaintiff in this city, county or elsewhere.

(2) In any manner interfering with the plaintiff company in carrying on its business in the usual and ordinary way.

(3) Going, either singly or collectively, to the homes of the employes of the plaintiff company, or any or either of them, for the purpose of and in such a manner as to intimidate, coerce or unlawfully persuade any of said employes to leave the employment of the plaintiff company.

(4) Compelling or inducing, by threats, intimidation, force, violence or unlawful persuasion, from freely continuing in the service or employment of the plaintiff company.

According to the evidence, two members of the union peaceably went to two of the imported strikebreakers and asked them if they desired to join the union, offering to have them initiated and to furnish railroad tickets to another city for themselves and wives, together with a sum of money. The proposition was agreed to, and the strikebreakers joined the union and left the city.

The two members of the union were then haled before the court and fined $100 each for violating the injunction, the court in effect asserting that in peaceably inducing the strikebreakers to join the union and leave the city, the business of the firm was injured as much as if violence had been used.

It will not be a very far cry from this decision to one in which unions are denied the right to solicit members at any time, as such action would be inimical to the interests of firms that desire to employ none but non-unionists.

The editor of the Iron Molders' Journal says:

The strikers or their agents in this opinion were "actuated by an unlawful purpose," in endeavoring,, by peaceful means, to protect their wage rate, after a combination of foundrymen had entered into a compact to force a reduction. It follows logically, therefore, that any peaceful act on the part of a trade union to protect or advance the interests of its members, provided it is considered injurious to the employer, is unlawful. Truly, this is becoming interesting! If any act on the part of workmen should force an employer to pay higher wages, thereby decreasing his profits, then the act is unlawful, because it has caused the employer an irreparable loss, at least such are the conclusions reached by reading His Honor's learned opinion. The trouble with the court is that it holds the antiquated legal opinions as to the property right in labor. We do not believe that Judge Hosea had any intention of being unjust, even though a gross injustice was done, for he had evidently given much time and study to the writing of his opinion, and cited a number of precedents to support his decision. He took occasion to say that he had reviewed the law as to the relations of employer and employed in order to show that the jurisdiction of the court in the matter was based upon ancient precedents of the English law and a few citations were given, reference being made of the statute of laborers. As no more unjust or one-sided class laws were ever passed, it is small wonder that the employers, in the court's estimation, may enjoy rights not allowed to workmen.

The editor of THE JOURNAL is of the opinion that the injunction evil will ultimately work out its own destruction. Each succeeding order of the court seems to be more drastic and radical than the preceding one, and the time will surely come when an outraged public opinion will wipe out the whole infamous system of lawmaking by judges.

Notice to Secretaries.

Under date of September 8, secretaries of subordinate unions were furnished with blank forms for reporting the vote of their members on the proposed amendments to the constitution. The amendments were published in THE JOURNAL of September.

The circular issued in this connection sets forth that these amendments should be discussed by subordinate unions, and the propositions voted upon by the membership on or before October 21, 1905, that being the time fixed by the executive council for the taking of the vote, in accordance with article xvii of the International constitution. The result of the vote on the propositions must be in the hands of Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood on or before October 31, 1905.

Returns should be made under seal of the union, be signed by the proper officers, and should indicate the number of votes cast for and against the different propositions.

Ballots have been prepared for the use of members, showing the subject-matter of each proposition. In view of the importance of the amendments, and the necessity for each member becoming familiar with the matters upon which he or she is asked to vote, it is suggested that each union procure a number sufficient to furnish each member with a copy. To this end it is requested that the matter be brought before the union as early as practicable. The ballots will be furnished in lots of fifty or less, for twenty cents; 100 or more, thirty-five cents per hundred; in lots of 500, $1.50; 1,000 or more, $2.50 per thousand. This includes postage or expressage.

President Gompers on Our Eight-Hour Movement.

The following editorial appears in the current number of the American Federationist, the official organ of the American Federation of Labor:

The International Typographical Union at its convention at Toronto in August reiterated its determination to demand the enforcement of the eight-hour day January 1, 1906, and directed its officers to meet and confer with the typothetæ (employers' association in the book and job trade), with the purpose of an amicable arrangement for its inauguration. The executive council of the International Typographical Union went to the typothetæ convention in September, but the friendly overtures were met with scant courtesy. The convention declared that it would not consider any phase of the eight-hour workday.

In view of the fact that at the instigation of the employers' association a guerrilla warfare has been inaugurated in several places against the local unions of the International Typographical Union—that is, local employers have provoked strikes by insisting on anti-union conditions—the executive council of the International Typographical Union has declared that wherever local printers' unions are not bound by agreements to the contrary they shall demand of their employers that an agreement be entered into providing for the enforcement of the eight-hour day January 1, 1906, and, should this be refused, the printers are authorized to cease work.

The executive council is entirely justified in this course. It is the evident policy of the typothetæ to attack a few widely-separated unions at a time, and, under the impression of unpreparedness, thus prematurely to break the force of a simultaneous movement of the printers, should that be necessary, to enforce the eight-hour day.

The attacks which caused the strikes at San Francisco, Chicago, Albany, N. Y., and other points, are clearly in line with the employers' policy. The first and last and several other of the strikes have already been won, and the one at Chicago and other points will be won in due time.

Thus the executive council of the International Typographical Union has met the challenge of the typothetæ, and all the aid, sympathy, and cooperation of the men of organized labor, and the earnest, right-thinking people of our country are with the printers in their great effort for the enforcement of the eight-hour workday, the proper, scientific and natural division of the day—eight hours for work, eight hours for rest, eight hours for moral, mental and physical improvement.

Success to the printers of America!

Society of Journal Correspondents.

The proceedings of the second annual meeting of the Society of Typographical Journal Correspondents, held at Toronto, have been received. At this meeting the following members were present: Allen, Alter, Cantwell, Chinn, Cooke, Dirks, Fear, Garman, Hartnett, Henderson, Knott, Kreiter, Lovett, Meade, Saltus, Weiner and Waudby. In the absence of President Coombs, First Vice-President James Monroe Kreiter presided. A communication was read from the president, expressing his regret at being unable to be present, and extending his wishes for the success of the meeting. The secretary, J. J. Dirks, made a detailed report of the work of organization and submitted a financial statement showing the society to be in good condition. The offices of secretary and treasurer were consolidated under the title of secretary-treasurer. The rate of dues was decreased from $1 to 50 cents per annum, effective January 1, 1906. The secretary-treasurer was instructed to issue a circular to be sent to correspondents, inviting them to join the society. Editor Bramwood accepted an invitation to address the meeting, and, according to the printed minutes, "gave the writers a touching recital of the troubles of the editor." It was declared to be the sense of the meeting that each writer devote part of his monthly letter to the eight-hour cause until its final success. Election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, Herbert W. Cooke, Boston, Mass.; first vice-president, Charles W. Fear, Kansas City, Mo.; second vice-president, H. D. Henderson, Rochester, N. Y.; secretary-treasurer, J. J. Dirks, St. Louis, Mo. After having a photograph taken of the correspondents in attendance, the society adjourned, to meet in Colorado Springs in 1906.

A Printers' Ink Editorial.

The following extract from a Printers' Ink editorial may prove interesting:

ADVERTISING PHYSIOLOGY.

Science has nothing quite so wonderful as the advertising physiology upon which adwriters build health arguments for the breakfast foods. Patent medicine physiology, which is often derided, may be called tame in comparison.

Not long ago in a magazine ad for the Post products the following information was set before the public:

"Hot to cool. A person can keep the body eight to ten degrees cooler in hot weather by sensible breakfast. Try a little fruit, two pieces of very hard toast, a cup of well-made Postum and a dish of not more than four teaspoonfuls of Grape Nuts and cream. You can enjoy any kind of weather and feel well nourished. 'There's a reason.'"

Now, had the man who wrote that simply taken the trouble to look into the encyclopedia under the heading "Temperature of the Body in Health and Disease" he would have learned what no doubt thousands of his readers know—namely, that the normal temperature of the human body is uniformly ninety-eight and four-tenth degrees Fahrenheit; that a variation of one degree either way means a variation of ten pulse beats; and that if there is a persistent variation above ninety-nine and five-tenths or below ninety-seven and three-tenth degrees some form of disease is certainly indicated. If this "health breakfast" was capable of accomplishing what it is advertised to do the persons who ate it would be entertaining subjects for a clinic.

Physiological advertising arguments are, in the case of breakfast foods, rather dangerous things. For all breakfast foods are made of wheat or other grain, and, therefore, the real physiology of one is the physiology of all.

Breakfast food physiology may be picturesque, but nine times in ten it is imaginary. With hundreds of thousands of school children studying physiology in our public schools it would be far safer for the breakfast food advertising man to confine himself to the "rich nutty flavor" which all breakfast foods have. Health arguments are admittedly effective in advertising, but the food value of wheat is general rather than specific.

Physiological lies are dangerous. Too many readers of the magazines and newspapers nowadays have a knowledge of elementary physiology.

Shelby Smith Apologizes.

The following communication is self-explanatory:

PHILADELPHIA, September 19, 1905.

I deeply regret the publication of the statements made in the Trades Union News of February 9, 1905, concerning the members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union.

I did not mean to intimate that the International officers had entered into agreements with the rats or rat employers of Philadelphia.

I had no purpose to assail the personal character of the members of the executive council.

The above is submitted as my apology for the publication by me, in the Trades Union News, of the article complained of.

(Signed) SHELBY SMITH.

The Toronto convention of the International Typographical Union, when expelling Mr. Smith as a delegate and declaring his seat vacant, instructed Philadelphia Union No. 2 to immediately expel him "from membership in that organization," such expulsion to "remain in effect until such time as Shelby Smith shall make a full and ample public apology to the members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union, such apology to be published in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL and Trades Union News of Philadelphia, and given such other publicity as may be deemed necessary."

The members of the executive council are of the belief that as the foregoing apology was tendered and accepted prior to the expiration of the thirty days' time allowed No. 2 in which to take action, the intent and purpose of the Toronto convention in fixing the extreme local penalty has been complied with.

With the publication of the above, as prescribed by the convention, the incident is closed so far as the executive council is concerned.

THE special sheriffs and policemen who served during the late teamsters' strike in Chicago have formed a union and will ask for a raise of $1.50 per day during the next labor troubles in which they participate. The Chicago Tribune is responsible for this statement.

DURING the last month fifteen charters were issued from International headquarters. Watch us grow.

The Funny Man of the Typothetæ.

Our readers are no doubt familiar by this time with the open shop ads that are being run in papers all over the country, for printers to take the places of union men on strike for shorter hours. One of our members in North Dakota, out of curiosity, answered one of the ads, and received the following bit of "come-on" literature:

NORTHWESTERN MASTER PRINTERS' ASSOCIATION.
St. Paul, Minn., August 22, 1905.

Mr. ———.

Dear Sir—In acknowledgement of your reply to our recent advertisement for a first-class compositor, we can use at the present time a limited number of men of that craft who are willing to engage strictly on their merits.

The ruling rate of wages in Chicago at the present time is $19.50 per fifty-four-hour week.

No man having confidence in his ability and who is willing to work in open shops need hesitate to go to Chicago, and, while we do not hold out any extraordinary inducement, should you feel disposed to make a change at this time, I am positive that you will find in Chicago opportunities not found in your locality, and, furthermore, that this office will use every effort at its command to secure you employment immediately, provided you are willing to accept and work harmoniously on the following lines:

1. That there shall be no limitation as to the amount of work a man shall perform during his working day.
2. That there shall be no restriction of the use of machinery or tools.
3. That there shall be no restriction of the use of any manufactured material, except prison-made.
4. That no person shall have the right to interfere with the workingmen during working hours.
5. That the use of apprentices shall not be restricted.
6. That the foreman shall be the agent of the employer.
7. That all workmen are at liberty to work for whomsoever they see fit.
8. That all employers are at liberty to employ and discharge whomsoever they see fit.

If this meets with your favorable consideration, kindly fill out the enclosed blank, giving at least two references, and forward to 109 National German-American Bank Building.

Yours respectfully,
EMPLOYING PRINTERS' LABOR BUREAU.
Charles Paulus, Secretary.

The blank referred to asks whether you are married or single, union or non-union, references, the color of your hair, etc.

There are several points in the above gem that will warrant consideration for a moment. Take the first stipulation regarding limitation of output. Did you ever hear of that before? We all have. It's the myth that is always brought forward by the union haters in times like this. As far as the International Typographical Union is concerned, there is no such thing as limitation of output, and the employers know it as well as we.

The funny man of the typothetæ also states: "The ruling rate of wages in Chicago at the present time is $19.50 per fifty-four-hour week. Notice his careful choice of words—"at the present time." He doesn't say what the "ruling rate" will be in case the open shop can be established. And he does not state how $19.50 came to be the ruling rate and how the fifty-four-hour week came to be the ruling hours for printers.

The rest of the stipulations only show the hand of the taskmaster. The discrimination against prison-made goods is evidently a grandstand play. Or it may be that the open shoppers, intending to run prisons themselves, wish to remove competition.

Then the funny man requires at least two references from applicants for work in open shops. They never asked union printers for references.

The Northwestern Master Printers' Association will have all it can do to attend to its own knitting before this number reaches our readers. Either that, or the eight-hour day will be conceded.

New Jersey Eight-Hour Conference.

The August meeting of the New Jersey eight-hour committee was held at Atlantic City, N. J., on August 27. The following delegates were present: A. Guenther, P. A. Miller, Edward Lannen, Orange, N. J.; A. Johnston, F. L. Kresge, Trenton, N. J.; Elmer Throssel, H. J. Gottlob, Newark, N. J.; Allan Ball, F. N. Cornell, John S. Fisher, Jersey City, N. J.; G. Mowen, L. W. Niles, J. Kermode, Plainfield, N. J.; R. D. Uhler, Rahway, N. J.; S. T. Woodrow, Camden, N. J.; J. H. Price, L. A. Gilbert, F. Kay, E. G. Miller, Atlantic City, N. J.; N. F. Doyle, Perth Amboy; H. W. Thomas, New Brunswick, N. J.; Ernst Kreft, Philadelphia, Pa.; P. W. Van Skiver, Union Hill, N. J., and Organizer McLoughlin and Special Representative C. E. Hawkes, of Philadelphia, Pa. The reports from the various unions in the jurisdiction were very encouraging, and it was the opinion of the delegates that little trouble would be experienced in putting the union workday into effect. The conference considered various ways and means of pressing the campaign.

SEPTEMBER SESSION.

The September session of the conference was held in Jersey City, N. J., with the following delegates present: J. N. Griffiths, Camden, N. J.; G. F. Miller, W. J. Burke, Elizabeth, N. J.; Louis E. Keller, Hoboken, N. J.; K. M. Forbes, J. Fisher, F. N. Cornell, A. Ball, Jersey City, N. J.; R. H. Throssel, R. H. Hill, H. J. Gottlob, Newark, N. J.; H. E. Austin, H. W. Thomas, New Brunswick, N. J.; A. Guenther, E. Lannen, P. F. Miller, Orange, N. J.; N. F. Doyle, Perth Amboy, N. J.; G. Mowen, J. Kermode, L. W. Niles, Plainfield, N. J.; R. D. Uhler, Rahway, N. J.; F. Halstead, J. Lambruskin, J. Van Pelt, E. Drobny, Somerville, N. J.; F. L. Kresge, Trenton, N. J.; J. A. Rank, P. W. Van Skiver, Union Hill, N. J.; and Organizers Woodrow and McLoughlin. The reports for the month were even more encouraging than those for the previous month. Several eight-hour contracts were reported. The meeting adjourned to meet in Newark, in October.

An Amendment.

The resolutions adopted by the mass meetings of employers at Boston, Atlanta and other places contained this:

> The proposed reduction of hours is not required for the physical comfort, moral, mental or religious improvement of the people whom it is thought to affect thereby.

And at the recent convention of the United Typothetæ of America at Niagara Falls the foregoing was changed to read this way:

> Said proposed reduction of hours is not a necessity for the health and comfort of said compositors.

It will be noted that the "moral, mental and religious improvement" portion was dropped. Wonder why.

THE rain may fall on the just and the unjust, but the fact remains that the unjust are generally provided with umbrellas.

The Honorable Business of Strike Breaking.

In the current number of the Business Men's Magazine, J. L. Steele has an article on "Strike Breaking on the Southern Railway." In this article Mr. Steele describes at length the spy system, under which "special agents" are hired to join unions and report the action of these bodies to the employers. Our members are fairly familiar with this dishonorable method of obtaining information, as described from time to time in the daily press, but the article of Mr. Steele goes into the details of the business in a most interesting manner. In part he says:

> In Detroit the Edward Smith Company has its headquarters. Its business is peculiar. It has completely wiped out some of the strongest labor unions in the country; it has reorganized the mechanical departments of great corporations in a wonderfully effective manner and unearthed frauds in the management where they were never imagined to exist; and all with a finesse and precision that was startling to the guilty parties. A few unknown men of average intelligence, properly used, have been the only weapons necessary to accomplish this.
> The operatives are handled in the following unique way:
> First, in placing a special agent in a shop, that agent seeks employment in the same manner as does the ordinary man. Second, this agent is a skilled mechanic in the work he is to be placed at. Third, if the shop is unionized he is a member of the union, and, as such, attends all their meetings. Fourth, he is a good correspondent, and reports weekly or semi-weekly all the items of interest that he sees.
> Thus agitators are reported to the company and to the proprietors and quietly dropped, undesirable help dismissed, incompetent officials forced to resign and erring ones put under discipline. There is no limit placed on the extent of the agent's criticisms; all the glaring details of the conditions are placed before the management in the plain, cold truth, devoid of frills or delicate treatment. The special agents are men of peculiar mechanical genius, wide experience and steady habits, and they work under contracts, which, though rigid, spur them on to do their utmost.
> The force of this system, when employed in breaking up a tenacious labor struggle, is well illustrated by the rapid-fire work it accomplished for the Southern Railway in May, 1901. At that time the International Association of Machinists made a bold attempt to throttle the railroads of the country, by endeavoring to force them to concessions, including the nine-hour day and other equally unjust demands.

Then follows a long account of how the machinists' union was beaten through the efforts of three or four men, who wormed their way into the confidence of the unionists, became members of the organization, took an active part in the business of the union—and all the while were making daily reports to the management of the road. After being out for a while the men became discouraged, and, according to Mr. Steele, the "special agents" immediately seized their opportunity. "They boldly denounced the men in charge of the strike, and in an outpouring of vindictive wrath raked up all their grievances, and concluded by imploring the men to tear up their worthless union cards and throw them away. The men were so deeply impressed by the appeal that they followed the advice. Then back to the shops they flocked, humbled and anxious to resume their work."

In concluding his article, Mr. Steele says:

To break up this big strike, which extended over 6,741 miles of railroad, just three Edward Smith agents were used, and they stopped it in a little over a month.

The Union Pacific, with its 3,020 miles of railroad, fought the strikers of the boilermakers' and machinists' unions for almost a year, aided by a small army of Pinkerton detectives, and then finally had to concede to the demands of their employes to gain peace. Three men were killed during this strike, and the loss the Union Pacific sustained ran into the millions.

Treasurer Donnelley on Overtime.

In a late number of "System" T. E. Donnelley, treasurer of the United Typothetæ of America, has an article on the subject "Does It Pay to Run a Factory Overtime?" The article displays a cold-blooded disregard for men and a lust for profit that is entirely in accord with the methods of a lover of the open shop and all the "freedom and independence" it is supposed to possess. Mr. Donnelley is an earnest believer in overtime. He says "the additional wear and tear, power and light, is insignificant. * * * There is no addition to those bigger items of general expense—superintendence, rent, interest on investment." But—and here is shown the great humanitarianism of some men—"Men should not be worked after nine P. M. and never on Sunday. Without one day of rest or change in seven, men become fagged." Continuing, Mr. Donnelley says: "Farming out work in such exigencies is unsatisfactory; it has to be followed up, watched and supervised too closely; others will not do the work as well as those who are trained and experienced in the work."

We wonder if those now composing this gentleman's rat crew are "trained and experienced in the work." Mr. Donnelley has much to learn, and he is learning.

Their Printer Is In Line.

The Mechanic, a trades union magazine published in New York city, recently inquired of the firm that does its printing how it stood on the eight-hour question. The following answer was received:

OFFICE OF
THE TECHNICAL PRESS,
13 and 15 Vandewater Street,
New York, September 1, 1905.

Mr. Joseph A. Mullaney, Editor and Publisher The Mechanic:

DEAR SIR—In reply to your request of August 31 that we define our position on the question of the eight-hour day, we beg permission to place the following information under your hat:

The three stockholders who comprise the corporation known as "The Technical Press" are now, and have been for many moons, members in good standing of Typographical Union No. 6 and are unalterably in favor of the eight-hour day.

The Technical Press juggles the type, whirls the presses, flip-flaps the folding machines and horses the mail for eighty-one publications per month. It has a very husky ghost to do the pedestrian act for seventy-four of the most artistic printers that God ever pumped breath into, and we are workers ourselves. We make a satisfactory profit even though we do share liberally with our employes, and we intend to do all in our power to help them improve their condition.

Yours very truly,
THE TECHNICAL PRESS,
S. ROSENTHAL, President.

It wouldn't be a bad idea for all trade union publications, or other publications friendly to labor, to make inquiries of their printer. Every little bit helps.

THE interesting news comes from Buenos Ayres that at a conference between the employing printers and their employes the eight-hour day was agreed on.

FORGET the "unfair list" once in a while just long enough to boost the "fair list."

From One Who Wished He Hadn't.

The following was received from Minneapolis, Minn., September 7. It speaks for itself:

CHICAGO, ILL., September 4, 1905.

N. C. O'Connor, Minneapolis, Minn.:

DEAR SIR—Some time ago I got a letter from you asking me to join the union, and telling me not to respond to the advertisements for non-union help. I did not take your advice and here I am in Chicago without a friend and without a dollar.

I answered the Chicago advertisement and was given a situation and promised $19.50 per week. I went to work and after three days they came and told me that they could only pay me $16 per week, and the second week they said I was only worth $12, and that was all I could get. Now they make me work ten and eleven hours and I would give ten years of my life if I were back in the country.

If any one wants to know what this non-union business is, let them ask me. Tell any one inquiring that it is nothing but slavery here. As soon as I get money enough I will go back to Minnesota and join your union.

Jessie Brookes, of Anoka is in town.

EUGENE E. MORTON.

P. S.—They take your railroad fare out of your wages at the rate of $3 per week. You don't get that free transportation.

Words of Encouragement.

The United Mine Workers' Journal, the official organ of the United Mine Workers of America, has the following to say in regard to the shorter workday campaign of the International Typographical Union:

The movement for an eight-hour workday has been one continuous struggle with organized capital. The improvement in machinery has greatly increased the productive capacity of man. He can produce more in four hours now than he could produce in twelve hours a century ago. Notwithstanding this fact the employers of labor continually fight the introduction of a shorter workday. It makes no difference to them that the workmen are under a greater nervous strain by the introduction of machinery; that the continued repetition of the same piece of work, hour in and hour out, is monotonously wearisome.

He must have his profits, and immense profits at that; he fails to realize that the modern machine is the accumulation of the mechanical genius of the ages in which the workingman is as much the heir as the employer of labor; as such he is entitled to some of the benefits that come from the introduction of labor-saving machinery.

He is asking for some of that benefit in the form of shorter hours, and he is justly entitled to it.

The International Typographical Union is at present making preparations to secure an eight-hour workday on the first day of January next. It is one of the oldest unions in existence in the United States; it has long been noted for the conservatism of its policies. It has been patient, though persevering, in its efforts to secure an eight-hour workday.

The honorable manner in which it has treated employers in the printing trade; the sacredness with which it has maintained its contracts, and the conservatism with which it has moved should entitle its demands at this time to favorable consideration at the hands of the employing printers, and yet in many portions of the country the employers in the printing trade are organizing for the purpose of defeating the movement of the typographical union.

Let us hope that the union will win out in this movement to secure an eight-hour workday.

How to Obtain "Individual Liberty."

The individual contracts which the employes of the Nunemacher Press, of Louisville, Ky., are compelled to sign contain the following clause:

Article III. It is expressly understood that the party of the second part reserves, and shall have, the right to withdraw from this contract and quit the service herein agreed upon if sick, incapacitated or ill-treated, but that he shall not so quit this employment during the life of this agreement in order to accept higher wages elsewhere.

Just let that last clause have your attention for a while. It will give you an insight into the methods of the open shopites in their efforts to obtain "individual liberty" for the workingmen.

Favors the Decent Workday.

The Memphis (Tenn.) News-Scimitar, in the course of a lengthy editorial on the coming eight-hour day, presents the following, which is respectfully referred to the consideration of those employing printers who seem to think they have a God-given right in the labor of their employes:

The working printers are demanding an eight-hour day, and a strike has been inaugurated which may reach all over the country. The eight-hour movement may not win today or tomorrow, but it will win ultimately. It will win because it ought to win. In time, and not so remote as some may think, the seven-hour law will win and the six-hour law will win. Then all men will find work; no one will be overworked; no worker will be taxed to support the idle and non-productive. In a state of nature all men like all animals have to provide for themselves. This is God's law. Society is progressing and rapidly gravitating toward a return to the observance of God's law. And those who work will receive a more adequate division of the product of their labor. The multi-millionaire will be less frequently seen. The few will not be allowed to gather together and claim empire over what the many produce. Men will not be permitted to grow rich by paying young women $2.50 to $3 a week for nine or ten hours' work. Merchants and manufactures who can not pay more than this must go out of business. The sweat shop must go. Workers must have pleasant and sanitary surroundings. "Piece work," through which the unthinking impose slavery upon themselves and their fellows, must be abandoned. To accomplish these things will require time and a readjustment of much that is now supposed to be firmly fixed. But the change will come—is sure to come.

The employer's imperious superiority and complacent self-sufficiency may be slightly shocked or temporarily disconcerted by the discovery; but he will be brought to a realizing sense of the equality of men and of the immanency and indwelling of God in all creatures created in His image.

The consciousness of this fact is humanizing and sublimating. It bridges the chasm between our fictitious and unnatural classifications and divisions among men. It makes for an acknowledgment of a common brotherhood under a common fatherhood and the drawing closer together of man to man and the realization that each is his brother's keeper.

A shorter working day, more leisure and the dying out of drudgery are necessary to the welfare of the human family, and they are coming, and only the foolish will set themselves against their approach.

Bryan on the Shorter Workday.

One of the principal speakers at the Labor day demonstration in Omaha was William Jennings Bryan. Mr. Bryan delivered a lengthy address, in which he pointed out the right and justice in the organization of workers. In speaking of the things that he thought the laboring man should demand, he said:

There are certain things which the laboring man has a right to ask of society. Let me enumerate a few of these. First, he has the right to ask for reasonable hours, and I believe that the eight-hour day is a reasonable request. When we remember that eight hours are required for sleep and something like an hour and a half for eating and a considerable time for going to and from labor and removing from the person the effects of labor, it will be seen that an eight-hour day does not, after all, give a man an unreasonable time with his family.

The wage-earner is not a beast of burden; he is a human being. He has his family, and time must be given for association with his family. Besides, he is an intelligent being, and time must be allowed for mental recreation. He is a political factor also, and time must be allowed him for preparation for the fit discharge of his political duties. He is also a moral being and a member of society, and he has the right to claim a sufficient time for the discharge of his obligations to his fellow man and to his Creator.

We can not expect the laboring man to be what he ought to be physically, mentally, morally, socially and politically if he is driven from his couch to the shop and from the shop back to his couch. While this question primarily affects the laboring man, it in a broader sense affects us all, for we are so knit together that we can not separate ourselves from each other or subject any portion of the community to injustice.

The Deadly Parallel.

Newspaperdom gives a couple of pages of the current issue to the employing printers' side of the eight-hour contest. The article is full of misstatements, but the following parallel is drawn to show its general inconsistency. The extracts given below are taken from Newspaperdom's account of the trouble and are not in any way garbled:

ALBANY, N. Y.—All standing firm. Will win out (From typothetæ bulletin.) * * * Since the foregoing bulletin was sent out information has reached the typothetæ headquarters that the strike so far as Albany is concerned is at an end. An amicable agreement was reached between the employers and their men by which it is understood the former will give way to the eight-hour-day clause. This can not be regarded as a victory of the union over the typothetæ, however, as ALBANY IS NOT REPRESENTED BY THE LATTER ORGANIZATION, NO CHARTER EVER HAVING BEEN GIVEN TO THE CITY.	THE ALBANY TYPOTHETAE voted unanimously at a recent meeting not to sign the eight-hour agreement proposed by the International Typographical Union.

All in the same article, if you please. The small caps are ours. And in this same article the following startling information is handed out to the dear reader:

The employers have an advantage in modern methods of printing. Much of it is machine work, and even typewriters can be converted into machine operators with fair success, under the guidance of expert machinists. The bulk of the printing can be turned out with comparatively unskilled labor.

Factory Employes in Parry's Town.

Two thousand three hundred manufacturing plants in Indianapolis, employing 33,000 people and paying $15,000,000 in wages annually.—Extract from pamphlet issued by Indianapolis Commercial Club.

By taking the above figures and engaging in the simple mathematical process of division, we find that the average wage for these factory employes is about $454 per year, or less than $8.75 per week. The same commercial club that publishes the above statement is also inviting manufacturing plants to locate there, saying that the city is "remarkably free from labor disturbances." To a man up a tree it looks as if a few "labor disturbances" would not do a great deal of harm in the Hoosier capital.

Shorter Workday a Success.

The following from the Caxton Magazine, a prominent English printing trades magazine, is interesting just now:

In 1894 the hours of labor of about 43,000 workpeople in certain government factories and workshops were reduced to an average of forty-eight per week.

The war office establishments affected by the change were the Ordnance Factories, Ordnance Store Department, Inspection Department, Small Arms Inspection Department and Royal Army Clothing Department. The reduced hours affected 18,641 workpeople in 1894, whose working time was reduced five and three-fourths hours per week on the average. The bulk of the workpeople were employed at Woolwich.

A recent communication from the war office states that when the forty-eight-hour week was first adopted it was anticipated that there would be a saving of time in stopping and restarting work at the breakfast hour, work not beginning till after breakfast under the new system, and also a saving of light and fuel.

It was also expected that a later hour of starting work would insure greater regularity of attendance, that there would be an improvement in the physical condition of the men and an increase in their power of production.

The fact that the reduction in the hours of work had not reduced the output, or increased the cost of it, in private factories in which the experiment had been tried, also led the war office to assume that the cost of production would not be increased in their work shops.

IT IS STATED THAT THESE ANTICIPATIONS HAVE BEEN JUSTIFIED, AND THAT IT IS CLEAR THAT NO EXTRA COST HAS BEEN INCURRED BY THE PUBLIC ON ACCOUNT OF THE REDUCTION OF HOURS, NOR HAS THE OUTPUT OF WORK BEEN DIMINISHED. On the other hand, the majority of the workmen being on piece-work, THE AVERAGE WEEKLY EARNINGS PER MAN HAVE NOT BEEN SENSIBLY ALTERED, ALTHOUGH PIECE-WORK PRICES HAVE NOT BEEN INCREASED. The day-workers received an increased hourly rate of pay to make their earnings per week of forty-eight hours equal to those per week of fifty-four hours. IT WAS NOT FOUND NECESSARY TO INCREASE THE NUMBER OF DAY-WORKERS.

The admiralty establishments affected were H.M. Dockyards at home, the Royal Naval Ordnance Depots, and H.M. Victualling Yard. The number of workpeople involved in the change of hours in 1894 was 24,263, and the average reduction of working time was two and one-half hours per week.

A Good Word.

The August number of the official journal of the Piano, Organ and Musical Instrument Workers says:

The movement entered into by the International Typographical Union for the establishment of uniform working hours, the eight-hour day, all through the country, on January 1, 1906, has our fullest sympathy and moral support. Our local unions and district councils should appoint committees to wait on the firms doing their printing, and unless satisfactory assurance is given by these firms that they will enter, or have entered, into an agreement with the International Typographical Union, guaranteeing the eight-hour workday in their printing offices, the local unions and district councils should withdraw their patronage. Be particularly careful from now on that your printing bears the label of the International Typographical Union, and don't do any business with printing firms not entitled to same.

IF a union man tells a contractor he will not work with a non-union man, and if, as a result, the non-union man is discharged and is unable to secure employment on account of the attitude of the union toward him, the union is not liable for damages to the non-union man. This is the substance of a decision rendered in the superior court at Chicago recently by Judge Gary, when instructing a jury to find a verdict of not guilty in favor of Local No. 147 of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers, which organization had been sued by John P. Burgher, a non-union man, for $35,000 damages.

ST. PAUL Typographical Union No. 30 has made Secretary Wilson its business agent, and hereafter he will devote his entire time to the affairs of the union.

Please Help the Blind.

At last the secret's out! After a couple of years of apparently aimless, maudlin and hysterical indulgence in the luxury of newspaper space in placing his "Proclamations of Freedom" before the American public, Charles W. Post, of gripenuts fame, has emerged from cover. Lo, the mountain has labored and brought forth a mouse! The long tirades C. W. has inflicted upon the reading public have been nothing more nor less than a carefully concocted advertising scheme. In a quarter-page "Report to the People" Mr. Post now requests all readers to send him one dollar each. Fifty cents of the dollar is to be held by C. W. as an initiation fee to the Citizens' Industrial Association, and the other fifty cents pays for a year's subscription to Post's magazine, "The Square Deal." It is not stated whether the "Square Deal" is given you as a premium for joining the association or whether the membership is a premium given with the "Square Deal."

Union Shop vs. Non-Union Shop.

A writer in a recent issue of The Public sharply defines the so-called open shop as follows:

No term has come into vogue for establishments which exclude unionists from employment. The reason probably is that no employers make this exclusion. The issue they raise is between the "closed shop," which employs only unionists, and the "open shop," which employes unionists and non-unionists without discrimination. And the reason why employers, however inimical to labor organizations any of them may be, never insist upon excluding unionists for being unionists, is because freedom to employ non-unionists is, in present conditions, sufficiently destructive of unionism.

Both sides to the labor controversy realize that the issue of "closed shop" versus "open shop" practically involves the issue of union or no union. Consequently "open shop" or "closed shop" has become the issue over which workingmen's unions and employers' unions are struggling.

Without taking the space at this time to discuss the question of moral right or wrong, of freedom or coercion, of liberty or autocracy, which the issue of "open shop" versus "closed shop" involves, we invite an impartial comparison simply of the probable industrial results of either policy.

Much that is being said and written about the inherent right to work is for the most part pure hypocrisy, when not crass ignorance. Those who say it and write it are usually not worth arguing with, because in their hearts and heads they don't mean it. What they do mean is that non-unionists have an inherent natural right to work—when employers want to use them to break strikes.

The Farmers Organizing.

The following press dispatch should prove of interest to trade unionists:

Lawton, Okla., July 27.—Chiefly through the influence and assistance of J. Harvey Lynch, of this city, the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Association of America, in session for Oklahoma-Indian Territory division at Tishomingo last week, adopted a union label that must be placed on farm products and also a union card, both after the order of those used by the trades unions. This is in substance a union of the laboring and farming interests. Any question affecting the right of a member of either organization must be referred to a joint council of members from each organization. Mr. Lynch is secretary-treasurer of the Twin Territorial Federation of Labor and general organizer for the American Federation of Labor. He is a man of national prominence, and his influence in bringing about a union of interests like this in other states will be felt throughout the country.

Mention was made a short time ago by a JOURNAL correspondent of the organization work being done among the farmers of Texas. The farmer is fast coming to realize that his interests are linked with those of the wage worker of the city. We hope the farmers of the whole country will follow the lead of their progressive brothers in the south and join hands with the trade unions to better conditions for the workers.

The following is taken from the columns of The Printer, of September, 1859:

The first printing press in North America, as we learn from Coggeshall's Newspaper Record, was established at the City of Mexico about the year 1600. The first press "worked" in American colonies was "set up" at Cambridge, Mass., in 1629. The Rev. Jesse Glover procured this press by "contributions of friends of learning and religion" in Amsterdam and in England, but died on his passage to the new world. Stephen Day was the first printer. In honor of his pioneer position government gave him a grant of 300 acres of land.

Pennsylvania was the second colony to encourage printing. William Bradford came to Pennsylvania with William Penn in 1686 and established a printing press in Philadelphia. In 1692 Mr. Bradford was induced to establish a printing press in New York. He received forty pounds per annum and the privilege of printing on his own account. Previous to that time there had been no printing done in the province of New York. His first issue in New York was a proclamation bearing the date of 1692.

It was nearly a century after a printing press had been set up in New England before one would be tolerated in Virginia.

The southern colonists had no printing done among them till 1727.

There was a printing press

The first printing press established in the Northwest Territory was worked by William Maxwell, at Cincinnati, in 1793. The first printing executed west of the Mississippi was done at St. Louis in 1808, by Jacob Hinkle.

There had been a printing press in Kentucky, in 1786, and there was one in Tennessee in 1793; in Michigan in 1809; in Mississippi in 1810. Louisiana had a press immediately after her possession by the United States.

Printing was done in Canada before the separation of the American colonies from the mother country. Halifax had a press in 1751, and Quebec boasted of a printing office in 1764.

In 1725 there were five newspapers printed in the United States; in 1775 there were 34; in 1800 about 200; in 1825 about 600; in 1830 about 1,000; in 1840 about 1,400; in 1850 about 2,300. In 1860 there will be at least 5,000.

In accordance with a call issued by Reading (Pa.) Union No. 86, a conference of the eight-hour committees of all the typographical unions in the eastern district of Pennsylvania met in the city of Reading on August 20. Reports were made by the representatives of the different unions relative to the eight-hour situation in their jurisdictions, and these reports were distinctly optimistic. Stirring resolutions were adopted and a plan of campaign outlined. The following officers were elected: President, William Corless, of Scranton; vice-president, Fred A. Woerner, of Reading; secretary-treasurer, J. Albert Jones, of Easton; secretary, William J. Grouchy, of Reading. The conference then adjourned to meet in Lancaster on September 10.

Every little bit helps.

Law Breaking on the Other Side.

As some of the daily papers of the country seem to be a little disappointed over the fact that there is no violation of law on the printers' part in the eight-hour fight, thus depriving them of a "news" feature, The Journal calls their attention to the following press dispatch, sent out by the Associated Press from Winston, N. C. Of course they will all publish this:

GOES FOR PRINTERS, LANDS IN PRISON.

ROANOKE LABOR AGENT GETS INTO TROUBLE DOWN IN WINSTON, N. C.—FAILED TO PAY TAX.

(By Associated Press.)

WINSTON, N. C., Sept. 16.—W. L. Woodward, a labor agent from Roanoke, Va., was arrested here today on a warrant charging him with attempting to entice labor from this state, without paying the tax of $200 required.

Woodward was sent to Winston to employ printers to take the places of those now on strike at Roanoke.

Mr. Ellis Still Insists.

President Ellis, of the United Typothetæ of America, still insists that the book and job men do not want the shorter workday. In his address to the recent typothetæ convention, after recounting the enthusiastic manner in which the eight-hour demand had been reaffirmed at Toronto, he said:

> This statement, made first by the president, considered and reported by the eight-hour committee, and unanimously passed by the convention, would seem to settle emphatically the position of the International Typographical Union. That it does not reflect the views of a large number of the members of that union who are employed in the book and job branch, those of us who are familiar with the views of our employes are well aware.

The unanimity with which the book and job men quit work to secure the eight-hour workday in over one hundred cities should put Mr. Ellis to shame. His assertion that the book and job employes do not want eight hours may have impressed some of his hearers a few months ago, but it has certainly been refuted by recent events. And there was never any doubt on that score.

Don't forget that the products of the Washburn-Crosby Milling Company are still on the unfair list of the American Federation of Labor.

Some Funny Things You See.

American Industries, the organ of the National Association of Manufacturers, fills out a couple of short columns with the following "correspondence":

LEAVING GOVERNMENT EMPLOY TO SETTLE THINGS.

EDITOR AMERICAN INDUSTRIES—This week witnesses the convention of the typos, about forty of whom have gone from here, most of them holding a most agreeable situation under the government and under oath to support and serve it, going into the territory of a foreign government to settle the conditions under which those with private capital invested shall do business in the United States. You should protest against this action on the part of any government employe and demand that they stop intermeddling with private business

UNION POLITICS IN GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

EDITOR AMERICAN INDUSTRIES—A situation in the government printing office, as at present manipulated, is a reward of merit to the officious labor union holder-up. Investigation will show that three-fourths of the foremanships and a majority of the preferred situations are held by ex-delegates, ex-presidents, etc., either of the Washington local or some other one. There is in the office an ex-delegates' association having over 150 members.

Washington, August 1. "UNIONIST."

A Few Questions for Mr. Ellis.

The Progressive Printer, in the course of a leading editorial in this month's issue headed "Meeting the Crisis," pays attention to the oft repeated statement of President Ellis, of the United Typothetæ, that he is in favor of the eight-hour day but does not think the time propitious. Continuing, the Progressive Printer says:

Then on what plea does Mr. Ellis want to put it off? If it has got to come shortly why not let it come now? These are prosperous years, and the time in that sense is propitious. And now for a question to Mr. Ellis. What relation is it that you hope to establish between the employing printers and their customers a little later, which will make the eight-hour day a more acceptable proposition to them than it can be made now? If they will not stand for advanced prices now, what reason have you to suppose or know they will later? All contracts made now for work in process after January 1, 1906, could be made to take care of the increased per cent of expense that is claimed. Will it not be better to confer and compromise or even concede than to precipitate a general strike with its engendering of bitterness between employers and employes, its disappointment and cost to customers and loss to contending forces? And one of the greatest expense items would be the number of private printing plants started by large customers to do their own work. Is there really enough principle involved to prompt the sacrifice?

THE United Textile Workers of America have issued a letter addressed to the different bodies of organized labor of the country, thanking them for their assistance in the great Fall River strike.

A CIRCULAR letter has been issued by the American Federation of Labor officials, calling the attention of all unionists to the struggle between the Shirt Waist and Laundry Workers' International Union and the Shirt and Collar Manufacturers' Association, of Troy, N. Y. All contributions should be sent to John J. Manning, Box 11, Station 1, Troy, N. Y.

NON-UNIONISTS who are such as a matter of principle are few and far between. The non-unionist is generally outside the organization of his trade through ignorance, and nothing else. There are men, many of them occupying high places in the institutions of learning of the country, who are opposed to the aims and purposes of labor unions. But the non-union worker—the man who goes out on strikebreaking expeditions—is not of this class. He is actuated by no high and mighty ideas about the "sacred right to work," "individual liberty," etc. He has probably never given a thought to these things, and wouldn't recognize "individual liberty" if he were to meet it on the street. It is notorious that about the first thing a gang of strikebreakers does, when put to work, is to organize to obtain more money or better conditions. All this fine talk about the "independence" of the man who scabs comes from people who know very little about actual conditions in the industrial world. Do you think for an instant that the non-union man is responsible for any of these rantings about the "sacred right to work," "freedom and independence," etc.? Can you find a single article ever written by a non-unionist—an actual non-unionist, working outside the organization of his trade—in support of his position? Do you remember ever hearing a non-unionist successfully defend his attitude in an argument with a union man? You never will.

What We Are Doing

On September 7 President Lynch and Vice-President Hays, acting under instructions from the International eight-hour committee, and pursuant to the action of the Toronto convention, attended the convention of the United Typothetæ of America at Niagara Falls, and attempted to get a hearing on the eight-hour day proposition from the assembled employers. The members are by this time pretty well informed of the results of this attempt. The reception given President Lynch and Vice-President Hays was in striking contrast to the reception and hearing given President Ellis and Chairman Green, of the typothetæ, by our Toronto convention. Instead of being at once invited to address the convention, our representatives were allowed to meet the typothetæ's executive committee only, and were not informed that the convention had formally opened the way for a hearing until the typothetæ had acted negatively on the eight-hour proposition submitted by the union representatives.

The Niagara Falls convention of the United Typothetæ of America not only declined to consider the shorter workday, but resolved to go home and establish open shops and boycott the label.

Realizing that the plan of the typothetæ was to start trouble in different cities where they seemed to think they had a chance to win, the executive council of the International Typographical Union, acting in accordance with the action of the Toronto convention, at once notified a number of unions which were not bound by contracts to immediately demand the shorter workday, to take effect on the first of next January. Such instructions were wired to ten unions in Indiana, nineteen unions in Ohio, eighteen unions in Illinois, and nine unions in Michigan. These instructions were afterward sent to additional unions in various parts of the country where the local unions were not bound by contracts.

Without exception the various unions obeyed instructions, and presented eight-hour contracts to the book and job employers. Quite a number of unions had contracts expiring October 1, and these were instructed to present the shorter workday contracts at that time. As The Journal goes to press before that date, the members have probably been informed ere this, by bulletin, of the success attained.

On the day after the instructions were wired to the local unions eight-hour contracts began to arrive at International headquarters, and are being received constantly. A glance at the list of complete and partial victories given below will be enough to convince the most skeptical that we are winning. Some very remarkable victories have been achieved by a number of unions. In the city of Albany, N. Y., the men were called out of all the largest offices in the city, about 300 men being involved. In less than one week every member was back at work; every office in the city, including many members of the typothetæ, having signed the shorter workday contracts.

Racine (Wis.) Union not only achieved the shorter workday, but secured a 30 per cent increase in the book and job scale and a 40 per cent increase in the machine scale.

In Indianapolis, Ind., 102 men came out on the refusal of eight typothetæ offices to sign. All the independent shops, fifty in number, signed immediately. On the first day of the negotiations the Pratt company, a typothetæ shop, broke away from that organization and signed. After one week the Burford company, employing thirty-nine members, and the Sentinel Printing Company, employing eight members, withdrew from the typothetæ and signed. The head of the Sentinel company, W. S. Fish, was the president of the local typothetæ, and W. D. Pratt and W. B. Burford were the delegates from the local typothetæ to the Niagara Falls convention of that body. Fifteen of the locked-out men have been absorbed by the fair firms, leaving but twenty-six members at present on the strike roll. Work in the struck shops practically at a standstill, and early settlement looked for.

Almost as complete a victory as could be desired resulted in St. Louis. In that city all but eight offices, employing eighty-eight members, have agreed to the eight-hour day. Many of the firms agreeing to the eight-hour schedule were members of the typothetæ. Indications are that others will sign shortly.

It should be remembered that the strike in Chicago, Detroit and San Antonio was started by the typothetæ before the time President Lynch sent out the instructions of the executive council to the various unions. The lockout in these cities was started by the introduction of non-unionists in a number of offices.

Chicago has thus far obtained 241 contracts for the eight-hour day, covering 2,000 members of No. 16. Many of these firms were members of the typothetæ. Five hundred and fifty members are now out in twenty-three offices. No more non-unionists are being obtained, and those that are working in the struck offices are entirely incompetent, and, as President Wright says, "the rag-tag and bobtail of the International jurisdiction."

Detroit Union is standing like a stone wall. Not a single desertion has occurred in the seven weeks the strike has lasted. There are exactly forty-six non-unionists at work in Detroit in place of the 170 men on strike. These figures are absolutely correct, and are the result of a census taken by union sympathizers in the unfair shops. A break in the typothetæ ranks will come soon, as thousands of dollars' worth of work is being taken to the fair firms. No. 18 is making a gallant and winning fight.

In San Antonio, Texas, conditions are practically unchanged. Sixteen members of No. 172 and six offices are involved in the dispute. Our members are presenting a solid front and are determined to win.

Atlanta (Ga.) Union promptly answered the call of the executive council, and seventy-two members were called out of seven offices that refused to sign. Twelve shops signed at once. One day later the Franklin Printing Company, the largest establishment in the city, signed, and put forty-seven members back to work. Indications are that the other shops will sign in a short time.

The summary herewith presented shows the status of the struggle up to and including Wednesday, September 27. It must be remembered that the letters appearing in the correspondence columns were sent in before September 20, and are therefore hardly up to date. Great changes have taken place since the letters were received, and it is the effort of the editor of THE JOURNAL to give in the following brief summary the status of the eight-hour campaign in the cities that are in the front rank of the movement. Bulletins are being constantly sent out by the International eight-hour committee to officers, eight-hour committees and ex-delegates of local unions, in an endeavor to keep the membership informed of the progress of the fight.

Mr. Dooley on the Typothetæ.

(With apologies to Peter Finley Dunne.)

"Whut is all this talk of th' phrinter byes about th' tee-po-thee-te?" asked Mr. Fennessey as he blew the foam from a bowl and hitched his foot into its accustomed place on the rail. "Shure, don't ye know, Finnissey?" said Mr. Dooley, ringing up the nickle and putting the screen over the lunch. "Why, th' tee-po-thee-te is th' bosses' union." "Th' bosses' union!" said Mr. Fennessey, "an' do they have stroikes loike th' rist of th' union lads?" "Of course not," said Mr. Dooley, "but ye must remimber, Finnissey, they are young yet. Whin they are older ye can expict to see in th' papers headlines loike this: 'Fifty Bosses Walk Out and Refuse t' Boss Their Min,' or 'Carload of Bosses Arrives t' Take th' Place of th' Striking Employers,' or ye will foind ads in th' papers loike this: 'Wanted—Non-union bosses fer open shops. We pay th' bosses' scale.' Ah, those will be gr-rate toimes, Finnissey. Think of th' bosses' pickets in toime of stroikes. Imagine th' walkin' delegate of the bosses' amalgamated associashun jumpin' from his autymobile an' smashin' th' plug hat of some scab boss. And reflict, if ye can, Finnissey, for a moment on th' glorious spectacle ov th' bosses' union marchin' grandly down th' sthreet in th' La-abor day pa-rade. Wid their shiney silk hats, their gold-headed canes, their patent leather shoes an' their kid gloves. An' their banner inscribed: 'Local No. 711, Amalgamated Bosses' Union ov North Ameriky—Demand th' Union Car-rd Whin Hiring Iny Bossin' Done.'" "It sounds moighty nice," said Mr. Fennessey, "but d' ye think it will iver be a success?"

"Ov course not, Finnissey, but I'm not goin' t' let on. Let thim foind it out fer thimselves."

President's Paragraphs

RECENT HISTORY AND PRESENT WARFARE.

Well, the eight-hour battle is on, and to date we have done well. While we regret that there is to be warfare, we are in the contest to win, and win we will. Everything that it was possible to do to insure industrial peace was done—except to completely abandon our eight-hour demand, as the United Typothetæ insisted we should do. In order that the membership may understand eight-hour developments since the adjournment of the Toronto convention, a brief review is given herewith. It will be recalled that representatives of the United Typothetæ, including the president of that organization, were present at and addressed our Toronto convention, acting on invitation from the executive council. These representatives on entering and leaving the convention hall were enthusiastically applauded. The typothetæ president was attentively listened to, and he was accorded an ovation on conclusion. In a letter to the convention eight-hour committee, the typothetæ officers announced: "That the United Typothetæ of America will resist any attempt on the part of the International Typographical Union to reduce the present hours of labor." Notwithstanding this ultimatum, the convention adopted the following: "We believe that this convention should clothe the International eight-hour committee with power to negotiate with representatives of the United Typothetæ of America if opportunity for negotiation occurs prior to January 1, and we so recommend, in order that the declaration of the referendum, 'That we again declare our entire willingness to negotiate with the United Typothetæ of America for an agreement under which the eight-hour day will become operative, and so instruct our eight-hour committee,' may not be impaired. We further recommend that the executive council be empowered to protect unions, where the local or national typothetæ precipitate trouble, by requesting unions in contiguous territory to order strikes whenever the council may deem necessary for the protection of the unions involved."

AT THE TYPOTHETAE CONVENTION.

In accordance with the convention's instructions, and despite the absence of invitation from the United Typothetæ, the International eight-hour committee designated the president and vice-president to proceed to Niagara Falls, where, on September 6 and 7, the United Typothetæ of America met in annual convention. On September 7 these officers met the typothetæ executive committee. After conferring for some time, the executive committee informed the International Typographical Union representatives that the only proposition the committee would make or that the committee believed would be acceptable to the convention was for a three-year contract, based on a fifty-four-hour week and an open shop provision. As a counter proposition the International representatives submitted this: "That if the convention is in a receptive mood, that is, if the convention desires to approach the question with the intention of adjusting it so as to eventually reach the eight-hour day, we are here to negotiate on that basis." The word "eventually" was used advisedly, and only after full consideration. It was believed that the proposition allowed the widest field of choice to the typothetæ, and that it also showed beyond question that the International Typographical Union was willing to go to the limit in order to preserve industrial peace. The proposal was taken before the typothetæ convention, and its position is set forth in the following letter, handed to the International president by the chairman of the typothetæ executive committee:

CONVENTION UNITED TYPOTHETAE OF AMERICA.
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., September 7, 1905.

Messrs. Lynch and Hays, Representing the Eight-Hour Committee of the International Typographical Union:

GENTLEMEN—Concerning the following proposition, presented by you this morning: "That if the convention is in a receptive mood, that is, if the convention desires to approach the question with the intention of adjusting it so as to eventually reach the eight-hour day, we are here to negotiate on that basis."

The convention instructs the committee to inform you that it is unable to consider any agreement leading toward the eight-hour day.

Very truly yours,
WILLIAM GREEN,
Chairman.

After the above action was communicated to the International president, he was informed by the typothetæ chairman that the latter had been subjected to some criticism because the president had not been invited to address the convention. He was informed that an opportunity to address the convention, prior to its action, would have been taken advantage of. "It would have accomplished nothing," said the executive committee chairman.

AS VIEWED BY THE PROGRESSIVE PRINTER.

The Progressive Printer, which has all along advocated a peaceable adjustment of the eight-hour day, contains in its September number this review of the work of the typothetæ convention: "The three days' meeting of typothetæ printers at the Falls, September 5 to 7, inclusive, was a coming together for review and ratification. The past year had been a trial one under the reconstructed constitution pledging the organization, through the exercise of powers given the executive committee, to a platform which would place it in an independent relation to unions. There had been an anti-union and open shop spirit at work in the typothetæ for several years, being gradually strengthened until finally it assumed well rounded and formidable shape during the past year under the new constitution and the committee chosen to enforce it. The demand of the International Typographical Union for an eight-hour day the beginning of 1906 only anticipated the typothetæ inevitable a little and afforded a stepping stone to an action it was facing through its own policies. So the meeting at Niagara was merely a rehearsal of and adding to committees for the continuance of the drama begun long ago and now in its serious parts. Routine business was taken care of, there were some amendments proposed and passed and an election of officers, but what claimed the thought and action of the typothetæ, the things objective, were the anti-eight-hour day and the open shop movements with attending consequences. The stand of the typothetæ already taken against any further shortening of the workday and in favor of open shops was repeated in resolutions declaring for the open shop; the right to employ whomsoever they saw fit; freedom to buy and sell at will; uniform action in resisting encroachments on these rights; for fifty-four hours per week for day work; favoring a uniform contract with workmen; against private or local agreements and against the union label. President Lynch and Vice-President Hays, of the Typographical Union, were there to confer with the typothetæ on the issue, and presented their proposition for a conference, which was rejected in the following communication:

" 'Gentlemen—Concerning the following proposition presented by you this morning, that if the convention is in a receptive mood, that is, if the convention desires to approach the question with the intention of adjusting it so as to eventually reach the eight-hour day, we are here to negotiate on that basis.

" 'The convention instructs the committee to inform you that it is unable to consider any agreement leading toward the eight-hour day. Signed. Very truly yours, William Green, chairman.'

"SOMETHING WORTHY OF ITS AMBITION."

"It is difficult to see how the typothetæ reconciles this stand with the declaration of many of its members, some of them prominent, that the eight-hour day is coming, but they are opposed to its introduction now. 'Freedom to buy and sell at will' must be conceded to employers, but if there be any will to welcome the arrival of the shorter workday at any time, 'eventually reaching the eight-hour day' ought to be regarded a conciliatory measure. This action, with affairs at Chicago and Detroit as they have been for a time, precipitates the crisis, and a general strike seems inevitable now, instead of at the date fixed by the union, January 1, 1906, with all its attending misfortunes, distress and money loss to employers, workmen and customers. There were no entertainment features; all outings, sight seeings, and the banquet being only memories of halcyon days. The typothetæ has placed itself on the firing line absolutely, and it would seem now to have something worthy of its ambition, a real engagement. In point of attendance and interest in the proceedings the convention was all that could have been desired. Officers were elected as follows: President, George H. Ellis, Boston; vice-president, William Green, New York; secretary, John Macintyre, New York; treasurer, Thomas E. Donnelly, Chicago; executive committee, William Green, chairman, New York; A. R. Barnes, Chicago; I. H. Blanchard, New York; John E. Burke, Norfolk, Va.; J. S. Cushing, Norwood, Mass.; E. B. Woodward, St. Louis; Franklin Hudson, Kansas City; Wilson H. Lee, New Haven; C. W. Lloyd, Detroit; O. W. Miller Minneapolis; F. C. Nunemacher, Louisville; William Golder, Pittsburg; E. A. Kendrick, Buffalo; G. H. Buchanan, Philadelphia; F. I. Ellick, Dallas, Texas; W. V. Foote, Atlanta, Ga.; Fred Smith, Minneapolis; Samuel Rees, Omaha."

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL ACTS.

Immediately following the burning of its bridges by the United Typothetæ of America, the executive council met and canvassed the situation in all its phases. It was realized that those in control of the destinies of the typothetæ intended to maintain the hostile attitude first announced at the St. Louis convention of the United Typothetæ, held in June, 1905, and it was believed that the militant element in that society was spoiling for a fight, and intended to have one on some other issue if the eight-hour excuse did not suffice. Strikes had been invited by the typothetæ in San Antonio, Detroit and Chicago, and it was not deemed wise that these unions should longer bear the brunt of the eight-hour battle. Accordingly, all local unions, except where contracts were in effect, were on September 8 and 9 instructed by wire to immediately demand eight-hour agreements, effective January 1, 1906, and in each instance where refusal was met with our members to cease work. The order was complied with, and the results have been set forth in bulletins issued from this office. To date, 230 unions have obtained the eight-hour day, or agreements, providing for it on January 1, seventy of this number coming in since the first strike order was issued, September 8. The bulletins will be continued, and the membership, through them, will be kept fully informed. In another section of this issue the progress made is also exhaustively set forth.

THE SPIRIT OF THE NIAGARA FALLS GATHERING.

The Niagara Falls Cataract-Journal of September 7 had the following: "Secrecy marked the executive sessions of the United Typothetæ meeting in the Cataract Hotel today. The officers of the association had tightened their buckles, as it were, to meet the eight-hour law proposed to them by the International Typographical Union in Toronto some time ago, when there was a convention of the printers' representatives in the Canadian city. President Lynch and Vice-President Hays, of the International Typographical Union, and President Higgins, of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, attended a conference of the typothetæ today to discuss the question of an eight-hour day. The employing printers seemed determined to hold out against the movement instituted at the Toronto convention of the typos last month. Even on the street, when delegates of the typothetæ met today they greeted each other with 'Open shop, friend, open shop. Come and have an open drink with me from an open-faced bartender. Come.' Determination was written in their faces, as they firmly believed that should the hours of labor be reduced, and the pay remain the same, the cost of production would be considerably greater. The meetings of the typothetæ were all of an executive nature, and it was seen that no unauthorized person gained admittance, not excepting delegates who were not deemed sufficiently close-mouthed to keep a secret. The latter sought and found refuge in the large convention hall, where the committee on distribution of topics were holding a semi-open session." The Niagara Falls Gazette of September 8 added this testimony: "A 'fight to the finish' is the slogan of the employing printers. This stand was taken yesterday in reference to the attitude of the International Typographical Union on the eight-hour question. President Lynch and Vice-President Hays of the International Typographical Union were in the city yesterday. An invitation had been extended them to appear before the typothetæ and address the delegates on the eight-hour question. They did not appear before the convention for the reason that they received no formal invitation. They were, however, closeted with the members of the executive committee for a short time yesterday. Following the conference President Lynch informed the Gazette reporter that they had asked for a consideration of the eight-hour proposition, the members of the committee being asked if they would not stand for the eight-hour system at the present time, when would they stand for it. The executive committee absolutely refused to stand for eight hours at any time. Upon receiving this ultimatum President Lynch and Vice-President Hays retired from the conference." Both the Cataract-Journal and the Gazette were members of the United Typothetæ at the time the convention was in session, and it is fair to presume their quoted utterances are authoritative. Both papers are now fighting the eight-hour issue, and, as their appearance well demonstrates, are the product of non-unionists.

AS TO THE RIGHT OF PRIVATE CONTRACT.

The St. Louis Mirror has the following comment on the situation in St. Louis and generally: "The printers here have already practically won their strike for an eight-hour schedule in the job offices. They have had no trouble in their contention thus far. The employers have not had such support from the Citizens' Industrial Association as they had a right to expect. That association isn't much of a help to the employer in a strike of an organization of skilled tradesmen, like the printers, because the intelligent workman on strike doesn't make trouble and thus arouse against himself the law-respecting sentiment of the community. Then there is no great amount of labor outside of such a union as that of the printers to take the places of the men who quit work and thus foment disturbance. It can hardly be said that the local employing printers have put up any fight worth talking about. They have not even insisted upon disciplining those members of the typothetæ who have signed the articles of agreement. The working printers will gain their point here without any doubt, and when they have won it will be for the best interests of the employers as of the employed. Union printers will save us from the curse of vile, sloppy, but dear-at-any-price, generally 'bum' printing. The printers' union is a strong one, conservatively conducted, and it has not been beaten in a long time. Such unions are here to stay, and the employers can not reckon without them. They are as essentially part of the conditions of business as the organizations of employers, and their demands must be respected. As to the merit of the cause of the strike, it is only fair to say that eight hours make a long enough day for any man to work, and the right of contract to work longer is only a fiction. The right of contract is no right to the worker who can not enforce it, as the printers are doing. The man looking for work, outside of the union, has no right except to accept the employers' terms. This printers' strike is a fair strike. It is right in the printers to enforce their demand when they have the power to do so, since that is what the typothetæ would do had they the power. A strike for short hours is as legitimate as a strike for better pay, since, in effect, that is what such a strike amounts to."

NOTES.

The fourth assistant postmaster general has made public a communication to his department, which states that fifty weekly and semi-weekly papers in towns and cities of Iowa are to be made dailies, backed by an organization of capitalists. Two pages of the papers are to be printed at one central place and distributed to the towns, where the remaining two pages will be filled with the local news. The plan, it is declared, has been made feasible through the greater demand for dailies by rural residents whose mail is now delivered daily through the rural free delivery service.

The secretary of the citizens' industrial association says: "We have a monthly magazine entitled The Square Deal. It is devoted to a defense of our principles. While we are fighting the closed shop we are not opposing labor unions. We believe in the open shop, which means every man should have a right to work. We are as much opposed to the closed market or any combination of employers restricting competition as to the closed shop." Now, what d'ye think of that!

Reports continue to show eight-hour gains throughout the jurisdiction, and not a single loss. Several thousand members have secured the eight-hour day under contracts negotiated without difficulty. At least 1,000 members, previously on strike, have returned to work under eight-hour contracts. About 2,000 members are now out in jurisdictions where partial settlements have been made.

Every union that has made a demand for the eight-hour day has succeeded in securing contracts with some offices, and these contracts are not confined to small offices by any means.

The only way defeat can come to us now, is through defections from our ranks, and the strike thus far demonstrates that

The loyalty of our members is beyond question.

Woman's Department

WOMAN'S INTERNATIONAL AUXILIARY.

President—Mrs. Ed D. Donnell, 906 West Eighth street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Secretary—Mrs. C. E. McKee, 430 East Vermont street, Indianapolis, Ind.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

The third annual convention of the Woman's International Auxiliary to Typographical Union is now but a pleasant memory, and before this issue of THE JOURNAL is published a full report of the proceedings will be in the hands of each member of every local auxiliary under the jurisdiction of the International auxiliary. The question of furnishing the delegates alone with the report, or have enough printed for the entire membership, was left to the discretion of the retiring secretary, and as we found the cost to be very little more, we decided that each member should have a copy to read and digest at her leisure. There is, therefore, no reason to rehash a detailed convention report in THE JOURNAL.

As to the social features, the Toronto convention certainly excelled any effort of the kind since the formation of our International organization.

Typographical Union No. 91 and Auxiliary No. 42 worked together so harmoniously that there was not a hitch in the program during the entire week, and delegates and visitors alike were sorry when the time came to think of going home. The week was simply perfect.

In point of numbers the Toronto convention was the largest ever held, there being twenty-three auxiliaries represented. All the International officers were present except Mrs. H. H. Eads, second vice-president, and Mrs. Fred Ihringer, guide. Mrs. Arthur Cooper, of Toronto, was appointed by the president and acted as guide during the week.

The most important question that came before the convention was the per capita tax, and after discussion from every conceivable standpoint the convention finally declared for 20 cents per quarter (80 cents a year) and no assessment.

Another important by-law enacted at Toronto was the future election of International officers by referendum. The election will take place the second Tuesday in May.

It was also decided to elect delegates and alternates to the International convention at the same time. Full instructions as to the manner of holding such election will be sent the various auxiliaries in due time.

Another by-law that caused considerable discussion was the eligibility of candidates for delegates. The law remains unchanged and reads as follows:

Sec. 3. No member of a subordinate auxiliary shall be eligible to election as a delegate unless she has been a member of said auxiliary for at least six (6) months and is in good standing; but this shall not exclude delegates of an auxiliary organized within a less period than six (6) months just prior to any convention.

Sec. 4. No member of a subordinate auxiliary shall be eligible to election as a delegate unless she has attended at least three-fourths (¾) of its meetings during the year.

In order that there be no mistakes as to the carrying out of the provisions of this by-law in the future, it will be necessary for local secretaries to keep a book containing a list of their members, and that the roll be called at each meeting.

The by-laws governing the International organization have been enacted at the different conventions as experience and the necessity for them has prompted, and the president will not shirk the responsibility of upholding such laws or making prompt decisions when the necessity requires.

One of the most pleasant and profitable days of the convention was that of Wednesday, August 16. At the suggestion of Mrs. Kennedy those delegates who desired made short talks on the manner in which their auxiliaries were conducted, the various schemes for creating interest in the work, the different plans for making money for running expenses, etc. A short synopsis of this meeting is given in the auxiliary report, and we feel sure that the exchange of ideas and suggestions made for future work will be productive of much good.

At the time of writing this letter for THE JOURNAL the printers in many of our cities, Cincinnati being one of them, are out on strike to enforce the recognition of the eight-hour day by the employing printers. We desire to suggest to the various auxiliaries that they do not wait to be asked to assist in this effort for a shorter workday. We feel sure that every local auxiliary is willing to do everything in its power to help make this commendable fight a grand success. If you are not already at work, offer your assistance to your local typographical union at once.

We desire to urge upon the secretaries of local auxiliaries that they be prompt with their quarterly remittances and reports to the International secretary-treasurer. Do not fail to report each quarter the new members added, those dropped for any reason, and those transferred to other auxiliaries. It is absolutely necessary that the quarterly report be full and complete in order that the books be kept straight. In taking up the work our newly elected secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Charles McKee, will have her hands full until she has time to get the run of things, and we bespeak for her the same kindness and consideration that was shown us during the three years that we held that office.

In assuming the office of president of the Woman's International Auxiliary to Typographical Union, we take this opportunity of extending our thanks to the delegates composing the Toronto convention for the honor conferred. During the next year it will be our earnest endeavor to advance the interests of the auxiliary in every way possible, but we thoroughly appreciate that, without the hearty co-operation of the local auxiliaries, any efforts that we may make will be without avail.

It is highly probable that some of our members know printers in towns where there is a typographical union and no auxiliary. If you do, write his wife at once and urge her to start the formation of an auxiliary. Set the ball a-rolling and write us what you have done. Together we may accomplish wonders.

The International officers elected at Toronto for the ensuing year are: President, Mrs. Ed D. Donnell, Cincinnati, Ohio; vice-president, Mrs. D. McDougall, Toronto, Canada; second vice-president, Mrs. H. W. Smith, Lincoln, Neb.; third vice-president, Mrs. J. D. Kane, Louisville, Ky.; fourth vice-president, Mrs. A. Aul, Nashville, Tenn.; chaplain, Mrs. A. W. Bowen, Washington, D. C.; guide, Mrs. J. P. Stanton, Syracuse, N. Y.; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. Charles E. McKee, Indianapolis, Ind.

It is with much pride and pleasure that we are able to reproduce here the following resolutions introduced by Delegate Miss Ida Gray, of Aurora, Ind., and Delegate Smith, of Lincoln, Neb., at the Toronto typographical convention. When we look back to the Cincinnati convention in 1902, and remember the hard work necessary to obtain a bare recognition by the printers at that time, and compare it with the unanimous endorsement which comes to our organization unsolicited in three short years thereafter, the work we have accomplished seems to us to have not been in vain. The resolutions follow:

By Delegate Gray, of Aurora:

Whereas, Experience has demonstrated that the Woman's Auxiliary is a helpful adjunct to the International Typographical Union; and,

Whereas, The officers and members of some of the local unions have discouraged the organization of woman's auxiliaries; therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the International Typographical Union that officers and members of all local unions should aid and encourage the organization of women's auxiliaries.

By Delegate Smith, of Lincoln:

To the Woman's International Auxiliary, in Convention Assembled:

Ladies—The International Typographical Union, in convention assembled, unanimously passed the following:

Whereas, The International Typographical Union recognizes the noble work for the cause of unionism which has been accomplished by the Woman's International Auxiliary, and desires to express its appreciation of all that the auxiliary has done in forwarding the interests of union labor, and, desiring to assure the auxiliary of our hearty support of the movement in which it is engaged, be it

Resolved, That the International Typographical Union extends to the Woman's International Auxiliary fraternal greeting and best wishes for its continued growth and development and power to do good; and be it further

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the chair to convey these greetings to the auxiliary convention.

We desire to again call the attention of unions forming auxiliaries to the membership clause in our by-laws. Only the wives, mothers, unmarried daughters, unmarried sisters of members of the typographical union and women members of typographical unions are eligible for membership in any auxiliary under the jurisdiction of the Woman's International Auxiliary to typographical union. A little care in making up your membership will obviate future embarrassment.

Mrs. Ed D. Donnell.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Through stress of circumstances our August letter was delayed until too late for publication; but we are glad to be able to report flourishing conditions. At the August meeting two members were obligated, and we have six more ready to come in at the next meeting, at which time we elect our officers for the ensuing year. The retiring officers feel encouraged by the work done in the last year, and we are hoping to accomplish more in the coming year.

We are sorry to state that we are in the midst of a strike, but hope it will not last long. The auxiliary is in sympathy with the men, and stands ready to assist in any way it can to bring about a desirable settlement of the trouble.

We are proud of the fact that one of our members, Mrs. Charles E. McKee, was elected international secretary-treasurer at the convention in Toronto, and a reception was given in her honor at the home of our president, Mrs. E. J. Heaton. The affair was thoroughly enjoyed by the large number who attended.

Mrs. Frank Glover Heaton.

TORONTO, CANADA.

We had no "Toronto letter" in the last number of The Typographical Journal owing to the great events happening here during the month of August, all our efforts being put forth to prepare for the host of delegates and visitors coming to attend the great convention in this queen city of Canada.

The reception committee organized its plan for entertainment, and on Saturday, August 12, when the first of the delegates arrived, there were deputations from various parts of the continent.

The Rossin House was made the headquarters of the woman's auxiliary, as well as of the convention proper. Saturday evening there was a reception at the hotel, and this function put every person on terms of acquaintance with her neighbor by the exchanging of cards.

It being the first convention I had the pleasure of attending. I did not realize the importance of the meeting until all the social functions were over and I sat down and observed the names of so many whom I had met and may never meet again. For a moment I was sad, but, on the other hand, when I think what a delightful time we had it encourages me, for if I do not reach Colorado some of our ladies will, and we can hear from them about the Colorado Springs convention; and during that week of pleasant occurrences we ladies at home can picture from the pretty souvenir we received from the Colorado Springs representatives what a grand time they are having.

Sunday there was a band concert at Hanlan's Point, luncheon at Island Park, and back again to the Point in the evening for the concert. That day I had the pleasure of being told by one of our American delegates that she thought we should be called the "Banner Auxiliary." This was very encouraging, and particularly so as it was the first convention that the Toronto Woman's Auxiliary had endeavored to assist. We are now resting on our oars—tired, yes, but glad to think that the members of No. 42 were able in some little way to make pleasant the stay in our city of our members. For any exertion we put forth we have been amply repaid by the gratitude and good will of our visiting friends.

Perhaps the quiet meeting of old friends brought together by these annual gatherings is as enjoyable to the older members as any of the lavish entertainments provided by committees on occasions of this kind.

Certainly the visits made to the various newspaper offices were enjoyed; the Mail and Empire and the Globe especially made their visitors welcome. The front of the Globe building was a blaze of light with its "Welcome to the I. T. U." electric sign.

At our last meeting the principal feature was the presentation made to our late vice-president, Mrs. J. J. Hunter, whose services and presence will be missed. The presentation was in the form of a framed photo of the auxiliary. The recipient very feelingly replied, and said that although leaving us, she would still retain her membership in No. 42.

MRS. M. J. O'GRADY.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Dear friends all over the United States and Canada, I am aware that No. 6 has not been heard from for some time in these columns, but we are alive just the same. When I received the current JOURNAL and read the report of the Toronto convention my enthusiasm burst out anew, and I was wont to exclaim:

Hurrah for the Teacher!
Hurrah for the Lamb!
Hurrah for the Little Girl
Who didn't give a ———!
Hurrah! Colorado Springs 1906!
Ach, Du lieber!

Of course this little song (which was written and sung by our esteemed friend "Snyder the Indian," of Colorado Springs) will not be appreciated by any but those who had the pleasure of seeing his kindly face and hearing his melodious voice. We will meet him in Colorado Springs next year if we have to walk eight hours a day till we get there. How very much I wish that every printer belonging to the International Typographical Union could attend a convention like the one in Toronto. If the wives of all union printers could go and see how a convention is conducted, they would respect it more than ever. It is impossible to describe the lovely entertainment we had all along the road. We started in with Chicago, which numbers among its vast population 3,300 union printers. The Chicago entertainment was under the auspices of the Ex-Delegates Association. To those who know the exes of Chicago this is enough said. Everything was complete; nothing was left undone to make things pleasant for us.

No use trying to mention the names of all the charming Chicago delegation who treated us so lovely. But there are a few we never can forget; we will see and hear them in our dreams.

I really thought Chicago had reached the limit, but, O my! when we reached Detroit more elegance awaited us. Beautiful flowers and badges were pinned on us the minute we stepped off the train. The ladies were very much in evidence. Mrs. J. J. McLogan was evidently the leader, for she was with us all the rest of the trip. We were entertained all day, and the ladies finished up with an elegant dinner at the Griswold House for ladies alone. I will confess that as a rule I do not enjoy "hen parties," but this was an exception. Everything was elegant, and the ladies having it in charge seemed as interested as though it were in their own homes. We will not soon forget the Detroit ladies who treated us so nicely.

Our next stop was Niagara Falls. The fact is, I thought we had just about all there was in the world, but when we reached the Falls we met another delegation from the east and south. Dear, familiar faces, how welcome they were, every one. It seems to me I have known them always. Every time we turned around we met new and interesting friends. Of course everybody who has never seen the falls has read of them, but they can not be described as beautiful as they are. By this time we had about as jolly an aggregation as ever rode over the gorge route. We landed in Toronto just on time, and behold a band met us at the wharf, and from that time till we left the beautiful city not a moment was lost. We were kept busy with, first, business, then pleasure interspersed in such a complete manner that we tired of neither. The fact is, my only sorrow was that I could not attend both conventions at once. I tried my best. I was interested in both, and every time I left one meeting to go to the other I would miss something I was most anxious to hear. One thing I did not miss, and that was the speech of President Ellis, of the United Typothetæ, concerning the eight-hour proposition. His presence at our convention gave all an opportunity to compare him with our president. I believe I voice the sentiments of every person present when I say that our president did not suffer by comparison. Somehow I was a little disappointed in the talk made by President Ellis. There was no argument, no reason, no Christian feeling in anything he said. It was simply "We want you to work nine hours and intend that you shall. If you can help yourselves let's see you do so." A more intelligent looking lot of men than our Toronto delegates would be hard to find. The ladies representing the auxiliary, being a part of the same family, bore inspection equally well. One word in regard to our entertainment while in Toronto. The fact is, it can never be beaten, and I do not think ever equaled. Mr. Chinn and Mr. Edworthy can not be beaten as entertainers. Mr. Stevenson was the right man in the right place. Then handsome Mr. Robson, he certainly did his part most graciously. The ladies of Toronto, as well as Hamilton, certainly did great work. Mrs. McDougall was everything that cou'd be asked. She was every place all the time. Every auxiliary woman seemed to try her best, and we surely appreciated their efforts. I said before I had one sorrow, and that was not being able to be at both conventions at once. Well, I have one more, and that is that every lady who runs for office can not be elected.

Some have to be beaten, and it always makes me feel badly. However, I am glad I was not the president and did not have to cast the deciding vote. I am sure I should have cried, for I like them all, and every one was competent to fill the position for which she aspired. Hoping I may again see every person I have met at the four previous conventions, I am yours truly,

MRS. F. O. MARTIN.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

No. 29 gave a euchre at Delmar garden September 7. It was a social and financial success.

Many of our members attended No. 8's picnic on Labor day at Normandy grove, and enjoyed the event.

The many St. Louis ladies who attended the Toronto convention have not finished telling their friends how finely the Canadians entertain.

The proceedings of the auxiliary convention have arrived and are being carefully digested.

The precipitation of the eight-hour fight at this time suggests that our auxiliaries should get down to practical work in pushing the label. Co-operate with your local union's committees. Women spending union-made money should spend it for union-made goods.

The local allied printing trades council has label literature. Get some of it and give to your dealers.

You can help the eight-hour cause by demanding the label on your purchases and asking your dealer to have our label placed on his printing.

MRS. J. J. DIRKS.

CHICAGO, ILL.

Well, it is all over and every one is home again telling most wonderful stories of the "greatest convention we ever had." No. 41 wishes to thank its younger sister, No. 42, also Typographical Union No. 91, for the delightful entertainment given our delegate, Mrs. Atkinson, and can only promise that when it comes our time—watch us.

I deeply regret the murmurs that I read and hear with regard to the delay in delivering the printed minutes of our convention. I fear we do not take into consideration the trouble our little woman had with the "pied" up notes that were turned over to her by the stenographer, and the exercise of a little patience will perhaps give some of our brain cells long in disuse a little action. This is tardy advice, however, because the aforesaid minutes are being delivered every hour—no pun intended.

Ah, Mrs. Kennedy, the honor of being president of the auxiliary for three years may not come to another member in our lifetime. For this and many gracious and kindly acts we shall remember you. To Mrs. Donnell, we greet you. We are so glad you have charge of our kicking department. The writer was presented with the souvenir issued by Toronto union. It is beautiful.

At the meeting of No. 41 September 8 the election of officers for the second year occurred. All the officers of the previous year were re-elected, with the exception of the vice-president, Mrs. Morris Gritzmacher, who declined. Our officers now are: Mrs. Charles E. Winter, president; Mrs. Harry Atkinson, vice-president; Mrs. Thomas McEvoy, treasurer; Mrs. Gilbert R. Jones, recording and financial secretary, and Mrs. Charles Gard, Mrs. Walter Bell, Mrs. Charles Colman, executive board. The reception given by our president was a great success, Dr. and Mrs. Winter and daughters playing to a packed house.

Public installation of officers September 22d, and a card party and lawn fete—if possible—September 25 at the home of Mrs. Feeney. So begins our second year. Looks good, doesn't it?

I trust the strike sits as lightly elsewhere as here. Nothing but victory in sight. I wish every one could read the excellent letter by George Knott on the printers' strike, published in the Daily News of September 18.

If you only knew what we have up our sleeve for Colorado Springs. MRS. GILBERT R. JONES.

OMAHA, NEB.

As I have been appointed official correspondent to THE JOURNAL for the next three months, I will start out by congratulating our International Auxiliary on entering the fourth year of its existence, and wish it all the success in the future that has attended it in the past. I also wish to congratulate Mrs. Donnell and the other International officers on their election, and I am sure they will do their utmost to bring about that success. Ahamo Auxiliary is still in the front ranks as far as enthusiasm is concerned. In spite of bad weather, our last two meetings have been well attended. The first meeting in September was held at the home of Mrs. H. Rowley on Clifton Hill. A verbal report of the convention proceedings was given by our delegate, as the official report had not then been received. She gave us a very full and interesting account of each day's work, and said that words were inadequate to express the elegant entertainment furnished the delegates and visitors. Then followed the social hour, which brought forth talent hitherto unknown in some of our ladies, and all felt well repaid for attending. On Wednesday evening, September 13, the auxiliary, men, women and children (they were all members that night), met at the home of our secretary, and from there marched in a body to Mrs. Kennedy's and demanded admittance. She herself opened the door, and to say she was surprised is putting it mildly. She was simply knocked speechless, and any one that knows Mrs. Kennedy knows it takes a big blow to do that. Well, we marched in without invitation and took possession. A social hour or two was first spent and then Mrs. Kennedy was asked to step forward, and our worthy president, Mrs. Bert Cox, in a very delightful way, presented her with a beautiful cut-glass water pitcher as a token of appreciation of her work done in the auxiliary, but especially in honor of her three years' work as International president. Mrs. Kennedy, who had by this time somewhat recovered her power of speech, although still shaky, very gracefully thanked the ladies for their gift, and assured them that her zeal would in no way be diminished in the future. The sight of the pitcher immediately caused some of our jovial printers to burst into song, and for a few minutes the effect was real. Then coffee was made, baskets opened and lunch served by the ladies in charge, and the fun waxed fast and furious. By this time the hands of the clock were creeping toward the "wee short hours ayant the twal," and visions of time being called in the morning made a reluctant crowd don hats and say "Good night," after voting the evening an entire success. Mrs. Kennedy will never again believe thirteen an unlucky number. Our meeting today was held with Mrs. Boyer, of Council Bluffs. Amid a pouring rain the ladies boarded the car and arrived wet but happy. The most important part of our meeting was the reading of the official report of the convention by our delegate. She expressed dissatisfaction that it was not as full and complete as she had expected, as some things had been left out. On motion the secretary was instructed to communicate with the International secretary on these matters. The auxiliary also entered their protest against the increase in the per capita tax, which was voted on at last convention. I, for one, can not see the necessity of additional taxation with a surplus of over $300 in the treasury after all expenses had been paid, and in view of the fact that the eight-hour struggle is upon us, it will be a hardship for most of the auxiliaries to meet their tax. I hope that this matter will be reconsidered by the referendum vote. A committee was appointed to wait on the union and express the willingness of the auxiliary to aid them in every way possible in the coming struggle. A visiting committee was appointed to call on all printers' wives who are not in touch with the auxiliary and try to interest them in the work. Refreshments were then served, and as it was nearly supper time the ladies started for home shivering in the grip of a frost by the weather man, but no ways chilled or dampened in ardor. During the last year the meetings have been most harmonious and enjoyable, and those who are unable to attend feel that they have missed something, and they have.

MRS. D. G. CRAIGHEAD.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Just a few lines to explain a little matter about the proceedings of our late convention. I do not want to be considered in the "kicker" club class, and I would not say a word that would hurt the feelings of any of our delegates, but I am a stickler for that which is right, as I believe everybody who knows me is aware. The proceedings sent out by our secretary-treasurer reached us about a month after the convention adjourned, which I am informed was no fault of my good sister Donnell, but owing to so much work in the printing trade in Cincinnati. Of course this can be overlooked, as we are all glad to hear of plenty of work for the wage-earner. There are a few items that appear in the proceedings that are not just as they should be, but only one that I wish to refer to, as I am directly interested—the matter of referendum. Of course all the delegates remember it, and I was told by several that they were glad I had brought such an amendment to the convention. It does not appear in the proceedings, and I therefore reproduce it here. I notice, however, on page 21 of the proceedings the following: "On motion of Mrs. Ogden, of Cincinnati, seconded by Mrs. Kane, it was decided that future elections should be by referendum. Carried unanimously."

The following should have appeared, as introduced by myself and passed unanimously, instead of the above quotation:

AMENDMENTS—REFERENDUM.

Sec. 1. All amendments that are favorably acted upon by the Woman's International Auxiliary shall be referred to the local auxiliaries. Within two months after the adjournment of the international convention the secretary-treasurer shall furnish a copy of the amendments to each local auxiliary, which, after being discussed by the local auxiliaries, shall be voted upon at a date to be named by the president and secretary-treasurer, and the result of the vote shall be forwarded within ten days thereafter to the secretary-treasurer; and should a majority of the votes cast be in favor of said amendments they shall become a law and go into effect on the first day of the month following the announcement of the result by the secretary-treasurer.

By kindly giving space to the above you will confer a favor on, yours fraternally,

MRS. A. W. BOWEN.

LINCOLN, NEB.

As delegate from Capital Auxiliary No. 11 I must testify to a "good time" at the convention at Toronto. The "Torontonians" certainly did themselves exceedingly proud in the manner in which they entertained the delegates and visitors.

Toronto of all places is the place to go to have an all-round good time. I shall never forget the many kindnesses of the auxiliary ladies and their friends who so delightfully entertained us in their home city. I hope to meet many of them next year at Colorado Springs.

No. 11 held a reception Friday evening, August 25, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Moore for the returned delegates. The house was beautifully decorated in yellow and white, the auxiliary colors, and excellent music was furnished by Reed's orchestra. Fred Ihringer, ex-delegate (Washington), acted as chairman in his usual pleasant manner, and asked me, as the lady delegate, to speak first. I gave an outline of the convention, its social features, etc., and told as nearly as possible the delightful way in which the Toronto Auxiliary looked after the wants and pleasures of the ladies present. The delegates from No. 209, F. M. Coffey and H. W. Smith, and W. M. Maupin, who was a visitor to the convention, gave talks of the trip to Toronto, but space will not permit me to tell the many nice things they said of the city and the entertainment committee who so carefully looked after them. The committee in charge of the reception was composed of Mrs. Fred Ihringer, Mrs. W. E. Moore and Mrs. Bert Wilson.

The young ladies of No. 11 will give a play in the near future for the benefit of the auxiliary.

No. 11 held its regular monthly social at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Bowers. "A country store" succeeded in amusing those present, while the row of "nigger babies," arranged by the ladies to be thrown at, created diversion and merriment. A grab bag created fun for the younger people. It was one of the best of our many socials.

No. 11 is highly pleased at the work accomplished at the convention. We greet the International officers, and desire to extend to them our best wishes for a successful administration.

MRS. HARRY W. SMITH.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mountain City Auxiliary met the first Thursday in September, and it was an enthusiastic meeting. All were anxious to hear what the ladies had to say about the convention, and after hearing all the report, I could only think how fortunate they were to be there. The report was a very pleasing one to No. 21, and we feel that much good was accomplished.

Plans were laid for a rummage sale the last of October. This is a feast for the ladies, as there is nothing they enjoy more, unless it is another rummage sale. Every member can take part in this by saving all their old clothes and getting all the old duds their friends and neighbors have.

The next meeting will be with Mrs. G. D. Groaner at her home on East Fourth street.

MRS. OZA BLODGETT.

SEATTLE, WASH.

Seattle Auxiliary No. 23 still keeps aloft, and with our present efficient officers always ready with words of cheer and encouragement, seeming to make one's duties lighter, we surely ought to grow and work as arduously as the few faithful ones. Some of our members have been out of town for the summer months, so, of course, this naturally affects the attendance at our meetings to some extent. The third Thursday of each month a sewing social is held at the home of one of the members to do preparatory work for a bazaar to be held at the holiday season. The ladies hope to realize quite a snug sum from the articles placed on sale at the time specified.

Our printers helped to swell the ranks of the Labor day parade, which was made up of all the unions in the city. Several automobiles were in line carrying the ladies of the label league, the waitresses' union and the garment workers. The day was an ideal one; "Old Sol" peeped out in all his glory, as if to say, "Welcome trade unionists, and make merry," which they proceeded to do later on. Immediately following the parade the new labor temple was dedicated with all honor. Dr. Matthews made the dedication speech, which was vociferously applauded, and seemed to meet the approbation of the immense throng. The temple was thrown open for inspection and a good time generally. A delicious luncheon was served at a nominal cost, Auxiliary No. 23, donating thirty-five of the cakes. And in the evening a grand ball wound up the festivities of the day, dancing being carried on in three halls to accommodate the crowd. It is estimated that between 8,000 and 10,000 people visited Seattle's new labor temple.

PLAYING A BUNCO GAME.

Printers and Makeup Men—Wanted, at once, with a guarantee of steady and permanent employment, competent men to fill the following positions in our respective offices: One linotype machinist at $25 per week; five linoytpe operators at $18 per week; two makeup men at $18 per week; five admen at $15 per week; eight first-class job compositors at $15 to $18 per week. Newspaper men, forty-eight hours per week; jobmen, fifty-four hours per week. Apply with references, The Cataract Journal Company and the Niagara Falls Gazette Publishing Company, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Guarantee—The employers' association of Niagara Falls will pay a bonus of $10 per week for thirteen weeks to each and every man employed by the above firms and remaining with them for a period of not less than three months from date of accepting employment. (Signed) A. H. G. Hardwick, Secretary, The Employers' Association, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

The Syracuse Herald of September 19 contained the above classified advertisement under the heading of "Help Wanted—Male," which shows that the printers of Niagara Falls are not only up against the local employers, but that they have to fight the employers' association as well.

The wages offered are the same as prevailed before the strike, and there is a bonus offered to strikebreakers of $10 a week for thirteen weeks, provided (and here is where a joker appears) they remain with the offices for three months. It would be picking up money to get a force together by this bonus, as very few would remain three months, and if they did remain it would be easy to get rid of them just before the expiration of the three months, on one pretext or another. It is an old game and will catch but few.

The bait held out to induce printers to become strikebreakers may look tempting at a distance, but it is nothing more than a delusion and a snare, and those that bite at it will have their trouble for their pains, and had better practice walking in their spare moments, for the contest will be won by the union in Niagara Falls, as well as in every other city involved, and those who betrayed their manhood will have to "hit the pike" with nothing but sad reflections for consolation.

The employers' association, in supporting the employing printers, has shown that it is trying to disrupt all organized labor in the Cataract City, and should be taught a lesson by the members of all the unions there.

DECLINED WITH THANKS.

The American editor uses some variation of the formula, "Declined with thanks." The French editor's phrase is "Impossible—mille regrets." What does the Chinese editor say about the MS. he is returning?

"We have read it with infinite delight. By the holy ashes of our ancestors we swear that we have never seen so superb a masterpiece. His majesty, the emperor, our exalted master, if we were to print it, would command us to take it as a model and never publish anything of a less striking quality. As we could not obey this order more than once in ten thousand years, we are compelled to send back your divine manuscript, and beg a thousand pardons."—The Boston Transcript.

CHICAGO, ILL.

Hail, hail, the gang's all here;
What the h—l do we care?

It was ever present; every one sang it; the band on the boat played it, under the leadership of the delegate who kept his hand tied in a sling so he could not take a drink; on the street cars, in the hotel corridors, at the convention hall, it was continually ringing in one's ears, and the ladies joined in with a vim and debonnaire decisiveness that plainly indicated "What the h—l do we care?"

The Chicago contingent thoroughly enjoyed the trip from start to finish. Charley Duwenick missed the train, and the gang tried, convicted and sentenced him without a hearing, as a penalty for having in his possession a part of Reed's donation, which was a source of delirious chilblains, as Billy Klinger testified when he put the left and right shoe on the right and left foot and then accused Rusty Carroll of confiscating his footwear because they did not seem to fit. Harry Lawrence and Colonel Reilly, of Texas, did the honors, and they were peaches in the entertaining line. Soon after daybreak Tim O'Brien broke into the day coach and told a story about the automobile ride the day before in Chicago, where one of the party pointed out the Chicago University to a visitor, who innocently remarked: "Well, wouldn't that Rockafeller?" To which another one of the party replied: "Oh! I don't know—it's not up to standard."

Detroit printers can hang the machine in the entertaining line. From the breakfast at the hotel to the evening at the club was a continuous circle of hilarity, notwithstanding the news imparted to the visitors that 175 men had been locked out by the typothetæ that morning. The pup from Milwaukee was the cause of a succession of bumps to its owners that must have been exasperating to them, but created much amusement for the rest of the party. "Toronto," as he was called, had to get off the boat, however, and so the much abused dog missed the ride to the island, and the visit to the aquarium and horticultural building. The aquarium is a magnificent structure, and the exhibit of the finny tribe, both fresh and salt water, is enough to make an angler's fingers tingle. The lunch in the pavilion, the car ride up Woodward avenue to the log cabin, and the entertainment in the club rooms in the evening were of such excellent character as not soon to be forgotten. Stanley Kline, formerly of Chicago, was on hand with his smiling front. "Port Huron" Kessell, who formerly worked on the Herald, contributed his best as an entertainer, while Joe Jessup dropped down from the Springs to enjoy the day, and Gene Flynn, with his celebrated "who the h—l wants to be a camel" badge, bobbed up with his habitual smile from a camp nearby to incidentally do a little plugging for Pittsburg as the next convention city.

Saturday at Niagara Falls was a day of awe-inspiring revelations. After the 75-cent breakfast, with nothing fit to eat, the trip to Goat Island, the visit to the cave of the winds, the ride on the Maid of the Mist, the walk on the Canadian side down to the Horseshoe falls, and the wonderful panoramic view of the rapids along the Gorge railway to Lewiston, was a successive unfolding of nature's sublimity, coupled with magnificent distances that could hardly fail to make a vivid, lasting impression on the dullest mind. One could spend days viewing the rapids with its contrary currents, ocean-like roar and terrific viciousness that exert a seductive fascination over one's senses, and not grow weary. The stupendous magnitude of the four bridges which span the river from the dizzy heights on either bank at intervals between the falls and Lewiston are wonders in themselves, and the view of the Brock monument in the distance from the veranda of the hotel opposite Queenstown reminds one that he stands upon historic ground.

To the boys accustomed to the wide open towns of the west the closed town of Toronto was an apocalypse. There are no saloons in Toronto as we know them. They must be adjuncts to a hotel. There are only 150 of them, and the authorities are now considering a curtailment of barrooms by questioning the necessity for so many hostelries. They close at 7 o'clock on Saturday evenings and 11 o'clock other nights. They sell good, excellent, exquisite stuff, though, and you drink it from tumblers, without chasers, and it is three for a quarter everywhere.

Toronto is a fair example of municipal ownership of street railways. The city owns the tracks and leases them to the companies. I am informed the city's income approximates $400,000 a year from this source. The service seems to be good. One kind of tickets are sold seven for a quarter, and are good only in the morning and evening. The six for a quarter are good during the day and evening, and after 12 o'clock at night you must pay 10 cents cash.

There were a number of the boys there from different parts who have lived in Chicago. John Cantwell was a delegate from Montreal. Fred Whitehead and Frank Kidd, now of Washington, were there, just looking on. William Cruickshank, of St. Louis; Ed Hurton, of Indianapolis; Sam Hadden, of Toronto, and D. C. Lovette, delegate from Charleston, W. Va., were among those I met.

Two conspicuous figures as delegates to the convention, Robert Bandlow and Max Hayes, were most interesting studies. I had heard much of both, had pictures of them in my mental photograph gallery that were snap shots from hearing others talk of them. Those pictures were pulverized by personal contact and observation. Mr. Bandlow is far from the ranting type of socialism. He is clean-cut, medium height and build, with gray hair and a stubby mustache. He has a peculiar short and sharp vocalism, well modulated, and as he progresses in his argument his voice gradually grows more intense and rises slightly in key, but at no time does he grow vehement. Then, after a second of time from his incidental peroration, he begins again at the low note and closes with a convincing, corroborative conciseness that is wellnigh irresistible. His sincerity and consistency of purpose are well illustrated by his expressed desire to be recorded as voting in the negative on the recommendation of the law committee to non-concur in his Proposition No. 22.

Mr. Hayes is another type of socialistic product. Somewhat larger build than Bandlow, bald-headed, and with a smooth-shaven face that assumes a reddish hue as he warms up to his subject. He depends largely on his vocal powers to convince his hearers, and as a result the slight hoarseness of his voice is caused by the continual strain it bears from start to finish. But he talks intelligently and convincingly, as is proven by the report of his speech on the eight-hour matter. He is discerning, sagacious, diplomatic in his plans for the future. His advocacy of Resolution No. 1, in preference to Proposition No. 22, showed that. He believed, as did Mr. Bandlow, in Proposition 22, but he feared the result on the public of its adoption, and was therefore willing to suborn the question for the present if it tended to create a sentiment or discussion that would injure the eight-hour day.

Among other prominent figures were the impetuous Fennessy, of Los Angeles; the dispassionate, earnest Draper, of Ottawa; the courtly, dignified Anderson, of Macon; the judicial-appearing Johnson, chairman of the laws committee, with his glasses sitting well down toward the end of his nose; and over in one corner is Lou Shepard. "Shep" is not heard from on the floor; he can't talk for sour apples; but his influence is of the 8.5 clip, carefully calculated, well matured, and you can depend he has used his well-known persuasiveness in the legislation he is interested in.

The labor press, past and present, was well represented.

The Colorado Springs headquarters was a life-saving station Sunday morning. Charley Deacon, the Snyders, and Charley Carter dispensed hospitality and buttons the size of a dinner plate booming that city for the convention in 1906. Some of the visitors accumulated so many badges, buttons and tags that they wore as many decorations as a prize bull at a county fair.

Whatever President Lynch may appear to be in the eyes of his political opponents, he is certainly a corker in the chair. The stare with which he transfixes the timid delegate who struggles for recognition, or makes a ruling on the more daring one who claims his attention, announcing "the delegate from ——," slamming his gavel on the table with a bang that breaks the handle and startles the nervous member, are characteristics as prominent as his physical proportions and carry equal weight.

Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood is the busiest man at the convention, between answering questions—many nonsensical—and keeping tab on the business at hand. Frank Kennedy, in his paper, says there is an army of men ready and willing to take the offices of president and secretary at $2,100 per. I presume so, and it's dollars to dog biscuits the International Typographical Union would be more than willing to give $2,100 to have some of them get out of office later on.

The Philadelphia delegation, without doubt, was the center of interest. Shelby Smith's attenuated proportions and extremely long neck, gray hair, determined countenance, but helpless hesitancy in support of his position, was in strong contrast with the burly bluffness of Ernst Kreft and the dogged persistence of Walter Faries, who looks at you with a searching gaze from those piercing eyes, set well back under shaggy eyebrows. There is nothing particularly striking about John Meade, except that he seems to be a good fellow.

Every one liked Toronto. It was a royal convention, regal entertainment and loyal to the eight-hour day.

J. D. Coughlin, with a renewed lease on health, has returned to Chicago after a year's absence, part of the time at the Home and the balance in Denver, and is again working on the American and Examiner.

George P. Messick, well known here as a good hustler in the world of union politics, and a delegate to the St. Louis convention, went to the Home last month, hoping the change of scene and climate will improve his impaired health. George has many fast friends in Chicago who look for his recovery.

In my letter last October, in making an estimate of the non-union men, I took occasion to say:

> * * * The status of the non-union man—he has none. As a collective proposition, he is like the proverbial Irishman's flea—put your finger on him and he isn't there. In life's aims he is analogous to Mark Twain's celebrated mule—no pride of ancestry, no hope of posterity. * * * The despicable fly-by-night specimens of manhood who flock to scenes of labor troubles like buzzards over a rotten carcass are the characters who occupy the front of the stage, posing as the much-abused non-union man. * * *

The non-union men imported from all parts of the country to Chicago to help break the strike have not been of a character to change that opinion. They have intensified it. No one except those who come in contact with them can form any opinion of the low baseness to which men can fall when they once get a start toward ratdom. It must have cost the typothetæ a goodly number of dollars to round up the crowd they dumped into Chicago. One bunch from New York was robbed by one of their number, and he applied for admission to the union when he arrived. One of those whose pocket was picked refused to work until he was reimbursed by the typothetæ. They made good. Two Canadians wanted transportation to 'Frisco. They did not get it. One of the rats was a negro, who learned the trade in an orphan asylum. True to his natural instincts he ordered a chicken for dinner—he was not allowed to go out for fear he would not come back—and supposed the firm intended to pay for it. It broke his heart when he found he must pay the 65 cents himself. One of the imported men came to the union rooms, saying he had been discharged. He had been in this country about three months, had been hired in New York because he was an operator, and when one of the executive committee asked him what kind of an operator he was, he replied, "sewing machine."

A hundred similar cases were brought to the attention of the committee. It reminded me of the remark made by Mike Carroll during the strike of '87. Mike thought it would be a good scheme to have a trapdoor arranged for them to stand on, and when the time came just pull the string and let them down.

The Chicago typothetæ, or master printers' association, which is practically the same thing, is a self-constituted clearing house for the inspection, verification and approval of estimates on printing between its members. Fines and penalties are imposed for violation of the rules of the organization, and they are extremely heavy in some cases. The primary object of the scheme is to prevent the submission of estimates to the consumer that would entail losses, while at the same time it keeps an eye open to the danger of estimates being placed at such a high figure as to drive work out of town. When a member makes a figure on work of $100 or more he sends his estimate to headquarters, where it is closely scanned for mistakes, either high or low. The submission of his figures on the job constitute a priority right, and if other members are solicited by the consumer for estimates they must place their price so much higher that it will not endanger the interests of the first bidder. The rule is that 10 per cent must be added in order to safely conserve the interests of the first bidder. They have stated prices for presswork, composition and binding, adding percentage for profit and running expenses. If the typothetæ were as honorable among themselves as the printers, they would have no difficulty in getting the prices. But they are not. A case in point: A certain well-known printer made a price approximating $10,000 on the Eiderheimer-Stein catalogue. The Donnelley concern looked with greedy eyes on the job, and seeing the price bid, made one $400 less. The first bidder put in a claim for $1,000, as he was entitled to do under the rules, but it was disallowed. He was not as big as the other fellow. He took no further action at the time, but when the eight-hour question got warm he withdrew from the typothetæ. My informant also tells me he saw a check for $300 given by another well-known house as a penalty for doing the same trick.

Mr. Donnelley is credited with the statement that the eight-hour matter means ruination for him if he grants it and a fight with the union will result in financial disaster. Time will tell. If he would rather spend his money paying $19.50 per week to hobos, one and two years' apprentices and canal mule drivers for indifferent service, it is up to him to pay the fiddler. As President Lynch recently said at a meeting of the Chicago Union, if he busts we will set type for his successors.

At this writing matters in Chicago are extremely favorable. One hundred and twenty offices have signed the agreement to grant the eight-hour day on January 1, which guarantees work for 1,300 or more men. There are others that will sign. The offices that are fighting are in a deplorable condition, and the union spirit of former years in Chicago carries with it the resolve to get them sooner or later. We will never lie down. During my time, after years of fighting both the elder Donnelley and McNally at intermittent periods, the union has whipped them to a frazzle. Both of them have passed up life's cares, and they died conducting union offices. If the younger generation can not see their way clear to profit by the experience of their respected sires, it is up to them to learn the lesson personally. And it will be taught them in the good old district school fashion.

The meeting held in Musician's hall, which was called to take action on the recommendation of the executive council to force the fight all along the line, the endorsement of the recommendation without a dissenting voice, and the repeating of the obligation in that firm and determined manner, brought back the stirring scenes of 1887 most forcibly. It was a business proposition compared with the spectacular endeavor at that time to reduce the hours from ten to nine. That was the era of oratory. Fred Long probably had as much to do with the instigation of that strike as any other member. Fred was an anarchist of the first water. Fairly tall, a heavy mass of raven black hair hanging down over his coat collar, a black drooping mustache, with a voluminous voice and pleasing style of delivery, he made a good second for John A. Logan. The International Typographical Union had declared for the eight-hour day, but two large unions in the east renigged on the proposition, and Chicago determined to try to make a nine-hour day alone. In looking over the records I find that at a meeting held in Greenebaum's hall, October 27, 1887, Archey Robertson made a few remarks, in which he said in order to gain that strike we must maintain our manhood, our integrity, and remember our obligation. He wanted to take the obligation again, inasmuch as it had been a good many years since he had done so, and also wanted every member present to take it with him. He moved the chair administer the obligation to every member in the house. The motion prevailed and the obligation was taken standing, with raised hands. That was one of the most impressive scenes I ever witnessed.

The apron man declares the strike is costing him $18 per week. He says rats don't use aprons, and if some of them would put on a clean one it would constitute a new suit of clothes.

ST. JOSEPH, MO.

Pursuant to orders from headquarters the scale committee attended to its business, and after every possible means had been exhausted for an amicable settlement, the members of No. 40 were called out of thirteen offices, the other three having signed. From foreman to devil the order was obeyed. This is our third day and the offices are scouring the country trying to fill our places, but with poor success. They have not found an individual that can lay a sixteen-page form, and are up against a hard proposition. We were told that our places would be filled the next day, but they have spent thousands of dollars and have succeeded in getting a few country boys and girls from Nebraska, and from inside information they are doing the office more harm than good in the destruction of material. President Lynch has done all in his power to prevent this war, but when the enemy at Niagara Falls failed to agree to our terms it was the blowing up of the "Main-e" proposition before them, and nothing but war could be declared. The organizations in the city are all with us and are wishing us success.

Typographical Union No. 40 was given the post of honor in the Labor day parade. Three auto cars contained the old and honored members and lady members, followed by Roy McDonald as the typical devil, and then came our silk banner and the stars and stripes, followed by your humble servant in charge of eight little boys, dressed up in red Mephisto garb, representing the hours we demanded. The members were all uniformed and carried banners with the inscription "We Want Eight Hours," and all unions in the parade who work eight hours were given banners by No. 40 reading, "We Work Eight Hours." The parade was one of the finest ever given in St. Joseph, and one business man was heard to remark, "The brains of the labor unions led the parade," referring to the printers.

Good news is being received from Chicago and St. Louis, and before this appears in THE JOURNAL I hope to see the battle won. J. E. MURPHY.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

The eight-hour fight began in St. Louis on September 10, when a special meeting, attended by 700 members of No. 8, by unanimous rising vote, placed the members of this local at the call of the executive council. This action was encompassed in a few minutes without a word of argument, and is about all the proof necessary as indicative of what St. Louis can be expected to do. On September 13 the six men at Murry-Nicholson's were called out, being the first to cease work here in the eight-hour struggle. The officers meanwhile made the rounds of the shops, and on September 14 the men at Perrin & Smith, A. R. Fleming Printing Company, Skinner & Kennedy, Buxton & Skinner, Shallcross Printing Company, Little & Becker, Greeley Printery, Great Western Printing Company, Feldbush & Bowman, Gottschalk Printing Company and Stephens Lithographing company were ordered out. Next day the men at the Security Printing Company responded. One day later George D. Barnard & Co.'s men walked out. Monday, September 18, the Lumberman Printing Company's force of eleven was called out. The employers are not succeeding in getting men, and the strikers are firm and confident. The committee announced on September 18 that in those offices which had been visited and which had not been struck, there would be no trouble. At this date (September 18) No. 8's committee announces that 99 houses out of a total of 149 have signed an agreement to recognize an eight-hour day on January 1, 1906. Among typothetæ shops announced to have signed are Perrin & Smith and Gottschalk's. At this date there are approximately 180 men and 22 apprentices on strike. Of the remaining 50 offices, 26 are said to be members of the typothetæ. There has not been the loss of a man. Several of the largest shops have not been called out yet, for reasons which the committee does not deem proper to divulge, but which, they say, are sufficient. On Sunday, September 17, the "struck" offices which had not signed, all of them typothetæ, began advertising for non-union help, offering $19.50 for fifty-four hours. One enterprising typothetan sent east for a special importation of twenty-five rats. When the shipment arrived it consisted of one card man, who had accepted the hospitality of the typothetæ to come west. Another house fired, after two hours, the one man they were able to secure, as they had no work for a tile-setter.

"Hail! Hail! The gang's all here!"

Eight hours? Well, I should smile!

Is St. Louis on the firing line? In the July JOURNAL I said: "Witness No. 8's redoubled efforts for the triumph of the eight-hour campaign." That's all.

Oscar Donoho, of the Republic force, was accidentally drowned convention week. The St. Louis contingent received the news with regret.

Franklin Hudson, president of the Kansas City (Mo.) chapter of the employers' association, recently purchased a hat for his personal use. On making the discovery that a union label was sewed therein he is said to have indignantly cut it out and stamped it on the ground. Consistency would have impelled him to discard the hat also. "There's a reason."

The few rat shops here have been advertising for men. If they can't get them during peace, looks like they'll have a phat chance now.

The Detroit and Toronto printers' clubs acquitted themselves creditably in entertaining convention attendants.

The Globe-Democrat remarks editorially: "The typothetæ is standing firm against the striking printers, but giving permission to all firms which desire it to make terms with the strikers. It is not hard to understand the printers' claim that they are masters of the situation." "There's a reason."

The Toronto souvenir was a gem of typographic art.

A local rat shop, in advertising for compositors, uses the alluring phrase "non-typothetæ." And here's consistency, at least. If you object to your employes organizing, you should not organize yourself.

That must be fierce booze they have at Niagara. "Open shop, brother, open shop. Let's go drink an open-shop cocktail at an open bar, served by an open-faced bartender."

When one office had its men called out, among the first to respond was the son of one of the proprietors, and a member of No. 8. And this house was the first "struck" office to sign. Not for this reason alone, but it doubtless contributed largely.

Just before the men were called out of another office a young apprentice, a two-thirder in reality, went to the committee and recited the fact that he was true blue and wanted to come out, but he had to think twice because of having several relatives dependent on him. He said a very attractive offer had been made him by his employer. The apprentice was told he would be placed on the strike benefit roll. The house was "struck;" he came out instantly. The firm quickly signed. Then the young man was told he would not be needed. The committee instantly ordered the apprentice reinstated, and for good, with the alternative of having its men called out again. The firm surrendered.

One fallacy regarding the eight-hour campaign being waged by the union printers which has been dissipated was that the whole proposition was chimerical and based on sentiment. It was believed generally by the employers—and by a very few employes, also—that when the moment arrived for action the determination necessary to success would be found lacking. But what an error, my countrymen! In one mighty roar the answer of the Toronto convention goes reverberating down the typographical corridors: "Eight hours!" You find the newspaper printer ready—yea, eager—to pay any assessment necessary. Now, you say, that looks strange, inasmuch as the latter will not profit by the jobber securing the shorter workday. In the first place, the news man's obligations are identical with the job man's. There are other reasons, but that is sufficient. The union printer is intelligent. He knows that the eight-hour organization is the only one potent enough in industrial affairs to secure full justice for its members. This truth has been recognized by numerous typothetans, who have confidentially told friends that it is not eight hours they fear so much as what will come after! In other words, when we have inaugurated the universal eight-hour day, we will be in position to rectify many wrong conditions.

Blessings come in disguise in trade unionism, as in other avenues of human activity. This has proved to be the case in the suspension of the charter of St. Louis Union. The action of the executive council has been unanimously approved by the Toronto convention. Indeed, there has not been a voice raised against the procedure. This incident, unfortunate though it appeared at first, has developed as the most fortunate occurrence in the career of the printers' union. And why? Momentarily it will prove to be the leading factor in the success of the eight-hour campaign. It supplied the one thing needed to arouse the membership. It demonstrated that the movement was backed up by the hearts and material substance of the 50,000 members of the International Typographical Union, and was not a passing fancy. In its permanent effects the incident demonstrated alike to employer and union printer that the federation of printers' unions had enacted laws and delegated certain powers to its executive council, and that the latter would be upheld in the performance of their duty. It has shown the organization's foundation to rest on solid rock, and to be immune against disintegration. That the convention, as the spokesman for the membership, viewed the eight-hour demand as one of inherent right, and not based on fancy, is demonstrated by the adoption by the eight-hour committee of the convention of the president's declaration:

We do not want the eight-hour day by reason of charity or philanthropy. We do not want it in order that our physical or mental well-being may be improved. We refuse to abandon our eight-hour demand because we may, under present conditions, be more fortunately situated than other artisans. We want the eight-hour workday because we are convinced that it suffices for the work there is to do, the work that is to be done, the demand of society for the product of the press. We propose to sell to the employer eight hours out of twenty-four, and we will do as we please with the remaining sixteen.

Canadian hospitality is fine.

Members of No. 8 who went to Buffalo on their return from Toronto speak highly of the entertainment afforded them by the committee of No. 9, and feel under obligation for courtesies extended.

Pike's Peak or bust!

Considerable education is necessary in the utilization of advertising space to prevent waste. A case in point is the following, taken from a local daily: "Wanted—Good printer for daily and weekly; wages, $10 per week; no booze-fighter need apply; position steady." The advertiser could have saved a line by the elimination of "no booze-fighter need apply," because it is a self-evident fact that no man could fight booze on $10 a week sufficiently to interfere with his duties.

The Chicago citizens' alliance is much aggrieved because the printers won't do something which will furnish excuse for the issuance of an injunction. This is really distressing. Because of this and their inability to supply rats, the alliance finds time hanging heavy.

The Lyons Mirror has come to the rescue of the typothetæ with this: "Men so unreasonable as to demand an eight-hour day ought to be whipped to a standstill." Now, how can we face public opinion in view of such unspeakable—I should say unanswerable—"argument"?

A sick relief law will come up for final action at the October meeting of No. 8.

Labor day was celebrated by the members of No. 8 and their families with a picnic at Normandy grove. The crowd was large and the entertainment enjoyable.

The Typeart Press, a job office conducted by Louis F. Fuchs, who also publishes "The Stick," was visited recently by fire. New quarters were secured at Tenth and Locust streets and business resumed after a few days' delay.

A new by-law calls for the creation by subordinate unions of label committees. Get busy!

Mr. Knocker: Boost the woman's auxiliary. Boost the apprentices' society. Boost the correspondents' society. Boost the eight-hour day. Boost the label. Boost the International Typographical Union. And, incidentally, boost yourself. Be a booster. The knocker can find something among the above to fit his hammer, and he can knock eternally between breaths, but who would be a knocker? If you don't feel impelled to do any boosting, for goodness' sake don't question the honesty, integrity, sincerity and even the birthright of those who do feel that way. The Michigan Tradesman is quoted in the September JOURNAL as saying that "the moment a man joins a union he leaves honor behind and becomes a law-breaker, a social outcast, a liar, a thief and a murderer." Of course, you don't believe that, but you think almost as ill of those who seize any and every instrument that can be used to boost with.

"Break the ranks of striking job men by buying up some of the weak-kneed members. There are always such in every union."—President Ellis, of typothetæ, in telegram to Detroit. That's the only chance the typothetæ has to win. And because it is such a terribly emaciated chance, they won't win.

The typothetæ can not gold-brick the country employers. Such presumption!

The threat of the typothetæ to come back home from Niagara Falls and inaugurate the open shop and discard the label was "called." Rest assured that the typothetæ will do both—whenever it can. It has not done so and is not doing so—because it can not. Hence, organize, organize, organize!

Because of certain gentlemen in attendance on the Toronto convention having assumed the position that those delegates who voted negatively on the report of the committee on appeals, in the appeal of the executive council from the acquittal of Shelby Smith by Philadelphia Union, in effect voted to declare the council guilty as charged by said Shelby Smith, and because the undersigned was refused the floor at Saturday's session on a point of personal privilege, I deem it due the members of No. 8 to say that the refusal of the appeals committee and convention to divide the question and vote first on the question of guilt or innocence, and second on degree of penalty, made it necessary for me either to vote negatively, as I did, or affirmativly, thus inflicting punishment in excess of what I believed the ends of justice demanded. I did not explain my vote at the time the ayes and noes were recorded because I did not anticipate my motive would be impugned. While heeding the appeal of orators for the adoption of the report "to distinguish between license and liberty of the press," I also was constrained to differentiate between prosecution and persecution. I held Shelby Smith guilty, as did the appeals committee, but did not, and do not, believe the ends of justice are served by meting out excessive punishment even to a man who makes no defense. The assertion that my negative vote reflects on the integrity of the executive council is astounding, unreasonable and ridiculous. My failure to secure the floor of the convention on a point of personal privilege is excuse for this reference to the incident.

The following statement was read before a meeting of striking job printers at Walhalla Hall, Tuesday, September 19, at 10 A. M.: "Typographical Union No. 8's executive committee is confident that its efforts to put into effect an eight-hour day January 1 will be successful. No more offices will be struck in St. Louis. The reason is that there are no more offices in the city except those now on strike that have not given an absolute guaranty that there will be no trouble over putting into effect the eight-hour law of the International Typographical Union the first of 1906. The few offices yet to be heard from are one and two men offices, the proprietors of which, as a general thing, are members of No. 8. Fifteen offices signed today and thirty men were ordered to return to work."

The last house to be "struck" was the Rauth Printing Company, four men. The Security Company signed on September 18. The following is the register on September 19: Journeymen on strike, 182; apprentices, 32; copyholders, 6, representing 12 shops. A few of these are expected to sign shortly.*

That the label is recognized for its true worth is indicated by the street-car ad of a "struck" house: "Get THIS Label: (name of firm). It stands for the UNION of Quality and Service in the Printing Business."*

The "holler" in newspaper interviews put up by a member of the typothetæ whose house was "struck" recalls a couplet from his street-car ad:

The man who makes the biggest clatter
Is the man who hollers through printed matter.*

The apprentices' society held a rousing meeting Tuesday evening, September 19, being addressed by several members of No. 8. The apprentice boys responded nobly to the call to come out, and were given a rousing cheer.

Feldbush-Bowman signed Tuesday evening, September 19, and put fifteen men to work.

NEW CASTLE, PA.

No. 270 is adding to its membership.

Delegate Gleason made his report at the last meeting and held close attention.

It was an event of rejoicing when the annual scale of the tin-plate mills was signed recently. It meant much to this part of the state. Some trouble was anticipated and barely averted.

Our central body is now affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

New scale cards were presented to employers the first of September for signatures, and will be collected the first of October. No trouble is anticipated. About the only change made was fixing holidays.

We are reminded there are twenty printers engaged at the trade (including four proprietors) who own and occupy their own homes. How is that for a record for a place of this size—and a record for pioneer eight-hour conditions?

The workingman of today is reaping the benefit of prosperity in fuller employment and less hours of labor. He has more time for domestic and social enjoyment and at the same time receives much higher wages than his predecessor of a generation ago. Men who own their own homes are educating their children and are living far better than the workingmen of former times. Therefore, let us look cheerful and cease to knock.—Editorial New Castle News.

New Castle, with a population of 38,000, boasts of the world's largest tin mills, world's largest per capita local freight movement, and world's largest per capita bank deposits. In ten years the gain in population has been 142 per cent. Ten thousand are employed by the mills and railroads.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The remarkable spirit of unanimity that marked the proceedings of the Toronto convention leaves no doubt in the minds of printers throughout southern California that the International Typographical Union is thoroughly in earnest regarding the eight-hour workday. This forward movement has demonstrated, as nothing else could, the utter idiocy of the assertion sometimes made that "the union does nothing for the job man." In one respect, if in no other, the union resembles the Lord—it helps those who help themselves. Since the job men have made up their minds that they really want an eight-hour day, newspaper printers everywhere are assisting in every way possible to that end. This is a matter upon which there is no division, and for this reason success is inevitable.

On Monday, October 2, the Los Angeles Evening News will make its initial appearance. The home of the new paper is in the old postoffice building, corner of Eighth and Spring. It will be a seven-column, eight-page, penny paper, and it is safe to say, will be a typographical gem. Any person who knows Samuel T. Clover, editor and publisher of the News, knows that he insists upon the best, both editorially and mechanically. "Don" Salinas, for years a prominent member of Kansas City Union, has accepted the foremanship, and Mark Rice, formerly of Chicago, is to be his assistant. A majority of the men employed on the paper will receive in excess of the scale—which is another way of saying that the force will come near being an all-star aggregation.

With the coming of the News, Los Angeles will have six daily papers—three morning and three evening. It is doubtful if there is another city of 200,000 population, with practically no surrounding territory from which to draw, that has so many and as large papers as has Los Angeles. This is partially explained by the fact that this city is annually visited by thousands of tourists, making Los Angeles largely a city of strangers, who not only read the papers themselves, but who subscribe also for friends "back home." The steady influx of strangers likewise makes Los Angeles a splendid advertising town, each merchant vying with the other to reach the eye—and the pocket—of the new arrival.

Among the thousands who journey to this far-famed land, Mr. Printer Man is represented in no small degree, which keeps subbing perpetually "on the bum." But, of course, this is a free country, and the distance is no greater from the starting point to the jumping-off place than it is from the jumping-off place to the starting point.

The Labor day parade this year was the largest ever seen in Los Angeles. Evidently there is more bark than bite in the union-smashing alliance. Each printer in the parade carried an American flag, above which was affixed a pennant bearing a magic figure and a magic word—"8 Hours." No explanation was necessary.

During the past month the Times, in its characteristic manner, slandered Abbot Kinney, a capitalist who is spending a fortune in improving a nearby beach resort. As a result, the real estate dealers of Santa Monica, Ocean Park and Venice, comprising the realty board, held a meeting and unanimously adopted resolutions denouncing the Times. In a column editorial the Santa Monica Daily Review says:

> To those who are acquainted with the reputation of the editor of the Times for malicious, cowardly and unfair attacks upon his enemies, regardless of those who may be injured by those attacks, other than the object of his malice, the article causes no surprise and no damage whatever to this community, for within the range of his acquaintance there is no less influential man in the state than Harrison Gray Otis and none more thoroughly execrated for cause. . . .
> The motive for the article in question is to satisfy the insatiate greed for revenge that permeates every act and dominates the most trifling policy of Otis' paper from a to izzard. If by blasting, or attempting to blast, this whole beach, Otis could satisfy his personal malice against Abbot Kinney, he would not hesitate to do so. The many thousands of dollars that he has received from the real estate men of this beach for advertising are forgotten when he sees a chance to strike a blow at a man he hates, as easily as he forgets the injury and possible ruin he may work on those who are in no wise responsible for that quarrel or in any way parties to it. . . .
> If Abbot Kinney should die tonight and Harrison Gray Otis should live an hundred years and be breveted every title that sycophantic service to party and corporate greed and treason to the people could earn, the former would be remembered when the latter's name had passed entirely out of the recollection of the human race.

How would you like to be the brigadier?

The third monthly meeting of the eight-hour conference of southern California was held at San Diego on Sunday, September 17. Without doubt, it was the most successful meeting of printers ever held in this portion of the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union. Stanley B. Wilson, president of Los Angeles Union; T. D. Fennessy, organizer of the International Typographical Union, and Dr. A. D. Houghton, the "recall" councilman of the Sixth ward of Los Angeles, accompanied the Los Angeles delegation. The delegates present were: H. L. Dunning, Riverside; C. B. Duffey and C. E. Walker, San Bernardino; A. S. Crane and the San Diego delegation; William F. Howe, Charles R. White and Francis Drake, Los Angeles. At the conference it was agreed that Organizer Fennessy and Mr. Crane, treasurer of San Diego Union and president of the conference, should call on the job office proprietors of the city. The following Tuesday the proprietors were visited, and Messrs. Fennessy and Crane secured the signatures of every proprietor in San Diego to an agreement guaranteeing the inauguration of the eight-hour workday on and after January 1, next. Just two hours were consumed in this work.

San Diego Union deserves the warmest praise for the conservative manner in which the business of the organization is conducted. Three years ago that city was a "fraternity" stronghold. Today it is strictly union, and every job proprietor pays per capita tax either to the International Typographical Union or the pressmen's union.

The next conference will be held at Long Beach on Sunday, October 22.

There is only one word that can express the feelings of the members of San Diego Union, and that word is—"Dee-lighted!" FRANCIS DRAKE.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

It would require the services of a three-magazine Mergenthaler and a monotype keyboard to do full justice to affairs typographical in this bailiwick since my letter of last August. Events have come and gone with such rapidity that it makes one dizzy to attempt an accurate recountal of same in order as they transpired.

Early in July the eight-hour committee inaugurated a program of agitation and education which at once made every member a business agent and at the same time brought to the attention of the printing buying public the importance of the typographical union as a business institution. Each member was furnished with a blank slip on which to record the names of the several firms with whom they spend their earnings. To each of these merchants was mailed a letter calling attention to the fact that a printer man was a part of his assets, and that "a customer requests that your printing bear the union label."

For a "follow-up" each member was supplied with a bunch of name cards, with name, address and where employed on one side, and on reverse the following: "Mr. Business Man—The members of the allied printing trades of Toledo spend over a half million dollars annually with the merchants of Toledo. Why not patronize those who patronize you most by insisting that this label (cut of label) appear on all your printed matter?" Then followed a list of firms where the label could be supplied on request. Every member of the union was a walking delegate, and as each presented his card on making any kind of a purchase the union came by advertising of no little consequence, and every butcher, baker and candlestickmaker in this vicinity was made to sit up and take notice that his customers were keeping tab on his printed matter.

As to the beneficial results of this plan of label campaign it would be impossible at this time to define its scope, but even at an early date returns began to justify the continuance of same, which will be enlarged on from time to time as conditions may warrant.

During the progress of this plan of education and agitation the committee and officers were not content to rest on their oars; there was no drifting with the stream. Committee and chapel meetings were held in all the offices; mass meetings were held, which were not mutual admiration gatherings by any means, but, on the other hand, every member was called upon to give his little say so, and through this plan the committee was put in closer touch with the membership and brought out forcibly that two heads were better than one.

On Sunday, September 11, a special meeting was held, and on instructions from President Lynch, on behalf of the executive council, the union was notified to submit the eight-hour agreement to the employers at once for their approval, and in case of their refusal to sign same, to strike forthwith. This action was ratified by the organization, and, so far as Toledo was concerned, the long-threatened struggle for the eight-hour day was on.

Early on the following morning every office within the jurisdiction was informed of our ultimatum, and as a result some forty jobmen left their situations. All of the smaller offices, some fifteen, readily complied, while the larger ones, some five in number, refused and decided to make the fight and stand for the open shop. The struggle was on several days, not a wheel turning in any of the struck offices owing to their inability to procure help, when on the following Friday two of the larger offices cut loose from the national pact, got out from under and signed up. With the signing of these two offices there remain without the fold at this writing three offices, and of the forty men who left their positions at the call of time only half are now on the roll call.

The strike is now in its second week, and long before this reaches JOURNAL readers, from the union's angle it looks as if the affair would be amicably adjusted and all firms will have signed up and the "late unpleasantness" but a pleasant memory, and on January 1, next, No. 63 will hoist the International banner: "We propose to sell to the employers eight hours out of twenty-four, and to do as we please with the remaining sixteen."

That the affair has been productive of much good to the membership has been manifest from the outset. It has also brought to the notice of employers that a typographical union membership and obligation is not a mere vehicle of convenience, and that their stock contention that the eight-hour movement was being forced by the newspaper employes, in which the jobmen were not in accord, was erroneous. In every instance the member was only too anxious and willing to make some sacrifice in behalf of one of the greatest movements ever inaugurated by an American trade union to elevate its members in the social scale of life. It has also proven that there is a stronger spirit of solidarity, a closer bond of brotherhood and a realization of class interests rife among members of the printing crafts than captains of industry are wont to concede, for in several shops the apprentices left their places and seemed to take the same interest as the workmen, and wished to become a part of the great working class movement, thus tying up the shops completely. On the other hand, the employers were all at sea. While at times it looked as if they were ready to pull away from the national pact, which at best is only an expensive one to them, and which supplies a channel for exploitation by the Parryites, nevertheless there was some sort of a gentlemen's agreement which held them. However, it is beginning to dawn upon them that the members of the typographical union are not of those whom they formerly dealt with, and time will prove that it would have been by far more profitable and businesslike to have met the union's terms at the outset than to have made the effort to fight and then be compelled in the end to meet the conditions of the union, which they spurned.

That the strike is not without its amusing and educational features, as well as its serious aspects, began to develop early. On the second day of cessation a seedy individual by the name of Kirby visited camp. He announced that he was a printer who had read a want ad in a Kalamazoo (Mich.) paper calling for printers in Toledo. On his arrival here he learned that there was a strike on, and of oourse his conscience pricked him to that extent that he could not see his way clear to violate an obligation. Coming as he did without funds, and not doubting his vocation for the minute, the committee supplied him with the wherewithal to ease up the inner man. That he had an awful tank capacity was vouched for by his persistent demands for more coin of the realm. On a call from one of the shops for help he was told of the situation, and then he balked. His actions prior to this had been commented upon as being suspicious. He was a good mixer and always on the alert to butt in with his electroplated ear, and digested eagerly every bit of information which smacked of interest or concern to the employers. He was summoned before a committee consisting of Charley Brown, "Shorty" Egan and "Circus" Durell, and what they did to him was a plenty. He was put through the "third degree" along the technical lines of the craft, and it soon was apparent that he knew nothing of the business at all at all. That to all intents and purposes his mission was that of a spy in the interest of the "teapot" and an employe of a local detective agency. Some of the questions asked of him were such as: "What is an italic quad?" "Did you ever double slug the cylinder?" "Were you ever troubled with type lice?" "What would be your plan of action in case the whisker chaser became unmanageable?" "What is the difference between a halftone and a fulltone?" and numerous other questions, on all of which he was nonplused. The committee then entered complaint against him for obtaining money under false pretense, and on being brought before the police judge he was sentenced to twenty days in the county bastile. The police judge, in sentencing him, commented on the matter at some length and said that such a case was unprecedented in police court during times of strikes, i. e., where the union men dealt with a spy in this manner. It was usually the reverse. That the police department was called upon to protect the interests of the free and unfettered individual, the sovereign American, who is free to dispose of his labor as he sees fit, but in this case the union was willing to submit its case to the usual tribunal. That the gent was not a howling success as a detective is certain, inasmuch as none of the local followers of Parry came to his rescue, not even the local detective agency by which he was employed. However, while the monotonous task of making little stones out of big ones would phase most people, this fellow got off light indeed.

Another incident worthy of record was the construction placed on the use and ownership of the label by one of the local shops. A demand for the surrender of all labels was made on the struck shops. All readily acquiesced with the exception of one (operated by one of the fair sex), who put up the claim that inasmuch as she was willing to pay the scale she was entitled to retain the labels loaned her. Charles S. Brown, secretary of the allied printing trades council, on behalf of that body, brought action in a replevin proceeding against the office in the city courts, which resulted in the council obtaining its property. This same office had a facsimile of the label painted in gold upon its window for advertising purposes, and at this writing a demand is in court for the removal of this misleading sign from the window.

Another incident noted was the quality of the work produced by some of the shops, which was in strong contrast to the work turned out by the union men. Invitations for weddings were set in gothic and brownie ornaments suitable only for railroad dodger work; business cards set in script, and such other abortions were of conspicuous notice. While these are days which try men's souls, nevertheless, one feels like slapping himself on the chest for being honored with a membership in the typographical union, and can send home the claim made by us that when a piece of printed matter bears the union label it is the best that can be conceived, and we defy its equal by non-unionists.

Line up, this skirmish is but the preliminary to the great international workmen's movement now encircling the world.

Close up the ranks!

At this time, the closing months of one of the most severely conducted campaigns along educational lines ever inaugurated by an American trade union, it is noteworthy to record the attitude of the members of the job branch. It reminds me of the story of an old negro who wanted some turkeys. The old fellow had been to camp meeting, where he was told to pray for what he wanted. So he prayed that a turkey be sent to him, only to find his prayer unanswered. But he thought of a new scheme. He prayed God to send him after the turkey, and the next morning the turkey was there. Jobmen have been doing the beggar's act, and like the old negro, their prayers have come to naught. Now they are going out after what they want, and when January 1, next, rolls around they will wake up and find themselves in possession, and will wonder why they did not go after it several years ago. But they will have to go after it, for it will not come to them.

If we had but one argument in favor of our contention for the eight-hour day, and that one that the hours of labor now prevalent are too long for the good health of the average man, public sentiment would be with us. In the job branch, which requires severe physical and nervous energy, through the inauguration of the eight-hour day workmen would become more skillful and products would be of a higher grade. The workman's mental vigor would increase, and the employer, being the seller of the workmen's product, would in the end be a gainer through the operation of the shorter workday. Employers must be short-sighted indeed who can not figure out the increased profits under the eight-hour day, for anything that gives workmen a clearer mentality must redound to the profit of the business office.

Captains of industry prate that good citizenship is the object of the nation, else why have a government? How in the name of heaven are we to have good citizenship unless we workmen have time to study the science of government? Is the chief end of man to just work and sleep and be a beast of burden? Or is he a living, thinking being, whose mental development transcends all other demands? Is it not to give man more of the comforts and enjoyments of life, to lessen the burdens of maintenance, and furnish him with the facilities of moral, mental and spiritual development? When the human mind is liberated from the bondage of long hours of toil it will study the Infinite in the works of creation. Man will become a social student.

The eight-hour day will be inaugurated by the printing crafts with the coming of the new year, and while there are those who will contend that it is as a mere palliative in the ultimate goal of the workman's program, I claim it is nevertheless a long step in the direction of social progress, and will prove a blessing to diminish the intensity of the struggle for existence. All hail the eight-hour day! JOSEPH P. KEATING.

ALBANY, N. Y.

There is "something doing" in Albany at the present writing. No. 4 has been honored by being placed in the advance guard of the International Typographical Union eight-hour movement, and is doing for the east what Chicago and Detroit are doing for the middle west, and what San Francisco has already done for the Pacific coast. No. 4 took a position on the "firing line" Monday morning, September 11, when, in obedience to the orders of President Lynch and the executive council of the International Union, a committee appointed at a special meeting the day previous promptly proceeded to interview every employing printer in the city and request their signature to an agreement giving the eight-hour day on and after January 1, 1906. The two days devoted to this work resulted in securing the agreement from twenty-one of the twenty-eight printing concerns in this city, and the men in the other seven were called out, and promptly responded, to a man, with a readiness that was very gratifying. The number of our members involved in the seven offices was very nearly three hundred men. Weed Parson's plant was the first to be called out, and fifty men quit work there Monday noon, September 11. At the same time the three men in Boyd's, three in Williams' and six in the Van Benthuysen offices also stopped work. The next day at noon the Argus Company, forty men, Brandon Printing Company, one hundred men, and the two offices of the J. B. Lyon Company, ninety men, also came out, those in charge of these concerns not being in a position at the time to sign the agreement in the time given. The fight was on. Headquarters were opened at the union rooms, and the executive committee and the committee appointed to secure the agreements began a continuous session in an adjoining hall. The men, as they gathered at the headquarters, were in the best of spirits, and, notwithstanding the nasty weather that has prevailed nearly every day during the week, have managed to derive a fair share of amusement out of the situation. Euchre and pinocle games held down several quartets; newspapers, magazines and other literature satisfied others, while animated conversations over the great movement we are engaged in, amid solacing puffs from pipes and tobacco thoughtfully contributed by Miss Fannie Lederer, a sister of one of our members, Joseph Lederer, served to satisfy the majority coming and going during the day. The first break among the seven firms refusing or unable to sign at the time required came Wednesday evening, when the Argus Company sent for the committee and placed their signature to the agreement. The second came Saturday forenoon, September 16, when, by appointment, the committee waited upon the Brandon Printing Company at their offices on State street, and the eight-hour document was duly signed. This information was conveyed to a large gathering of printers at their headquarters about 11 o'clock, and created great enthusiasm, as the Brandon Company thereby puts back to work nearly one hundred of our men tomorrow—Monday—morning. Two of the four largest concerns in opposition to the eight hours are thus in line, and if either of the remaining two sign, as is now confidently expected, the fight will be practically won, so far as Albany is concerned. The other three only employ twelve men, and as one of these, the Van Benthuysen Company, does a large business in presswork, it is not anticipated that this concern will delay long in following the lead of those who have already signed for the eight hours.

President Ranney and Secretary Hartnett, of Troy Union, were in town today in consultation with President Quinn.

September 19, 10 P. M.—Albany Typographical Union No. 4 is "all to the good." The eight-hour day is a question no longer to us. It is an assured fact, and on and after January 1, 1906, every member of our union will realize it. Today the remaining five concerns that had not already signed the agreement decided to do so, viz.: the J. B. Lyon Company, the Weed-Parsons Printing Company, Charles Van Benthuysen & Son, the Boyd Printing Company and C. F. Williams. The agreement was reached today after a series of conferences, sessions and meetings between directors of companies, a meeting of the typothetæ and a conference with the committee representing Albany Typographical Union No. 4. The good news was noised around late this afternoon, and at a special meeting held at the headquarters at 8 P. M. was made an authentic fact by a report of the committee. A no more deserving or better pleased committee ever made a report to their union than was Messrs. W. B. Clark, J. F. Quirk, M. J. Sullivan, Thomas Palmatier and John H. McCann, appointed by President T. J. Quinn to perform this history-marking duty in the annals of our union. The cheers and heartfelt greetings that followed were a well-earned sequel to a work well done. The eight-hour strike of Albany Typographical Union No. 4 passes into history as a dignified, consistent and businesslike exemplification of what thorough organization can do to promote the cause of labor. There were no harsh measures, violence or other discredited means resorted to to bring about the desired results. The employers themselves have only admiration as a dominant feeling for our loyal organization. It is really a revelation to them, and they really seem to feel that its integrity and solidity can be construed in no other way than as a strong factor in promoting their own future welfare. Well may we all feel proud of the International Typographical Union, and especially of local No. 4 (with a big 4, if you please). CHARLES H. WHITTEMORE.

A CORRECTION.

Lest there be a wrong impression prevail among the membership at large, due to a communication in the September issue of THE JOURNAL from this city in reference to existing conditions here, I take this opportunity of contradicting, in a measure, the statements made in the article referred to. The article mentioned states that there is no great desire on the part of any one to leave the city, when, in fact, there were twenty-six withdrawal cards issued in one week during the month in which the letter was written. The article also states that the union has passed a five-day law and that work is exceptionally good. The union did pass a temporary five-day law, to continue only so long as yellow fever was prevalent. Work is good only from the fact due to the operation of the law above referred to, and there is an ample supply of men to meet the demand. H. S. HUDSPETH,

New Orleans, La. President No. 17.

DETROIT, MICH.

The most interesting and largely attended meeting in the history of No. 18 was held Sunday, September 3, and among the good things handed out to the large number present was an interesting speech by President Lynch, followed by an address by Vice-President Hays, who has been with us several weeks. President Lynch commended our local officers and members at large on the successful management of our campaign against the "open shop." After a lockout of six weeks we have not lost a single member, and we present as solid a front today as the day of the strike.

The report of Delegates McLogan and Porter was a literary effort of grammatical perfection, and their handling of convention details of general interest reflected credit on their constituents who selected them to represent No. 18. Mr. McLogan presented the report, and, while it was brief, it was enjoyed by all.

"King" Kissel was unanimously elected to represent No. 18 at the state federation of labor, to be held at Saginaw.

The strike benefits were increased to $10 and $8 per week. A 5 per cent assessment was unanimously voted on all wages in excess of $10 per week, to be collected weekly.

Labor day was recognized by No. 18 in turning out over 500 members, including a number of the allied crafts who marched with us. Third prize was awarded the printers, who did not appear in any uniform other than linen caps and bamboo canes and their own holiday rags. The previous three years second prize was awarded No. 18 for best appearance. First and second prizes were awarded the steel workers and painters and decorators. It was a cool, cloudy day and ideal marching weather, and the largest turnout in the history of Detroit.

Upon our acquaintance with each individual strikebreaker we not only feel more confident of success, but a comparison between them and union men is so striking and redounds so much to our credit that the employers must feel that same disgust and contempt for these outcasts from society that honest union men do. To cite an instance of their depravity, one of these degenerates came into the club rooms on Labor day and asked the writer to buy him a drink. Upon inquiry I found he had come from Chicago two weeks before with three others of the same stripe. He stated that he had been "laid off" and was willing to leave town if the union would give him money and a ticket to Chicago, as he was sure he could get work there! What do you think of that for nerve? He got a drink, was escorted from the club by a heavyweight committee, who reported later that he had left town, convinced that walking was better for his health than riding. He acknowledged he was not a first-class printer, but said he preferred it to the stockyards of Chicago, where he had worked eight years. It is not necessary, and even injurious to our interests, to give these cattle a card, for they are so incompetent that the proprietors have no use for them, and when the trouble is over they are a reflection on our organization, for membership in our union is supposed to be a degree of competency.

F. Errett, a strike-breaker, was induced by our pickets to leave town, and we have learned that he committed suicide in Cleveland on September 14. Conscience probably got to work.

No. 18 has 530 members in good standing, 125 out on strike, not one superannuated or indigent member, and only two on the sick list.

Organizer William Haight was called to Saginaw on the 10th inst., and addressed the central trades council. His speech was received with great enthusiasm, and the support of that body was assured the printers. Before leaving, Mr. Haight had secured eight-hour contracts from all the job shops. From there he went to Grand Rapids and addressed No. 39. He has a good voice, an effective delivery, is a natural orator, and is doing effective work all over the state.

Mr. Dodge, one of the typothetæ agents, in conversation with W. H. Brooks, who has charge of the picketing work for No. 18, said that he had resigned his position; that they were at the end of their rope; that they simply could not make good their promises to the employers to furnish them with men; that the employing printers were beginning to demand better printers and more of them; and he proposed to save what little reputation he had left, and get into a more honorable business than that of a male procurer. Williamson, the typothetæ agent who has been collecting and bringing into Detroit the scum and riff-raff of the country, is now loudly denounced by the police authorities and the business men of Detroit, as well as by the alleged printers he has deposited here. The result will be that when the trouble is settled here, and Mr. Whirl, the commander-in-chief of the typothetæ forces, is taught a much-needed lesson, Detroit Typographical Union No. 18 will be stronger than ever before, and the employing printers of Detroit will hesitate a long time before they will become involved in another struggle with the typographical union.

On August 26 the Morning Tribune suspended publication. The Evening News and Tribune were under one management, and following the demise of the latter the News appeared as a continuous performance, issuing a morning edition and adopting the name Detroit News. In the shuffle about forty-five employes were let out, about ten being printers. Vague rumors are abroad to the effect that a new morning paper will enter the field, and we all fervently hope Mme. Rumor may be right for once.

In my correspondence last month I stated the pressmen were out with us, which was a misstatement, but not intentional. At the date of writing we expected such action, and the editor of THE JOURNAL received my correction too late to publish.

WALTER O'DAY.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

For the first time in over a quarter of a century a strike occurred in Syracuse on Tuesday, September 12, in an effort by the job and book printers to secure the eight-hour workday on January 1, 1906.

The response to the strike order was general, only three members remaining at work. Foreman Richardson, B. Hermon Smith, proofreader, and Ida Morrison, machine operator, at the Mason Press, decided to violate their obligations and refused to come out. They were expelled from No. 55 at a special meeting held on September 17.

Among those who came out were five linotype operators at the Mason Press. The firm secured one man named Hall, who had a machine at the Wesleyan Methodist Publishing Society and who had refrained from joining the union because of his religious scruples.

At the present writing, September 19, thirty-seven men are still out. Several offices have signed the agreement and more signatures are expected most any day now. Some of the boys have been getting in a little work subbing around on the newspapers.

A special meeting of the union was held September 17 and was attended by nearly the entire membership. The eight-hour and executive committees, who have charge of the strike, submitted their reports, which were enthusiastically received by the members present, and rattling speeches of encouragement and predictions of an early victory were made by several members.

It has often been charged that the book and job men generally were not as aggressive in unionism as the newspaper employes, but in this case all those out responded willingly, and all declare they will stick it out to a successful finish.

The payment of strike benefits began September 18 and will be continued until a settlement is reached.

Matters are in charge of the eight-hour and executive committees, all the members of which are working hard to bring about a satisfactory ending of the difficulty.

Donald MacPherson, late of the Post-Standard and Telegram, left for Auburn, N. Y., last week, where he will run a machine on the Bulletin. He held down Syracuse for quite a number of years and was generaly well known and popular among the printer boys. It had been charged that "Mac" used a curling iron or curl papers to produce the curly effect of his raven locks, but the charge is baseless, for he confided to me himself that the curls were made by sleeping with his head in a bag they used to keep the italic in on the Hamilton Spectator, and he recommends the treatment to all who desire the same results as he has obtained.

Benjamin Finkelstein, an operator on the New York Herald, is laid up at his home here with a sprained ankle, the result of an accident at Chautauqua lake while bathing. He was spending his vacation there and was having a great time until the accident occurred. Ben is able to be about on crutches, but will not be in shape to return to work for a month yet. He learned his trade on the old Courier here and was one of the original machine men on the Standard. He has been in New York for twelve years, mostly on the Herald.

Edward McCormick, of the government printing office at Washington, paid Syracuse his regular semi-annual visit last month and took in the state fair and carnival. Ed is one of the old Standard and Post-Standard boys and is very popular with all who know him. He speaks well of Washington, and says all the former Syracusans there are doing well.

Frank Hughes, sr., has returned to work in the Post-Standard adroom, after a long battle with appendicitis, in which he finally won out.

Miss Nellie Mosely, of the proofroom of the Post-Standard, who was nearly suffocated by escaping gas, resumed work last week.

Among the visitors here after the Toronto convention were John ("Ji") Ross, of Scranton, Pa., who is an oldtimer here; Thomas F. Kane, of Boston; John Keating, of Denver, and Charles ("Kid") Bowman, of Cleveland. All expressed surprise at the wonderful growth of Syracuse and also at the great changes in the printing business in the Salt City.

Another oldtime printer of Syracuse has passed into the great beyond in the person of Lucas Phinney, who died in Rochester last month. Luke was born here in 1838 and had worked on a number of Syracuse newspapers that are now but journalistic memories, including the Star, Chronicle and Standard. He also worked on the Herald and Journal, and had held down Boston, Providence, Buffalo, Rochester, Norwich, New York, Worcester and other eastern cities. Luke was a veteran of the civil war, having served with distinction in Company A, First New York Mounted Rifles. He is survived by his widow and one brother. He was particularly well known in Utica, where he was one of the foremost members of No. 62.

John F. O'Brian, who carries an Omaha (Neb.) traveling card, is at the Hospital of the Good Shepherd here recovering from an operation for rupture. He is doing well at the present time and expects to leave the hospital in a week.

J. Bumpus Jones arrived in town September 19 from the west, and reports everything bright generally in that section for the success of the eight-hour day.

Owen J. Donnelly, who represented Binghamton Typographical Union at the International Typographical convention at Colorado Springs in 1896, and who has been a member of No. 55 for a number of years, has removed to Binghamton. Mr.

Digitized by Google

Donnelly has been an active worker in No. 55 since he came here, and his removal is greatly regretted by the members of No. 55 and also by many friends outside of the business.

Samuel Salisbury, of the Anaconda (Mont.) Standard, called on old friends here last month. Mr. Salisbury had the misfortune to be bereft of his wife, and was accompanying the remains to Sandy Creek, N. Y., their former home, for interment. He looked as though Montana agreed with him. Sam is one of the best boys that ever claimed Syracuse as his town, and those here who remembered him were pleased to see him again.

John L. Chrystal, foreman of the Standard at Anaconda, Mont., who used to manipulate the "humpback" on the old Standard, paid Syracuse a visit after the convention at Toronto, which he attended as an "X." He was cordially greeted by his numerous friends here and enjoyed his sojourn immensely.

Our old friends Percy Monroe and Michael Angelo Hayes are now located in Newark, N. J., and each has said to the other, "Your move."

Billy Dickson and C. B. Flanagan were here last month from the west, and went east after a week's stay.

The Post-Standard announced, September 19, that George A. Somarindyck, formerly proofreader, foreman and business manager of the Post-Standard, who left here in August to assume the position of business manager of the Memphis (Tenn.) News-Scimitar, has been promoted to be general manager of that paper.

Charles H. Corregan, who has an action pending against No. 55 in the state court of appeals, came out of Lyman Bros.' job office with the rest of the boys. He has been performing on a monotype machine since the courts made the union reinstate him. Charley is all right in principle, though he is chock full of germs of the DeLeon brand of socialism and is making a fight against No. 55. He has won so far on technicalities, but No. 55 is confident that the court of appeals will decide against him on the facts in the case. F. A. WARD.

PONTIAC, MICH.

The writer recently made a visit into the central part of the state, and was surprised to learn how some of the country editors are working to help defeat the International Typographical Union in its eight-hour campaign. The one in mind (at St. Johns) asked a union man to go to Chicago, where he could obtain steady work in a nice office at $19 per week. The man approached replied that he was after "an eight-hour workday" and not other men's jobs. At one time this same country editor had to give up two jobs because of his stubbornness and refusal to join the International Typographical Union. One time in particular was when the Detroit Free Press was unionized. And now he is knocking. The editor in question has granted his force a nine-and-one-half-hour workday.

The eight-hour day is only a short way off—three months.

It would be an oddity if one or two of the regularly "absent members" of No. 512 would attend meetings. One once a month. Ginger up, boys, and get in the game. Show that you take an interest in your organization.

Frank Beach and Miss Margaret McHenry were married a short time ago. Mr. Beach recently took out his "withdrawal" card and accepted a position as mail carrier in the local postoffice. No. 512 wishes them success in their new life.

September 20 the Associated Press actually reported the victory of the printers in Albany, N. Y. Something wrong, seems to me.

ROY V. HENDERSON.

DENVER, COLO.

G. A. Hoffman, late candidate for delegate, has temporarily, at least, quit the business and is engaged in promoting the Elks' souvenir for next year's convention at this place, he being a member of that order.

The strike, or contemplated strike, lockout, etc., throughout the country has brought an influx of printers to Denver, more than has been in evidence for some time, and we are flooded with operators, admen and jobmen. And to make it worse, work is exceedingly dull here at present, with no immediate prospect of improving.

Preparations are being talked over looking to the proper entertainment by No. 49 of those delegates, has-beens, auxiliaries and visitors who pass our way en route to the fifty-second convention at Colorado Springs next year, and it is safe to say that every ticket will read via Denver, in memory of the convention held here in the late eighties. Just what No. 49 will do, who, or how much, can't be gauged as yet, but it is a safe bet that it will be the right thing and plenty of it. The exes are also in process of incubation into an association and will pull off something, if nothing more than a Mulligan, with which, I have heard it said, some printers are familiar, while en route.

The Smith-Brooks Company has bought a building next door to their present location for $35,000, and will remodel, enlarge or erect, to meet the demands of their present business. And they work only eight hours, and have for several years. How about this, Brer Macintyre?

By the way, Macintyre, he of "teapot" notoriety, stopped over in town on the way back from the scene of his discomfiture at 'Frisco lately, and the employers here treated him to a little eating. It is said that the way he took on over the outcome in the coast city was pitiful, and the burr on his tongue was nearly as bothersome as a felon on an operator's finger. Whom the gods, etc. He got no comfort from employers here, except to go on home and settle with the International Typographical Union, as he was up against the real thing now.

In a conversation with a big business man of San Francisco the other day, the matter of the re-election of Mayor Schmitz of that city was touched on. The business man, when asked how about it, said: "Of course, he will be elected; the labor fellows will all vote for him, and so will the business element, democrats and republicans; as we know when we have our kind of a man, not hampered by politics and politicians. And I am a citizens' alliance man, too, and a republican. We can't say anything openly, go to the primaries and vote for some one else, but when election day comes around we vote for the Dutchman. He is our kind, and is the best mayor for business 'Frisco ever had." And wouldn't that stop your distributor?

At the meeting of the State Federation of Labor at Salida, week of September 16, President John E. Collett, of Denver Union No. 49, was elected president, new officers selected, the federation affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and radical changes made in the constitution, and it is expected that the new blood will put the organization on a firm footing and make it a power for good. It marks the passing of the Western Federation of Miners as the dominating factor in the state body. No. 49 was represented by John E. Collett, John Oliver, Frank Pulver, John Sterling and A. E. Parkinson, while Al T. May went from the trades assembly.

There is no fear of strike among any of the typographical unions in this state over the eight-hour day. Fort Collins is experiencing some trouble with one office, but Organizer Birdsall hopes to have that straightened out in a jiffy. Anything but eight hours is unpopular hereabouts.

Labor day was celebrated in good shape. No. 49 did not officially turn out, but about 100 volunteered and marched, making a good showing, with banner and badges. By the way, the latter were secured by those participating in the parade from No. 49 by voluntary donations, and printed at the eleventh hour. Hard to keep enthusiasm down.

The action of the convention in the matters before it pleased the big majority of the members here, especially the firm stand on the eight-hour day. The decision of the executive council to force the hand of the typothetæ, and not sit idly by and let them precipitate trouble by piecemeal and sap our resources by picking the battleground, is also pleasing. The fight was bound to come, and the only way to cure a cancer is to take it in time and cut deep. We are ready to do our part, whatever it may be, financial or otherwise, and a dollar a week assessment, if necessary, will be cheerfully paid, as it is realized that to maintain our present advantages without encroachment it will be necessary to put all on the same footing the country over. On with the fight, and there is to be no second best.

Harry Waring, who represented Cripple Creek at Cincinnati, but lately on the News, is leasing at Cripple and is in a fair way to strike it rich. Hope so, and that he will acquire the private car habit and donate to the Cummings fund.

The Merchants' Publishing Company recently purchased the building they occupy on Arapahoe street, paying up in the five figures therefor. Not so many years ago this firm was a small one. It also is on an eight-hour basis. And yet they tell us in the east that to go to eight hours would ruin business, as no one is making any money.

The Great Western Printing Company last month purchased a printing plant, consisting of two machines, job presses, job type, etc., from the Swedish Printing Company, paying upward of $4,000 therefor. The plant was worth much more. This Great Western is composed of local printers and pressmen. They have a full plant, do lots of work, with two machines, bindery, presses, etc., and came up from a shoestring to a great business. They also work eight hours a day and accomplished all this under it. Inform Macintyre, Ellis, etc., by wire or letter.

Delegates Sherman and Vander Perel and has-beens Keating and Garman returned from the Toronto fiesta greatly pleased, and the two latter properly trimmed. All report a strenuous time.

Quite a number of printers got caught in the two recent savings bank failures here; it is, perhaps, surprising that any printer had money enough to put in a bank, except that named after a former ruler of Egypt. But they did and are now lamenting.

Summer vacations, camping and fishing trips, etc., served to make subbing pretty fair on the papers for a few weeks. But all are back now and the work is pretty poor. There were fifteen subs working on the Post one Saturday night recently, out of seventeen machines.

Talk about hard luck happening to printers with money! "Deacon" Downs hit town with a few dollars from Greeley, and was touched for $13 while viewing the Labor day parade. C. M. Shelton, from Little Rock, after accumulating a sum and blood poison in his hand by pitching hay on a ranch, and holding down a country "sit" for a few weeks, was relieved of about $40 while on his way to the city on a railroad train. He was asleep. R. F. Hundley came here from Sioux Falls with $70. He was in a Pullman and some gentleman kindly removed the aforesaid from under his pillow while he was slumbering. This was during Grand Army week. There are three morals: Don't have money, don't sleep and don't work.

C. E. Comstock, an oldtime member of No. 49, has been running a daily at Salida for some time, and was instrumental in getting the proprietors of that city to sign up an eight-hour agreement with the union there.

The country proprietors of this neck o' the woods are, as a whole, strong supporters of unionism as applied to our craft, speaking good words for our fight and invariably hiring our members whenever opportunity presents.

HARVEY E. GARMAN.

LOWELL, MASS.

This renowned "City of Spindles," made famous sixty years ago by Charles Dickens in his "American Notes," now makes its initial bow to united printerdom. Among the first to be called upon by President Lynch to battle for the eight-hour movement, we are now in the throes of a strike, and the outlook is favorable. Upon the receipt of the executive council's ultimatum, Lowell Typographical Union No. 310 met and acted unanimously. On September 11 the master printers were called upon to grant the eight-hour day, to take effect January 1, 1906, and to give a favorable answer within forty-eight hours, or the men would quit work. The answer was unfavorable, all the union men and women quit work, and on Thursday morning, September 14, assembled and buckled on their armor for the battle. Our forces are well manned by President F. A. Speed, Secretary-Treasurer W. H. Brown and efficient committees. In all forty-seven printers came out of nine shops. The strike is on less than a week and five shops have signed the eight-hour agreement. The other four shops are crippled, and despite all endeavors of time and money, but a few boys have been secured to take the strikers' places. On all sides the principle of the eight-hour day is conceded as just, and it is inevitable that we will win.

A volume could be written about the incidents of this strike, for which you have no space now, but one important incident must not be overlooked. On the second day of the strike Humphrey O'Sullivan, founder of the famous "O'Sullivan Rubber Heel," joined our union. Thirty-one years ago Mr. O'Sullivan was a printer and a member of New York "Big 6." He came to Lowell, worked at the printing trade a while, drifted into the shoe business, and eventually into the rubber heel manufacture. Today he is a man of large means, a fine fellow in every walk of life, and has a great love for the friends of his youth, the typos. The eight-hour movement for the craft awakened all the enthusiasm of the old days, so upon being initiated into the Lowell Union, in acknowledging the applause which greeted him, he said: "Boys, this is one of the happiest moments of my life. I feel at home among you. The days of my youth are brought back to me; the grand old printing trade, to which I owe all the measure of success that has blessed me, has my warmest support and my best wishes. You are struggling for an eight-hour working day and you will win. If I can assist in any way, command me. If money will win, the victory is yours. If you stand together, I will pay the bill."

The noble generosity of Mr. O'Sullivan made the typos almost dumb, but after a while they recovered their senses, and you could hear the thunders of applause several blocks away. Indeed, it breaks no privacy when it is recorded that many present were affected to tears. And Mr. O'Sullivan's words were no idle boast, for he has since presented the Lowell Union with $500, saying: "There is more where that came from when you need it."

So, all hail! to Mr. O'Sullivan. His noble generosity is well worth heralding from one end of printerdom to the other.

You shall hear more from Lowell later, Mr. Editor.

D. A. SULLIVAN.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.

We are at it.

In obedience to President Lynch's telegram the executive board of Typographical Union No. 94 obtained contracts from every office under its jurisdiction for an eight-hour day, excepting two, and the men who were employed in these offices walked out. The strike at this writing has been very successful for the union. The two offices on strike are the American Typefounders Company and the Jersey City Printing Company. About forty men are involved in the struggle, and not a sign of weakness has been shown on the part of the men out. No. 94 is able financially to carry the fight on indefinitely, but a long struggle is not anticipated. The two shops mentioned have been very unfortunate in securing men.

The State Eight-Hour Association met in this city Sunday, September 17, and a rousing meeting it was. Allan Ball, a member of No. 94, is president, having been elected at the August meeting, which was held in Atlantic City. Kenneth M. Forbes, John S. Fisher and Fred N. Cornell were the delegates from No. 94.

Jersey City will be an eight-hour city January 1, 1906.

F. N. CORNELL.

OFFICIAL BATTLE CRY OF THE I. T. U.

We propose to sell to the employer eight hours out of twenty-four, and we will do as we please with the remaining sixteen.

BOSTON, MASS.

I want to say to our critics, and particularly Mr. Clark, of New Orleans, that the Society of Typographical Journal Correspondents is not a "fan" organization, but one with a well-defined and wholesome purpose in view. The argument that it should be dissolved because some unscrupulous person might get in control and "use it for his own benefit or the benefit of his colleagues and friends" is extremely childish, and unworthy of a union man who is striving to advance the interests of his organization in every possible way. Why not advance the same argument in regard to the International Typographical Union? The society is not a secret one; its doings are published broadcast; it is a voluntary affair; its object is to benefit and educate the printers of this country and wield a wholesome influence over the whole labor movement, and, until we show a disposition to do wrong, we deny the right of any man to presume that we anticipate such action, or the right of anybody to interfere with our organization. We are willing to be judged by our actions, and we refuse to be muzzled.

I learned from contact with the JOURNAL scribes at Toronto that Dirks isn't dangerous, Chinn is a man of few words, Fear isn't afraid of anybody, Weiner isn't a soak, Garman is not old enough for a G. A. R. man, Saltus might like to, but didn't, and Knott, while tied down to his desk pretty close, wasn't snarly. While the correspondents' banquet didn't materialize, I feel sure that the reason was not because Dirks made them Fear that there Waudby no good Cooke available, or that the man who served the Weiner would Saltus, or that Bramwood Knott give us Kreiters our full Meade of Chinn. However, we Cantwell Alter matters now, but next year there'll be a Hartnett spread out Home, because we Lovett.

P. J. Guerin, of the Globe, secretary of the Franklin Typographical Society, has been appointed by Governor Douglas a member of the Franklin centennial committee, which will "arrange for and carry out fitting exercises for the proper celebration, on January 17, 1906, of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Benjamin Franklin." The exercises will be held in Boston, and the committee is authorized to co-operate with a like committee to be appointed by the city government. The state has appropriated $500 for the celebration and the city of Boston is expected to duplicate this amount. The Franklin Typographical Society is also planning a celebration.

The officers of the Boston allied printing trades council are considering a proposition made by a number of business men to establish a large printing office in this city. The local typothetæ undoubtedly intends to make a fight, and during the strike that will follow the demand for the eight-hour day such an office will not only give employment to our members, but will insure business men against loss of time in getting first-class work. The project is worthy of serious consideration, and will undoubtedly be successfully carried out if undertaken.

The resolution which I had the honor to present at the Birmingham convention, providing that "all men called out on strike shall receive strike benefits, whether employed in a union office or not," and which was defeated at that time, was refought at the Toronto convention. I had to fight alone at Birmingham, but some of the ablest men in the convention supported it at Toronto, which shows that, although defeated again, it is coming. The executive council stated that it proposed to follow that policy in the eight-hour-day fight anyway; but, if then, why not all the time? And if it is to be followed at all, why not make it legal by placing it in the book of laws? I have yet to meet the man who can show me that one man's card is not equally as good as another man's, and does not entitle him to the same privileges and protection, no matter where he works. And the union men who work in non-union offices are generally the best brand of union men, because they don't have to belong to the union to work there. I am still from Missouri on this question.

Say, but that Nesbit is a versatile cuss! He seems able to write poetry, crack a joke, talk shop or deliver an oration with equal facility. But he is away off on the originator of that "On to Tor-on-to" slogan. It first appeared exclusively in the Boston letter of April, 1904, and again in September of the same year. It hardly conforms to Brother Nesbit's conception of the "Boston varnacular," but it went, nevertheless.

The policy of the executive council in at once demanding the eight-hour day for our members in cities where no agreement exists, is unquestionably a good one. The typothetæ evidently hoped to worry us by establishing "open shops" prior to January 1, but the action of the executive council places them on the defensive, where they belong and where they must remain until the eight-hour day is universally achieved.

No. 13's missionary committee, whose duty it is to carry the gospel of trades unionism to the benighted ministers, is doing good work. The committee consists of Charles G. Wilkins, J. Curtis Ellis and Henry Sterling. The latter delivered an address in the Blachmont Congregational Church on September 10, and the committee has invitations to appear before several ministerial bodies.

At the last meeting of the book and job branch it was decided to hold a smoke talk in the near future, in order to reach some of the non-union printers in this section and acquaint them with the advantages they will receive by coming along with us. It was voted to recommend to No. 13 that if the office of organizer is to be continued permanently it be made elective instead of appointive.

Isn't it a rather peculiar coincidence that those members of the typothetæ who advertise that they are running "open shops" are also advertising for non-union men? It only goes to prove our contention that the "open shop" is the non-union shop.

I hear that Robert T. Murray, of Halifax, N. S., deputy king's printer, died about the middle of August. He was one of the best friends the "down home" printers ever had. Fred Smith, president of No. 130, has been appointed to the vacancy.

A meeting was held September 20, in the parlors of the Woman's Educational League, Boylston street, for the purpose of opening a charter list for a woman's auxiliary to No. 13, and by next month I hope to be able to report a flourishing organization in this city. Secretary Henry Sterling has taken hold of the matter in his usual earnest manner, and, assisted by the writer, is fast making an auxiliary here an assured fact. Any lady member, wife, mother or unmarried sister of a member of No. 13 who has not yet received an invitation to join is hereby requested to do so, and help to win the eight-hour day for the printers.

Some "rat" burglars broke into Secretary Sterling's office August 25, but all they got away with was a back-number typewriter and some postage stamps. It is supposed they had heard of the fund No. 13 is accumulating for the eight-hour fight; but we don't leave our "stuff" lying around loose.

The harmonious settlement of the "Philadelphia situation" is a source of deep gratification in this section. With a solid front for the eight-hour day on the Atlantic seaboard, as well as throughout the entire jurisdiction, the outlook is rosy. And our successes so far show which way the wind blows.

Boston News Writers' Union No. 1 donated $25 to the college fund of the Newsboys' Union at its August meeting. The newsboys are raising $5,000 to send one of their members through college. No. 13 made a donation to help out, as did also the book and job branch.

The erudite and verbose editor of the New England Printing Trades Journal mixes compliment and sarcasm with great facility. His use of adjectives is at times postively alarming. Outside of that, however, his Labor day edition was a very creditable one.

F. H. Presby, of the Globe, had a narrow escape from drowning at Silver Lake, Brockton, September 3, by the upsetting of a boat. One of Frank's companions, whom he tried to rescue, was drowned, and he himself was assisted ashore in an exhausted condition.

Joseph B. Gill has been endorsed by the book and job branch for International organizer for Cambridge and Norwood. "Joe" is an earnest worker, and his well-known hustling ability makes him a very desirable man for the position.

Experience with the Canadian customs authorities at convention time suggested the thought that appearances are sometimes deceitful. A man might have a dozen pairs of shoes in his grip and still not be a runner, or even a walker.

Municipal ownership, the referendum and single tax are themes upon which public addresses will be delivered in Boston and throughout New England during the winter by lecturers of the Henry George Lecture Association.

Delegates J. Vander Perel and E. S. Sherman, of Denver, visited Boston after the close of the Toronto convention, as a part of an extended tour before returning home.

Willard Small, of Newark, N. J., a well-known Boston printer in the old days, passed through town on his way to and from Maine, where he spent his vacation.

A. W. Preece, of the American, has returned to work, after a five weeks' siege of sciatic rheumatism.

The amendment to the "priority law" proposed by Delegate Croft, of Boston, and adopted by the Toronto convention, removing the sixty-day time limit for reinstatement when a man is laid off to reduce the force, is a step in the right direction. A man laid off for the above reason should always have the preference when an increase of the force comes.

Delegate John P. Kennedy, wife and son, of Minneapolis, came east after the convention, visiting their old home in Nashua for several days, and calling on old friends in the Hub, leaving for home after Labor day.

Organizer Scott, of the New England district, is a busy man these days. He is meeting with success in the eight-hour fight everywhere he goes. He is the right man in the right place.

I am told that our old friend "Si" Gamble is to be a candidate for delegate to Colorado Springs from "Big Six" next year.

Percy Rolfe, of the Globe, has gone to Rutland for the benefit of his health. He was accompanied by his wife and child.

Because a man has no teeth and must eat soft foods, it does not necessarily follow that he must drink soft drinks.

John F. Busche, of New York, he of the transparent card at Toronto, paid a visit to this city last month.

R. W. Townsend, of the Globe, also of Klondike fame, has returned to work, after a severe illness.

Eight hours—that's all. Isn't that enough?

Can those Toronto boys entertain—what?

Dried apples make a swell feed.

Going out Home? HERBERT W. COOKE.

NOTES FROM THE UNION PRINTERS' HOME.

Thomas N. McGill, Cleveland No. 53, was recently admitted as an invalid, and was assigned to the hospital annex. George Mesick, Chicago No. 16, has also joined us, and entered the same department.

Frank I. Schwartzel, for many years a member of Dayton No. 57, and a linotype operator, was one of our August visitors. Frank has been recuperating his health in California and Arkansas for a year past, and was en route for his home city.

Charles M. Laughlin, a Home resident from Norfolk, Va., was a member of the chorus at the recent Garden of the Gods Chautauqua. Charley, besides being a vocal basso profundo, and a regular member of St. Mary's church choir, is an accomplished performer on the violin and guitar.

All our residents are highly pleased that the International Typographical Union convention will be held in Colorado Springs next year. Thanks to those inimitable hustlers, Superintendent Charles Deacon, John F. Jones, Charles M. Carter, Delegate W. A. Snyder, and President W. J. Snider (all of No. 82), ably assisted by Henry Russell Wray, of the city chamber of commerce, and other "boosters." No. 49's delegates and visitors also helped to "push it along."

J. A. J. Birdsall, former resident of the Home from Little Rock No. 92, and recently re-elected financial secretary of No. 82, has gone into the tobacco business. Though over seventy-two years of age, Mr. Birdsall is a living refutation of the Osler theory. He prints the following on a neat business card: "The Arkansaw Traveler, J. A. J. Birdsall, Mining Exchange Cigar Stand, Colorado Springs, Colo. Yes, I am from Arkansaw. Now Laugh, Durn Ye."

Mrs. Nellie V. Wilson, our lady resident from Columbia Union No. 101 (Washington, D. C.), recently paid a week's visit to friends in Boulder, Colo.

Mrs. Irene M. Putnam, daughter (from Michigan), and George E. Clark (member of Columbia Union No. 101), son of our veteran newspaper publisher and resident printer, Merrils H. Clark, were recent visitors to their father here. Theirs was a pleasant family reunion. The old gentleman is now in his eightieth year, but has lost none of his optimistic geniality. The reunited family had a pleasant carriage drive through the Garden of the Gods, Manitou, and other scenic attractions in the Pike's Peak region.

Superintendent Deacon and his daughter, Henrietta, returned from their eastern trip August 27. Miss Deacon remained with relatives in St. Louis, while her father attended the Toronto convention. They were absent about three weeks, and report an enjoyable time.

Robert Middleton, admitted from Seattle Union No. 202, in April, 1904, died in the hospital annex September 4, 1905, of paralysis, aged seventy-one years. Mr. Middleton was a native of Quebec, Canada, and leaves a sister in British Columbia. While seemingly in perfect health when he entered the Home, he had been gradually growing feeble during the last few months. He was generous to a fault, and would divide his last pittance with an unfortunate comrade. His funeral services, which were conducted by Reverend Wilcox, were well attended, and the sermon was of the most impressive character. The interment was in Evergreen cemetery.

The national letter carriers' convention recently held at Portland, Ore., accepted the donation of 160 acres from Colorado Springs, and voted to build a sanitarium and home on land adjoining our own.

At the present writing the city is overcrowded with G. A. R. excursionists. Among the old army veterans who visited the Home were Andrew D. Newbold, of Chicago No. 16, and Richard L. Tweed, of Boston No. 13. They were cordially received and entertained by residents and their former typo associates.

The residents of the Home have received a complimentary invitation from the management of the Empire theater to attend the Wednesday and Thursday matinees. The courtesy was extended through Charles M. Loughlin, one of our old resident musicians from Norfolk, Va. Verily our "boys" need not feel entirely isolated when so many little favors are showered upon them from citizens of Colorado Springs. The Empire presents first-class vaudeville and musical entertainment.

The writer recently received a neat typewritten acknowledgment from Passenger Agent D. A. MacWatters of his receipt of the Kirkwood (Mo.) Courier, containing a brief writeup of Colorado attractions, including our recent trip over the "Short Line" road to the gold districts.

Jeremiah McCarthy and John Taylor, both from "Big Six," have joined our big congregation of retired oldtimers.

A delegation from the Home recently visited the Empire theater and presented Mrs. Ahearn, novelty gymnast, with a handsome bouquet of flowers, gathered from our gardens. The recipient is the daughter of R. K. Potter, superintendent of the Hall Printing Company, of Chicago.

Preparations are already being made to entertain the International Typographical Union delegates and visitors next August. The Colorado Springs printers and people expect to outdo all past performances in making things pleasant for our typo brethren.

Capt. H. P. Macloon was among the Home visitors to the G. A. R. convention at Denver. He met many of his old army comrades of the Twenty-Fifth Missouri, and enjoyed the grand reunion of war veterans greatly. Louis Herman and other residents also attended the convention.

The tourist visitors to our institution this year exceed in number the records of all previous seasons. We hope to be able to count the registered names when the rush is over.

Will Hicks, member of Cincinnati No. 3, accompanied by his wife, recently visited the Home, en route for San Francisco. They were entertained by George C. Beach, one of our residents from that city.

A. B. Stindle, admitted from Atchison No. 113, last July, vacated and returned to his home town September 3, on the advice of Dr. Christopher. E. G. F. Hazle, from Columbia No. 101, vacated, after being here two weeks, and returned to Washington, D. C.

George M. Willets was admitted from Little Rock No. 92 recently, and was assigned to the hospital annex as an invalid. Leroy W. Kennedy, of No. 8, was also admitted to the hospital. Oscar Howard, a resident from Wheeling No. 79, has received letters patent on an improved book and job chase. The invention looks like a success.

Miss Robeson, our amiable assistant nurse, and several inmates attended the recent Elks' barbecue at Green Mountain Falls.

Mrs. Annie Ferguson, relict of Billy Ferguson, who was secretary of New York Union No. 6 from 1891 until his unfortunate demise in January, 1897, resulting from asphyxiation, was a visitor to the Home recently, and met many of her and her deceased husband's oldtime friends and acquaintances. The lady was accompanied by a Mrs. G. M. Higgins, both of whom were making a brief tour of the west before returning to New York city.

The following were some of the typographical visitors registered at the Home during August: Nellie Childers Smith, Denver; Will W. Mackey, Washoe Union No. 65; Bond Blue, Anaconda No. 255; Thomas M. Millis, Houston No. 87; Mrs. John J. Jacobson, Woman's Auxiliary No. 15 to Des Moines No. 118; Louis E. Brown, New York No. 6; Miss M. E. Pietz, Chicago No. 16; Miss Tillie Benson, Moline No. 107; Fred R. Walton, New York No. 6; J. D. O'Connell (and wife), Denver No. 49; H. E. Llewellyn Sterling, No. 282; F. D. Fitch, Madison No. 106; Ralph C. Cayler (and wife), Denver No. 49; Arthur F. Bartlett (wife and son), Morning Star, Indianapolis; Alvin Schwisher, Minneapolis No. 42; R. G. Allen (and wife), Des Moines No. 118; W. G. Waters, Sioux Falls No. 218; John L. Kennedy, Washington, D. C. (Columbia No. 101); S. C. Chatham, Guthrie (Okla.) No. 587; Will T. Henderson, Chicago No. 16, and L. P. Zibert, Nashville No. 20.

A lawn social near the rustic summer house and croquet fields on the Home grounds was enjoyed by a few friends and lady employes of the main building and annex on the evening of August 17. Songs and recitations and attempts at Virginia reels were some of the amusements indulged in, while music was supplied by Ed Mulligan, on a graphophone, and on the violin and guitar by Billy Wagner and Charley Laughlin. Miss Pearl Burr, a visitor from Washington, D. C., and who is spending the summer in Colorado Springs, was the principal entertainer on what was voted a pleasant evening. O. LANGFORD.

FRESNO, CAL.

W. S. ("Windy") Taylor, aged eighty-one, known to nearly every printer from Victoria, B. C., to San Diego, Cal., has just left the hospital, where he had been ill for over six months. Through the columns of THE JOURNAL he wants it known that the "old man" is as good as he was twenty years ago.

M. C. Walden, a member of No. 144, has started a job office, and says that things are going the easy way.

The Fresno Evening Tribune has been launched by the Scripps News Company. One machine has been installed and more improvements will be made as the business warrants.

Prosperity, in large letters, is looming up on the horizon for both the Republican and Democrat. Both offices will install double-deckers before the holiday season.

One initiation and one apprentice membership application for July.

Ray W. Baker, delegate to the convention at Toronto, wishes to express his thanks to those unions with whom it was his good fortune to come in contact while on his eastern trip, for the many courtesies extended.

The allied printing trades council, authorized by the typographical and pressmen's unions of Fresno, has been permanently organized, and is now ready to transact such business as may properly come before that body. The allied printing trades labels are being distributed and the old labels taken up. The officers are: A. C. Wrenn, president; W. L. Cochran, secretary. The council meets on the second Friday in each month.

Duncan A. James, editor of the local labor organ, was arrested on a criminal libel complaint recently. He had published the facts relative to an unfair butcher, who had resigned from the union to accept work in a non-union shop, and referred to him as a "scab." The case has been dismissed at the request of the complainant, who is now seeking reinstatement in the union.

At the last meeting of the union a committee was appointed to "round up" the country prints in the numerous small towns in the San Joaquin valley. The chances for boosting the eight-hour cause in this manner are encouraging, and takes from the large office the only opportunity they have to fill the vacancies in case of a strike.

Fresno will be represented at Colorado Springs next convention. HARRY BLUMENTHAL.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

No. 53, behind chapel banners, five hundred strong, turned out on Labor day. The parade was a success, and from start to finish was one grand eight-hour and union label demonstration.

The Detroit employing printers had one of their agents here trying to get non-union men. After one week of disappointments he packed up his belongings and left town in disgust.

The allied printing trades council is holding special meetings. The allied trades are unanimous in their support of No. 53 in its demand for eight hours. They all have the eight-hour fever.

It remains with the job men if they want the eight-hour day. They must stand together and not budge an inch, and the victory will be won. Now, all together, stand in one solid phalanx.

Max Hayes, who is organizing the country printers of Ohio, is leaving no chance for the bosses to get men in this state in case of trouble. He is unionizing everything in sight. The neighborhood of Cleveland hardly contains over a dozen non-unionists.

State and district conventions of printers are held monthly in Ohio. A good way to compare notes.

The proprietor of one open shop employing over a dozen card men expressed himself to one of our members as favoring the eight-hour workday, and another as thinking seriously of getting out of the teapot, even if he had to pay a fine, as he violated one of their alleged laws and he expects to be disciplined. There are several more in the same boat.

Got your Colorado "springs" ready for 1906?

All hail the eight-hour day and the union label.

Organize, boost, boom and pull together.

Mrs. John Lee, of Louisville, visited a few hours at my home on her way home from Toronto.

At a special meeting of No. 53, on the evening of September 15, the new job scale, calling for $18 weekly and an eight-hour day, was adopted. Much enthusiasm prevailed. There were over five hundred present. JOSEPH WEINER.

OFFICIAL BATTLE CRY OF THE I. T. U.

We propose to sell to the employer eight hours out of twenty-four, and we will do as we please with the remaining sixteen.

MAILERS' TRADE DISTRICT UNION.

October 18, 1905, was the date set for the vote on the proposed amendments to the Mailers' Trade District Union constitution passed at the Toronto convention. The definition of what the mailing business is will be one of the important changes; a committee to be appointed by the president of each local on the auto mailing machine, and notice given as to the inception of the eight-hour proposition.

More business was done at our recent convention than at any of the previous gatherings, and the delegates were ever ready to do their duty.

The delegates expressed themselves as highly pleased at the manner in which they were entertained by the Toronto mailers. Many souvenirs were the presents given by our Canadian brothers.

After the convention most of the delegates, together with President Mulcahy, stopped off at Buffalo and whispered encouragement into the ears of the Buffalo mailers while touring the different newspapers. A meeting was called Sunday, but was slimly attended by the local mailers, and the usual number of promises were made to do better.

The delegates elected by the Cleveland, San Francisco and Kansas City unions were among the missing, and the next time we hope these locals will make good by being represented.

"Charley" Hedrick was again with us, although not as a delegate, but before he left Toronto for home claimed that he enjoyed himself thoroughly and had a good time. Charley has worked hard for his local and should be given credit for the good he has done.

All mailers' unions are to begin working under the eight-hour law January 1, 1906, and those not enjoying the eight-hour privilege now will kindly notify the secretary of the trade district.

We hope to learn that the New York Mailers' Union was successful in getting its new scale.

The secretaries of the Detroit, Louisville, Minneapolis, Albany and Buffalo locals will kindly write me in regard to per capita tax to this union.

The selection of Herbert Cooke for the head of the Journal correspondents' society was a choice well made, and every one is pleased.

Many thanks to the Toronto mailers.

ROBERT T. ALLEN.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

As the newspapers have made known in every "nook and cranny" of the country, we have a new public printer, and through the same medium the circumstances of the change, though at this writing the appointment is only as "acting." But that it will be made permanent no one doubts, and probably has been ere these lines are printed. Oscar J. Ricketts is an Illinois man, as is his predecessor. In his youthful days he published newspapers at a couple of points, but came to this city and went to work in the government printing office some fifteen years or so ago. From composing and proofrooms he was promoted to be private secretary of Public Printer Frank W. Palmer in 1897. At the death of Chief Clerk William H. Collins, some three years ago, Captain Henry T. Brian was promoted from foreman of printing to chief clerk, and Mr. Ricketts was made foreman of printing. He is yet a young man—the youngest who has ever held the position—being still in his thirties, and enjoys the further distinction of being the only man who has ever been promoted from case or from any subordinate position in the office to that of public printer. And for the first time Columbia Typographical Union has the felicity of furnishing a public printer, though nearly all his predecessors have been honored by being placed on her rolls as honorary members. The popularity of the appointment was attested by the number of floral pieces sent to Mr. Ricketts' room, not alone from employes, but from those outside of the office, and especially the newspaper men.

It was with much pride that the members of this union learned that Delegate Joe M. Johnson had been a conspicuous success at Toronto, though with no surprise, for Mr. Johnson's ability is too well known and recognized for any doubt on that score to exist in this city. It was not alone as chairman of the committee on laws that he shone, but on the two occasions that President Lynch honored him and us by calling him to the chair he presided with the grace and ability that distinguished him during the two years that he was president of Columbia Union. Delegate and Mrs. Vander Perel, of Denver, came by way of this city on their return from Toronto, and were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson during the several days they put in sightseeing in the national capital, departing from here for Fort Wayne, Ind., where they were to visit relatives before returning to Denver.

Another visitor to Washington after the convention was ex-Delegate C. C. Houston, of Atlanta, who represented that union at Detroit in 1899. Mr. Houston represented his county in the Georgia house of representatives for five years, and won the compliment from the commercial bodies of having been the best representative the county had ever had. His present occupation is as proofreader on the Constitution. He called on friends and was taken through the government printing office, for which he expressed his admiration.

We have another globe-trotter in Europe in the person of Joseph Gibson, of the government printing office, who sailed for Queenstown, Ireland, the latter part of August, to spend two months in the British isles and continental Europe. This is his second tour, the first having occurred two years ago, when he became so enamored of Europe that he immediately planned for another visit.

A new weekly paper was started here about the 1st of September, called Graft, the editor and proprietor of which is Col. W. J. Elliott, formerly of Columbus, Ohio, who ran the Globe here two or three years ago. Graft is devoted to the exposition of the gentle art which gives it its name. Whether it will have a more prosperous career than Colonel Elliott's previous venture remains to be seen. In the number which I saw the editor "took out" largely on Commissioner General of Immigration Sargent, formerly chief of the Brotherhood of Railroad Firemen, and incidentally on a number of others.

Edwin C. Jones, ex-president and ex-delegate of Columbia Union, for several years foreman of one of the divisions of the government printing office, now chief clerk of the bureau of public printing of the Philippine government, has been in the city since about the 1st of September, visiting old friends, having six months' leave of absence. He came from the Philippines by way of the Suez canal, leaving the vessel at one of the Mediterranean ports and traveling across the continent to the British isles, where he visited his native Wales, having enjoyed Paris and a number of other cities en route. By his appearance the climate of the tropics agrees with him. He reported the Americans in Manila as well, satisfied and happy.

"Squire" W. F. Reed and F. A. Roderick, whom I mentioned in the September JOURNAL as touring in Canada, returned the latter part of August, delighted and enthusiastic. My friend Silas Bill Read, of Montreal, to whom I had commended the "Squire," sent me by his hands a handsome cigar-cutter, besides having made the "Squire" a present of Montreal while he was there.

A modest stone has been erected in Glenwood cemetery, in this city, over the remains of the late E. W. Patton, ex-delegate of Columbia Union, ex-trustee of the Home, and one of the editors and proprietors of the Trades Unionist, the legend reading as follows:

(Scroll.) PATTON.
(Square and compass.)
E. W. PATTON
FEB. 22, 1859—MAY 4, 1905.

The number attending the mass meeting of Columbia Union to protest against the action taken by the convention in regard to Shelby Smith was horribly exaggerated in some of the labor papers, being stated to be 75 per cent of the membership. As the membership is about 1,700, 75 per cent would be in the neighborhood of 1,300, four times as many as our hall will hold. There were about seventy-five of the protestants, which is less than 5 per cent of the membership, and many of the seventy-five were there merely from curiosity.

Oscar Nelson, an Iowa boy, who has been employed in the government printing office for several years, has been compelled by ill health to give up, and has gone to Los Angeles, Cal., where his family are.

Frank E. Pyne, of the Record division, government printing office, on July 5 underwent an operation for the removal of a tuberculous kidney, which was successful, and he has been enabled to return to his machine.

William Mulhoffer, who served his apprenticeship in the government printing office, and worked in all the different departments of the office, and who has since become a prosperous manufacturer of Cincinnati, recently visited the office and renewed acquaintances among the less prosperous.

Bookbinders' Union No. 4, of this city, succeeded in getting its new scale put into effect without resorting to a strike. By the new scale the minimum wage is $18 per week. The government printing office was not affected.

Hon. James Wilson, secretary of the department of agriculture, was waited on by a committee from the painters' union, who requested that the painters employed in that department be paid union wages. This is the way he talked to the committee, according to one of the city papers:

> I suppose you have come because you want more money. Your men are getting $3.20 a day now, and I reckon you want their pay raised to the union rate. Well, we are all workingmen and I will be glad to give you the increase you desire. It will mean more money for the farmers, too, and it is right that they should get it. The pay of the two painters employed by the department of agriculture will be increased from the present figure of $3.20 a day to the union rate of $3.50, and I will issue an order to that effect right away. Good day, gentlemen; any time I can serve you call on me. We are all toilers.

Ben F. Henry, an old employe of the government printing office, after an absence of about a dozen years, was recently reinstated. He is well known in many parts of the country.

William A. Hartman, for many years an employe of the government printing office, died on August 31, after an illness of some months, during part of which time he was able to attend to his duties. At one time he was assistant foreman of the job division, and later was a member of the prosperous printing firm of Hartman & Cadick. He was originally from Crawfordsville, Ind., and at his death was fifty-six years old.

Quite a number of temporary appointments have already been made. Among the number was George R. Gray, a long-ago compositor in the office, who at one time possessed a fine business of his own in this city.

Dave Pollock, who spent some months at the Home, and later half a year or so at Atlanta, returned and was reinstated in the government printing office recently.

Peter Harr, for thirty-five years manager of Pearson's book and job office in this city, died on September 12, after a long illness.

Mrs. Josephine Simpson, a member of Columbia Union and a compositor in the government printing office, made a visit to Germany during the past summer.

James K. Marks, of the Post, died on September 15 and was buried on the 18th, members of the Post and Times chapels acting as pallbearers. He was a soldier during the Spanish-American war.

A. F. Bloomer.

When harmony comes as a result of adhesion to principles it is all the sweeter, and incidentally the more enthusiastic. This was particularly true toward the end of the 1905 session of the International.

As a boomer Delegate Fennessy is a boomer.

If Delegate Draper should happen to read the Philadelphia Trades Union News of August 24 he will have effort to suppress his temper, because of the malicious attack upon his honesty of purpose. Of course those who know Mr. Draper will readily resent the imputation.

There was no compromise on the "Philadelphia Situation" at Toronto. No. 2 will do as directed by the executive council, or it will get no money. That is all.

The union printer who edits a labor paper should know the difference between criticism and slanderous utterances. Especially is this true of the printer who has worked on a newspaper. However, if the so-called editor did not know that there was a difference, he has been made aware of the fact. At any rate he can be taught, even though the sentence may be severe. The careful and sensible editor never stoops to slander and vilification.

Those Canadian fellows are royal entertainers to a moral certainty.

Toronto will be always green in our memory.

The eight-hour enthusiasm at the Toronto convention indexed the feeling at home. The unanimity was superbly great.

Those unions which have steadfastly disfranchised morning newspaper printers from attendance at union meetings because their regular meeting time was other than on a Sunday, will be compelled to change their meeting days. As a result there may be a different line of legislation in the future in some cities.

The hard and fast rule of allowing only $3 a day for hotel expenses for executive officers and organizers should be done away with by the referendum. Sometimes this sum is sufficient, but ofttimes it is totally inadequate.

The leaves with pay in the big printery have about reached the end, and the average printer is making good his taskful output.

It is hardly likely that Secretary Bramwood had his face made hairless in order to be eligible to a group of smooth-shaven printers that usually have their pictures taken during convention week. There was no improvement in looks.

"The experience was worth $1,000 to me," said John Hooper, who was one of the Washington (D. C.) visitors at Toronto. "I second the motion," said his tripmate, D. R. Lyons. Both gentlemen sing praises loud of the hospitality of the Canadian printers. And wisely, too, let it be said.

The tourist has again taken Washington into consideration, and the traveling "sub" is in evidence.

Typographical Journal Correspondents, asserted that he will drill the scribes to a higher standard. As long as the chalk line is obliterated, all's well.

Columbia's membership will swell about 200 or more by the first of December, and the one-half per cent assessment will likewise swell. Good.

Estimating the expenditure of money by printers who attended the Toronto convention, a fair sum would put the figures at $100,000. Much of this was spent in the Canadian metropolis, and the souvenir firms did a good business.

God bless the women! Their presence at Toronto gave dignity to the convention, and delight and pleasure was everywhere the direct result of their attendance. Let it be hoped that they will be proportionately numerous next year, and the next, and each succeeding twelve months. Again, God bless the women!

The irony of Fate; how forcefully it was evidenced at the recent International convention. At the Birmingham meeting, in 1901, the laws committee reported favorably upon the proposition to repeal section 81. One of the then Philadelphia delegates opposed the report in a vigorous, forcible and logical manner, citing an instance where he had been grossly maligned and an attempt made to besmirch his character by one Shelby Smith. The law was not repealed. And one Shelby Smith, also a delegate from Philadelphia, was the first, and let us hope he will be the only one, to have the law meted out to him. The way of the transgressor is indeed hard.

The first of January, 1906, and the eight-hour day, is nearing. Skirmishes with the United Typothetæ have been had. Victory has crowned the efforts of the union printer, and triumphant will be the contest for a righteous time in which to work. The additional period gained for rest and recreation will be occupied in a judicious and wise manner. But it is not the better part of wisdom to become intoxicated with success. Rather become more determined, in every sense, to make the contention a complete and wholesome success. Be firm and resolute.

The selection of Mrs. Ed Donnell as president of the Woman's International Auxiliary was a nice attestation of her ability, to say nothing of her worth and service as international secretary since the organization was formed. It was a fitting vote in a glorious cause, and it foretells continued success of the auxiliary.

It is amazing how eager some men are to write about what transpired at the recent International convention, even though they were not in attendance.

The hardest day's work a man does is the one following a vacation. And eight hours is much too long. Try it, if you never had the experience.

Here is an idea of how the force in the government printing office is made up. Last month Miss Wallace took her leave and went to her home at Portland, Me., while Miss Stagg visited her parents in Portland, Ore. The latter may not return to her case, as rumor has it that her next "take" will be a husband. God bless the women.

John A. Huston, who ably helped to take care of every one who attended the Washington convention, is visiting in Indiana. During his stay he says he will fish on the banks of the Wabash.

Vander Perel, of Denver, Colo., one of the 1905 laws committee, visited Washington before returning home. While here he and Mrs. Vander Perel were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joe M. Johnson, which fact alone is a guarantee that they enjoyed their stay.

To do or not to do is simply hesitation, and it is well known what follows when a fellow hesitates. Let this not be the case in the eight-hour movement.

The man who has another life to live, if he be a union printer, will have a chance when he gets the eight-hour day, and having this desire he will work the harder to obtain a shorter day.

A righteous people sometimes mete out justice by their votes. Humiliation and disgrace oft follow, only to be superseded by vengeance and malice. Such is the way of the slanderer and vilifier. O! where is the citadel of peace? The rock of harmony?

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." This sentiment, applied strictly to the coming eight-hour contest, can be reckoned to bring success. Eternal vigilance is highly essential to our welfare, and let us live out well its teachings.

Zachariah Jenkins, who is now the president of the association of ex-delegates of Washington, would not, it is said, decline the nomination for president of Columbia Union, if the fight for the office will not be too strenuous. And there is some talk that William Brockwell, chairman of the nominations committee, has also a leaning toward the presidency of No. 101. The name of Daniel Vaughan, one of the delegates to St. Louis, is mentioned, but it is extremely doubtful if he will be a candidate. It would not be surprising if a downtown man should win out this year. Such a condition is due, and why not?

The editors of a few labor papers who rush to print about the liberty of the press should first comprehend the great difference between liberty and licentiousness and accusations and criticisms. Having once thoroughly mastered the definition of the words they will not be so ready to howl muzzle. Only a partial regard for common decency will check a sordid inclination to libel.

A hammer is a most useful thing to have about the house. It is as handy in putting down a carpet as it is dangerous when used in a figurative way. Ugly bruises generally follow when it is misapplied.

Pike's Peak clubs will be popular next year. Washington will, no doubt, have a swell membership.

Shelby Smith has had some experience in taking cards away from members of unions. Since his residence in Philadelphia he was chairman of a committee whose recommendations were adopted by No. 2, which deprived two members of their cards. The men were subsequently reinstated on appeal to President Lynch. Later, Shelby Smith was primarily interested in the trial of thirty or forty members of No. 2, all of whom were found guilty by the committee, but the union wisely turned down the findings of the committee. These statements can be verified by the records of Philadelphia Union, and are positive evidence that Smith is thoroughly in sympathy with the practice of taking a man's card away from him.

It is extremely gratifying to the members of the local auxiliary that their delegate, Mrs. A. L. Bowen, was chosen chaplain by the Toronto convention of the international auxiliary, and it goes without saying that Mrs. Bowen will make a most efficient officer.

Edwin C. Jones, a former president and ex-delegate of Columbia No. 101, but now of Manila, was in Washington during part of August and September. He is the instructor of printing in the Philippine islands, and says the natives are learning exceedingly well the various branches of the printing service of the government. Mr. Jones is looking as well as he feels, he says.

It would not be a bad idea if the "fair and fearless" editors of labor papers would be generous enough to publish just what Shelby Smith said about President Lynch and the executive council, instead of referring to the affair as a criticism of the doings of the International officers. Then the reader could judge as to whether it was an "honest" criticism or a willful accusation. And then, too, print his apology and admission on the floor of the convention.

JAMES MONROE KREITER.

GUELPH, ONT.

Guelph—A hustling little city of 12,000 inhabitants, celebrated for being the city of homes, and especially noted for being the home of one of the strongest subordinate unions in the province of Ontario.

A two-year agreement has been signed with all employers for the eight-hour day and $1 increase all around.

Now then, Toronto, Brantford, London, Woodstock, Berlin, Stratford, the cry goes forth, "Where are you at?"

How did we do it? By "Organization, Diplomacy and Harmony."

Our next move will be to form an auxiliary, which we believe will be of untold value to us in prosecuting our label campaign.

The executive is arranging for an entertainment to celebrate the fifth anniversary of the advent of this organization.

Owing to scale matters of a most vital nature, there was a full attendance at our last meeting, which was one of the most enthusiastic held for months. One remarkable feature, and one that is to be commended, was that not a "hot-air shooter" was in evidence. The proposed new scale was unanimously adopted, and ere my reader has glanced at these lines will have been signed, sealed and delivered to headquarters.

Now, let every man put his shoulder to the wheel and push the eight-hour day. Every point gained is a help to a weaker local. We must help one another.

No open shop for us. No non-unionist in our jurisdiction, and not an idle man.

Success to the eight-hour day. P. J. GOLDS.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

Now that we have recovered from the magnificent time at the Toronto convention, we are all absorbed in the eight-hour movement. Such enthusiasm was never before displayed in any movement made by the International Typographical Union. From the surrounding cities the good news of victories is coming in daily. Niagara Falls is putting up a gallant fight and is sure to win. The proprietors are sending out glowing dispatches, and claim to be backed up by the Parryites, business men's associations, etc. They also claim to have backing up to $30,000,000. This amount will look like the proverbial thirty cents when the Niagara Falls Union gets through with them.

"Hotspur" McBride, after a recent trip to Denver and Colorado Springs, had a fine write-up of our Home. He also mentioned his old friends, Messrs. Scott, Martin and Forbes, at present in the Home.

"Teddy" Hopman's oldtime friends are wondering why he did not drop off here on his way back to Chicago. Can it be possible that "Teddy" is getting shy in his older years?

Niagara Falls Union is getting out a red-hot sheet in the interest of eight hours. Their advertising space is well patronized. Among the ads noticed was this one:

> LYNCH
> SIGNS FOR EVERYBODY
> 368 THIRD ST.
> LYNCH, THE SIGN PAINTER, IS NOT THE LYNCH THAT ORDERED THE STRIKE.

Secretary Bramwood and Mrs. Bramwood were in Buffalo for a couple of hours on their return from the convention. Owing to their train being late three hours, we did not have the pleasure of showing them the sights of this city.

A distinguished visitor from Watertown was in our midst for a few days. His mission was to secure a few "nine"-hour men. If the typothetæ could not supply him any better than they did the Niagara Falls people, he must have left Buffalo a disheartened man.

Quite a number of delegates, ex-delegates and visitors stopped here on their way to and from the Toronto convention. Washington and St. Louis were well represented.

Tom Crowley, of Cincinnati, positively refused to lay over in Buffalo on his way home.

John P. Walsh, of St. Louis, rested up here for a couple of days after a strenuous week at Toronto.

Among the late arrivals are Messrs. Wade, O'Hara, Rooney, Lamar, Haggerty, Foy and Bumpus Jones.

J. J. Dirks and wife, of St. Louis, stopped over between trains and made a trip around the city.

The decks are being cleared for Colorado Springs, and a club has been formed for the trip. Advices from a Cleveland friend say that he will be there if he has to pawn his raincoat. Those who made their headquarters at the "Emerald" hotel will appreciate this, as they all know how much he paid for the coat.

Our friends on the coast will have to be up and doing, for everything in the east indicates that a determined effort will be made at the coming session of congress to pass a bill admitting Chinese to this country. Assurances are being given the Chinese by all the United States representatives abroad that if the Chinese lift the boycott they will put the bill through this coming year. Eastern papers are full of sneaky little editorials, irrespective of politics, that indicate their sentiment in favor of such a bill. Only one paper in this locality is opposed to the Chinese, and that is the Evening News. The editor of that paper has come out fearlessly on this point, and doesn't want the Chinese under any circumstances.

When a sheet in a nearby city announced that in the future it would run an "open" shop, the editor of an evening paper immediately put a big scare head over it and gave orders that it "must" run in all editions. The next day the paper capitulated and the news was printed in an out-of-the-way corner in about three lines. How that composing room laughed!

Many discussions were raised over the articles in regard to wearing the union button in a recent issue of THE JOURNAL. One of our members drew attention to the fact that a good many members wore fraternal buttons in preference to the union buttons. Just why they do so he couldn't figure out, claiming that unions have done more for a man than all the other societies in the world. Another member told how he had been taught a lesson on a recent trip that made him a convert to the union button. He was on a train and had a long trip to make, and was pretty lonely. He noticed a group of men that were having a swell time, and wished he could "butt" in. After traveling about all day without having a soul to visit with, he happened to get close enough to the group to notice that they all wore union buttons. He at once made himself known to them, and was a little bit sore that he had not got acquainted earlier. He got his calls, one of the bunch remarking: "How in h—l were we to know that you was a printer unless you wore your colors?"

Wild rumors floated around the city in regard to one of our big job plants declaring for the open shop. Any union man starting such a story without any foundation ought to be heavily fined. Trouble comes quick enough without the assistance of any fairy tales.

Camera fiends galore attended the convention. Some of the pictures received in this city would do credit to professional photographers. One young man here must have been a dandy subject, for if there was a snap shot taken he was invariably around.

We wish to congratulate Dunkirk, Lockport and Jamestown upon their securing the eight hours. The little unions are right to the front, and should be proud of their achievements.

Wunsch, the machinist who has been fighting No. 9 for years in the courts, has cast in his lot with the Niagara Falls typothetæ. Wunsch was very modest in his demands when approached. He desires $4,000 and a card from the International Typographical Union. 'Nuff sed.

The good work done in the country districts is showing how well our organizers are succeeding. Keep it up, gentlemen, until we have every country printer from Maine to California.

By the time the next edition of THE JOURNAL is issued we hope to show No. 9 in the eight-hour column.

Mr. McDavitt, of Washington, and Mr. Rooney, of Boston, paid a flying visit to Toronto after convention week to see if there was anything left of that city.

Circular No. 19 to hand, and the report is very satisfactory. "Stand by your union and victory is assured," is a good slogan.

Organizer Kinskey is doing good work and is kept on the jump these days.

Twelve men were all the typothetæ could dig up for Niagara Falls up to date. As fast as they arrived, and after working a little while, they would be taken in hand by unionists and sent out of the city.

The bowling season opens up this month, and probably the same teams will enter the tournament. A goodly number of last season's bowlers are practising daily, getting the kinks out of their arms.

Glowing reports from visitors to the Detroit Printers' Club are received from all quarters. Every city ought to have one.

Notices announcing a proposed change in the newspaper scale have been posted in the chapels. It calls for $3.50 days and $4 nights.

No. 9 made a fine showing in the Labor day parade.

W. A. COYELL.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

The position of the executive council in ordering our men throughout the country to cease work unless agreements are signed for the eight-hour day, to become effective January 1, 1906, where contracts do not interfere, is generally approved in Nashville as being the proper way to meet the refusal of the national typothetæ to further consider the shorter workday. If Ellis, Macintyre & Co. hope to scare the typos into surrender on this paramount issue, they are subject to a rude awakening. All circumstances considered, it is difficult to understand how the typothetæ members expect to gain anything by their opposition to the eight-hour day.

I have just received a letter from William Carroll, 131 Lockwotton street, Providence, R. I., in which he asks for information of any printer who had ever been a member of No. 33. If there is a printer in this city who has ever been connected with Providence Union in any way, and will give me the information, I will gladly furnish same to Mr. Carroll, who is chairman of the committee on arrangements and souvenirs of the fiftieth anniversary of Providence Union No. 33, which will be celebrated in 1907. It might be of interest to state that Mr. Carroll says that among the things unearthed in researches for souvenir matter is the following report of the delegates of No. 33 to the

New York city convention in 1862, which is given here because of its probable interest to the older members in the south. The delegates' report says:

"Only one case was referred to the committee on appeals. A member of Nashville Union presented a card from that union to the St. Louis Union, headed 'Confederate States of America,' and without the official signatures of the president or secretary of the National Typographical Union. The president of the St. Louis Union, Mr. S. Slawson, refused to receive it. On this decision the member from Nashville appealed, stating that this was the only card he could procure, and claiming that it was sufficient evidence that he was a union member in good standing where he last worked. The decision of the president of the St. Louis Union was sustained."

Some of the older members of No. 20 may be able to throw some light on this card, or where a facsimile might be procured. I will highly appreciate any such information.

The fiftieth anniversary entertainment committee of No. 20 has set October 3 as the date for the celebration. All arrangements are well in hand, and good speeches and plenty to eat will be the order. B. A. RATTERREE.

BATAVIA, N. Y.

The desperate straits in which the employers' association at Niagara Falls found itself when the union printers went on strike in that city for the eight-hour day is shown by the following dispatch:

Niagara Falls, September 14.—The employers' association at a meeting last night decided to give the employing printers of this city all the support in its power in their fight with the union printers over the eight-hour question.

The employers' association will give a bonus of $10 a week to every non-union or union printer who will go to work in the shops. The employing printers will pay the regular scale of wages and the employers' association will pay $10 a week to each man in addition for a period of three months, and if necessary the time will be extended. The association, which has a capital of $30,000,000, will deposit a sum sufficient to carry on the fight against the strikers indefinitely.

Of course, it is perfectly legitimate, and indeed edifying generosity, on the part of the employers' association to offer a "bonus" for printers to give up their manhood and assist in the effort to down organized labor, this form of bribery not interfering in any way with the penal code; but, on the other hand, if the union should so far outstep the bounds of decency as to offer these same would-be strikebreakers a "bonus" to keep away from the offices controlled by the employers' association, the penal code would be outraged, and Judge Ever Ready would, with the most expeditious dispatch, get out his injunction gun and blaze away. Any one can imagine what will become of the miscreant who gets under the thumb of that $30,000,000 octopus after the three months "bonus" has petered out.

The Hon. Samuel Prince, of New York, who served five terms in the state assembly, was the Labor day orator in Batavia, the exercises being held at Agricultural Park and the speaking being in the grandstand before an audience of 2,000 people. And say, Mr. Prince rings true coin to his name, and any labor organization may well be proud to know he is to honor it by his presence. Mr. Prince is a member of the cigarmakers' union, an organizer for the American Federation of Labor, and just the kind of fellow who will make you his friend right away without formalities. It goes without saying that Mr. Prince will always find a warm welcome to Batavia, and here's hoping he will come often.

"Billy" Waudby was feeling right smart on Labor day, and in fine feather paraded with No. 511, his commanding figure ornamented with a "Big 6" badge, looming up like a Roman cavalier. Mr. and Mrs. Waudby, in their renowned hospitable way, entertained the speaker, the central labor union committee and friends at their pleasant home at Highland Park.

J. Frank Wilber, of Rochester, a typo who is much interested in the Woodmen of the World, and who addressed the Batavia central labor union some time ago, is a brother of the Rev. Father Wilber, of this place, the pastor of St. Joseph's Church. Father Wilber, too, be it remembered, was a worker in the art preservative before entering the priesthood, Lockport being the parent home.

Two Labor day sermons were delivered in Batavia. The Rev. Dr. Charles E. Millspaugh, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, among other things, said: "Labor day proclaims that the people have arrived and in the future are to be rulers of the land, for not the few, but of the many. The history of labor is but a gradual coming to his own of him who does nine-tenths of the world's work. The church and the labor movement go hand in hand in upbuilding and uplifting the great majority—the wage workers. Without organization no moral, intellectual or spiritual standard can be maintained in the present era of commercialism. The church is in close sympathy with the eight-hour-day movement and the benefits to be derived from it. It is certainly a grand step toward bettering the condition of society. The workingman must have time to develop his head and heart as well as his hands. The demand for an eight-hour day is righteous, and not only righteous, but reasonable and logical. No man should sell more than eight hours of his time." The Rev. Alfred Brittain, pastor of St. James' Episcopal Church, dwelt particularly upon the subject pertaining to the individual who toils not, but exists upon the wealth accumulated from the industry of others.

Speaking about misconceptions, here is one developed in one of the Batavia offices: The headline artist wrote, "The Farmers' Hard Lot," and the intelligent compositor brought it out on the proof, "The Farmers' Soft Hat."

William S. Waudby brought home from the Toronto convention a large collection of souvenirs of varied design. Only three or four delegates failed to use the union label on their cards. There is one criticism to make, and that is the using of battered or worn-out labels. It spoils the effect. By all means keep new ones employed on fine work. Mr. Waudby, who is an enthusiastic Elk, also has a great assortment of badges of that order.

Editor Platt, of the Batavia Times, who presided at the Labor day exercises this year, made an address which was duly appreciated by trade unionists, and what made it all the more pertinent is the fact that Mr. Platt spoke words to voice his convictions in the matter, believing, as he does, that this great movement, founded on principles of vital importance to all wage earners, is of immense value as an educational agency to better the mental forces of humanity. And, by the way, Editor Platt is certainly doing good work, through the columns of the Times, to lend labor a helping hand.

John N. Pattison, the well-known publisher, composer and pianist, who died recently in New York, was born sixty-six years ago in Niagara Falls. Mr. Pattison was a pupil of Liszt and Von Bulow, and at one time traveled with Mme. Patti.

Edward Houghton, manager of Dellinger Opera House, was several years ago a printer, being a member of Toronto Typographical Union. Charles F. Thomas, who is engaged in the carriage business in Batavia, ten years ago was a member of Washington Typographical Union, being an employe in the government printing office. Charles E. Todd, another former member of the Washington local, is a resident of Batavia.

The labor unions made a fine display of working exhibits at the Genesee county fair, the management giving valuable space in the main hall for the purpose. The idea of having such an exhibit is certainly a good one, and bears the earmarks of originality. Let us hear what the rest of the country thinks about the plan. Plenty of union literature was given out, the printers having a press running three days on the grounds.

It is a good time now to consider ways and means for sending a delegate next year to Colorado Springs. Of course, No. 511 will have a representative there all right. Now, who wants to go?

WILLIAM H. RIAL.

TACOMA, WASH.

After consideration by committees and the union in regular meetings extending over the entire summer, a new scale of prices, asking a uniform increase of 50 cents per day for all members, with no change in hours—eight hours per day having prevailed for several years—effective October 1, 1905, has been presented to employers by a special committee appointed for that purpose. No serious difficulty is expected, but at this writing employers have not expressed their views on the subject.

Labor day was practically ignored in Tacoma. A few unions observed the day by holding basket picnics, a few others went to Seattle to witness the dedication of the new labor temple, but aside from these the day was not marked by any celebration.

Considerable friction and ill feeling have arisen because of an amendment to the local constitution, adopted at the May meeting, debarring members who are employers from voting or holding office. Much difference of opinion exists as to the legality of the union's action, in view of the provisions of section 36, general laws. While the members affected by this amendment have been loud in denunciation, none has demanded the right to vote since its adoption nor appealed against the action of the union, but a journeyman has given notice of appeal to test the legality of this action by the local union.

It is evident from press reports that the eight-hour day is to be opposed quite strongly in some cities. Well, they might as well come to it, for it is certainly inevitable, and, once thoroughly and generally tried, gives satisfaction to both boss and man.

CHARLES PERRY TAYLOR.

CLEBURNE, TEXAS.

Cleburne Union is still in existence and in thriving condition, notwithstanding nothing has appeared in the columns of THE JOURNAL from this place for a year or more. Our membership is small, but of the right material, and there is not a more loyal lot of union printers in all the country than are the members of No. 303.

On the 9th instant, in obedience to instructions telegraphed by the executive council, a called meeting of our union was attended by every member thereof, and the employing printers of the city as well. It was by no means "an informal affair." We went there for business, and soon all that we had so long hoped for was accomplished. The executive committee conferred with the proprietors, the union remaining in session pending report of the committee. In less than twenty minutes the chairman of said committee returned and announced that he and his fellow committeemen had secured the signatures of every employing printer in town. That's all there was to it.

About two months ago "Ape Food" Post sent to the Enterprise (the afternoon paper at this place) a batch of stuff for publication, the matter being composed entirely of the most severe and bitter attack on all unions and unionism. The matter was set one night and died early next morning, the immediate cause of its demise being lack of popularity among the printers who were supposed to handle it. In other words, a chapel meeting was called and the publisher of the Enterprise, J. R. Ransone, was requested not to allow the columns of his paper to become besmirched by inserting such filthy rot as the stuff above referred to. Mr. Ransone graciously favored us, and we are still using coffee. If any one wants to know why, we can "Postum."

Just here is an opportune time to mention the fact that relations of a most cordial nature have always existed between employer and employe here, and "quarrels in the family" are almost unknown. Mr. Pitts, of the Morning Review, is an old-timer (in experience), and both he and Mr. Ransone have the respect and esteem of Cleburne printers. And Clyde Buchanan is included in the list.

For the past several months work has been extremely dull here, but is commencing to improve, and all hope for better conditions from this time on until spring.

We are watching with intense interest, of course, the struggle now going on, but we do not fear the result. Many printers need the brief vacation they are now enjoying, and this writer predicts that within a very short time a vast number of those who are now out will be back doing their little eight-hour stunt, just as though nothing had happened.

In my next communication to THE JOURNAL it is my purpose to tell something of the good accomplished at the recent session of the state federation of labor, held at Denison. Our president, F. N. Graves, is serving his second term as secretary of the state federation, and the members of Cleburne No. 303 are proud of the record he has made and continues to make.

After an absence of a year or more, the irrepressible and irresistible E. Sharpe "drove in" again last week, traveling "overland" from Austin to San Antonio. LONNIE ADAMS.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Well, well, well! All you can hear now is this refrain:

I've worked eight hours this day,
And I think I've earned me pay.

"We have met the enemy and they are ours," to the extent of eight hours per day and nine hour's pay. It took a deal of talk to get it, but as soon as Toronto was heard from the capitulation was immediate. Thanks are due to Organizer Colbert for his efforts in behalf of No. 177. An amusing feature of one of the conferences, and which helped materially in the negotiations, was the position taken by John L. Phillips, of the firm of Phillips Bros. John was called, in the absence of his brother, to take part in the deliberations. Now, John tips the scales near the 300 mark, and after being closeted in a room for three hours with the mercury dancing around 90, he began to think of what one governor said to another and immediately started for the "parlor." As he was leaving the room one of the "masters" asked him how he stood on the eight-hour question. John replied: "I am for eight hours, and I don't give a —— how soon it comes. The quicker the better. I am going to get a drink." Consternation prevailed, for John runs one of the biggest and best shops in the city, and it would not do to have it stand alone. By the way, John is an active member of No. 177.

There was a slight change made in the machinist-operator scale. The machinist-operator now gets $2 above the scale and overtime after eight hours. This has not proven very satisfactory, as two operators have quit since it went into effect.

The pressmen and helpers have also been granted the eight-hour day at the old scale. The bookbinders and bindery girls now work eight hours, with a proportionate reduction. Had they kept up their organization it would have been a different story. The stereotypers have the eight-hour day, too; and altogether, this is strictly an eight-hour town in all branches of the printing trade. The scales were signed for eighteen months.

While we naturally feel elated over our success in gaining the eight-hour day, the members are not "tooting horns," believing they got only what the rights of God and man demand. We are theirs for eight hours, and the other sixteen we belong to ourselves. We can only wish other unions the same success that attended our efforts, and we stand ready to add our little mite to help them get what makes life worth living—an eight-hour day.

It takes the printer man to find excuses for quitting a job. An operator in setting the word "Kentucky" started off with five cap "K's." The proofreader called him a "stuttering operator," and the operator quit.

At no time in the history of No. 177 has there been so many tourists in this city as within the past month. At least thirty-five have stopped a day or so. Some caught on, some did not; but all have left and gone. What would the "teapot" give for this floating element, I wonder? Life on the road, with an occasional meal, the stars for light, and the heavens for a covering, is preferable to a job (?) in an "open shop," sleeping in vermin-covered cots, with a shotgun guard over them, etc., etc.

Keep at it. Stick together. If one falls lift him up, and give him a boost up the hill, not down.

The difference between an operator who sets 60,000 a day for $21 per week and one who sets 40,000 at $20 is twenty years of life—for the forty man.

Boom the label.

Cheer up, you'll get it after a while, fellows.

F. C. REED.

ELIZABETH, N. J.

The United Educational Company has signed the scale of Elizabeth Typographical Union No. 150, and is now conducting a strictly union office. At the outset the concern was firm in its determination to establish an "open office." The situation looked serious for us, and for a brief time we were uncertain as to the best course to pursue. It was felt by many that to permit our members to work in an open office recently established would be dangerous to our position as a 100 per cent union and calculated as well to stir up dissatisfaction among the older establishments of the city, all of which are union offices. This sentiment prevailed. No. 150, in special session, without a dissenting vote, declared there was no "open shop" in this city and asked union printers to keep away. The executive committee took up the fight on these lines, and we had on our hands what apparently promised to be a long and expensive contest. Nevertheless our membership manifested a grim determination to win, regardless of the cost. The executive committee had mapped out a comprehensive plan of campaign. Printed matter had been secured and more was in course of preparation. Then, just as our real campaign was about to begin, something dropped—on the other side, and it was all off. This remains to be said: Every interview and conference was characterized by plain speaking; both sides talked to the point, yet each was uniformly courteous to the other. Little bickering was indulged in—none by the printers. This, we think, did much toward bringing about the amicable adjustment.

The Labor Advocate, published in this city, commenting on the pleasing outcome of the negotiations, says: "We congratulate Typographical Union

Digitized by Google

No. 150 on its achievement. We believe the result is a distinct gain for unionism, and none the less a tribute to the fair-mindedness and good sense of the gentlemen representing both sides."

The establishment of the United Publishing Company is a large one and will prove a valuable addition to the printing industry of this city. The monotype is being installed—three keyboards and two casters—and a large number of job and ad compositors and stonemen will be employed.

And we were honored by having our delegate placed on a committee at the Toronto convention. Please excuse us if we do step a little high.

And the advertisements always read: "Non-union men to work in an open shop." Is it a joke?

And, too, the demand for the "free and independent" must exceed the supply, for I notice the market price shows an upward tendency. We have a small number hereabouts, but we can't recommend them. The quality is very inferior. We have authority for that statement.

And then, why go to San Francisco and Chicago to begin the struggle against the eight-hour day? Reserving the home cities as a sort of "last ditch," apparently.

And, also, what's the hurry, anyway? They could have had the fight in January just as well. And it would be so much easier to keep cool then.

And—did anybody say "23"? T. H. Blakeny.

DECATUR, ILL.

At the last meeting of No. 215 three changes in the constitution and by-laws were passed which are of great interest to our membership. One provides for the collection of dues on the percentage system, instead of the old flat rate. The second provides a competency line for machine operators, both news and job. This latter measure will serve to give protection to operators who are not in the "swift" class. The competency line was placed at 175 lines per hour, corrected matter, brevier or type smaller. The third change provides for the registering by apprentices on machines of the time they begin their apprenticeship, handing in to the chairman of the chapel at the close of each day's work the amount of time covered by them that day. This will enable the chairman of the chapel to keep strict tab upon the time served by learners on the machine. This change also provides that in case an apprentice fails to become competent in his three months' term of probation, a second apprenticeship may be granted him by a three-fourths vote of the union. These three are all steps in the right direction.

A gentleman of the name of Gifford was in the city in the interest of the United Typothetæ, endeavoring to secure non-union operators for work in Chicago. Non-union operators are an exceedingly scarce article in this neck of the woods, but the printers of Decatur, not wishing Mr. Gifford to feel slighted, called upon him very numerously and arranged to take trips to Chicago. However, we have not missed any old faces, and Mr. Gifford departed empty-handed. Hope he does as well in other places as he did in this burg.

Our eight-hour committee has been doing considerable quiet work, and we firmly believe that when 1906 rolls around Decatur will be found in the list of eight-hour towns.

Several ex-strikebreakers from Chicago have been in Decatur en route to other parts. They state that No. 16 gave them a card, their blessing, and thirty minutes to get out of town.

T. B. Lindsay.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

On Monday, September 11, book and job men of No. 124 struck upon the refusal of the employers to sign the eight-hour agreement. After negotiating one week the trouble was settled and the men returned to work, having secured contracts for the eight-hour day, beginning January 1.

It has been urged by some trade unionists that the eight-hour day would be a benefit to the employers because men could do more work in a shorter day than in the old nine-hour day. This is a manifest absurdity as applied to the trade of printing, and such a plea weakens our side of the question. One of our declared objects is to give employment to many who are now idle. We are not after the shorter day for the benefit of the boss. True, it will be an excuse for his charging enough more for printing to make up the increased cost of labor and have some to spare. But we want the shorter day because it is our right. The productive power of labor has increased manifold in the past forty years, which fact, even at the exploitation rate of forty years ago, entitles us to several times the wages then received, or the same wages with a proportionately shorter workday. It is now time that this inharmony between productive power of and reward for labor were lessened, and the eight-hour movement is a step in that direction.

During the strike we collected some balls and bats and played a game of "rounds" or "scrub." It was strenuous exercise for the prints, and as a result there were many sore arms and shambling gaits among the players next day.

"Eddie" Welch has returned to Chicago, Bloomington being too slow for him.

F. M. Doxsee, former president of No. 124, has become a farmer. No one brings to town better watermelons than does Doxsee.

On looking over The Journal's "In Memoriam" page, I am impressed with the waste of time and ink represented there. Instead of publishing a number of memorials of stereotyped phrase which are never read, why would it not be much better to give the readers a brief sketch of the deceased member's life, limited to a reasonable length, say 150 words? I offer this as a suggestion.

Some of our well-paid preachers are opposed to the eight-hour day because "workingmen are never satisfied with fair wages," but will be asking for seven hours. Sure! Why not? Under our glorious competitive system, so assiduously extolled and whitewashed by some of the clergy, the system which produces slums and mansions side by side, a "fair" wage is just what the workers can secure from the employers by all the means within their power, which are now confined to strikes, boycotts, etc.

CLARKSBURG, W. VA.

Work is picking up.

That poem entitled "Welcome to Visiting Printers," written by W. H. Taylor, member of the World chapel of No. 91, shows that gentleman to be quite a poet.

Resolutions were passed by No. 372 at the September meeting, denouncing the George E. Keith Company for running a union shoe factory and refusing to run their printing plant in the same manner. So remember the "Walkover" shoe is not for union printers, and do not purchase them.

After reading the review of the Toronto convention, it looks like there was something doing there. And say—those Toronto boys know how to entertain.

Did you notice the "What We Are Doing" column for September? If not, have a look.

Are you consistent?

OMAHA, NEB.

No. 190 had charge of the Labor day celebration in this city, and as a result between $400 and $500 was added to the eight-hour fund. The principal speakers were William Jennings Bryan, ex-Congressman Gilbert M. Hitchcock and Edward Rosewater. Rev. Newman Hall Burdick, a member of No. 190, acted as chairman. The celebration was a success in every way.

The local business men's association is advertising the fact that it will aid the employing printers when the fireworks begin. There is not a corporal's guard left of the once mighty (?) association, and all the funds that will be forthcoming for the benefit of the employers will not overburden them.

The local union placed a 6 per cent assessment by a unanimous vote, just for emergencies.

For the past six months or more the firm of Klopp & Bartlett has been violating an arbitration agreement between the local typothetæ and No. 190. The union let things take their course until September 11, when it instructed its officers to notify the typothetæ of certain violations made by the above firm, and demanded that said firm be forced to live up to its agreement. Mr. Klopp denied through the paper that he was employing non-union men, but at a second meeting of the typothetæ he agreed to discharge two non-union men in his employ. Mr. Klopp has discharged chairmen of the chapel as fast as the union could appoint them, and in other ways seemed very anxious for trouble until recently. Now he evidently wants to put it off until other cities have fought the fight. Mr. Klopp is taking the lead in the wind-jamming newspaper articles on the pending trouble. As is pretty well understood hereabouts, he has nothing to lose even if he were forced out of business, as he is said to be a member of the firm in name only. The arbitration agreement of two years ago expires October 5. No. 190 is going to live up to its agreement until that time and will insist on the employers doing the same, even if it has to fight for it—and also the eight hours.

"To show you what kind of 'free men' some people want to work for them," said a prominent citizen to the writer, "I would refer you to three members of the executive committee of the local business men's association. One handles the machinery output of a 'free men's' institution (penitentiary) in the east; another handles shoes made by a 'free men's' institution (penitentiary) in Missouri, and the third handles the brooms made by the 'free men' confined in the Nebraska penitentiary. That is the kind of 'free men' the opponents of unions wish for."

A. L. Small and James Southard have established a new labor paper in Omaha. It is called the Labor Advocate and will be two months old by the time this is in print. It is a well edited and newsy paper, and is conspicuous by the absence of plate matter in its columns. The proprietors of the new paper are both active members of No. 190, and, as they are both hustlers, there is no question but what the venture will prove a success. Indeed, it appears to already be a paying investment.

The South Omaha Labor Gazette has suspended publication, because of lack of patronage, after fourteen issues. It was established to aid in building up packing house organizations, but was somewhat premature, owing to the depleted treasuries of those unions. I. J. COPENHARVE.

COLUMBUS, GA.

The semi-annual election of officers of No. 220 took place at the September meeting. This was a very important election, as the officers now elected will have the duty of inaugurating the eight-hour day in this city, and it was necessary that our ablest members should be selected to perform this work. Prior to the election an appeal was made to the membership to refrain from using the stereotyped exclamation, "I decline," when placed in nomination, and the result was that there was a lively but good-natured contest for nearly every office. It is the first time in the history of No. 220 that there was not a single declination in the nomination of officers. The result appears elsewhere in this issue of THE JOURNAL.

Columbus was represented at the southeastern eight-hour convention, held in Atlanta on August 28, by Ex-President W. H. Winn, of No. 220. His report of the proceedings of that body has instilled greater enthusiasm in the local membership, and the watchword now is: Organize our brothers in the smaller towns and prepare for a happy and successful culmination of the eight-hour movement on January 1.

Vice-President J. W. Hays spent several days with us a short time since, and his advice and instructions will be of much benefit to our officers and members in carrying out the mandates of the International Typographical Union in securing the eight-hour day.

The Labor day celebration, which was under the exclusive management of No. 220, was a decided success in every particular; in fact, it was the best celebration of the day that has ever been held in this city, and our committee justly merited and received the thanks of the entire membership.

A scheme is now being agitated by some of our members which, if successful, will insure the representation of No. 220 in all future International Typographical Union conventions. It will perhaps be brought before the October meeting, and I, for one, hope to see it adopted.

Work has been unusually good throughout this section this summer, and all the members of this union have been at work. The fall business has opened with a rush, and the prospects now are that there will be no let-up until late in the coming spring. W. H. BARCLAY.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COL.

Toronto! You are certainly all right!

Now, when that's said, what's the use of a fellow with a limited vocabulary straining his mental fiber trying to find adequate terms to describe all the things you did to make our stay in your beautiful city one grand whirl of pleasure and happiness? Better let it rest with that initial declaration—for that covers it better than a volume.

We landed on your refreshing shores, a gang of western desperadoes, steeped to the hide with enthusiasm and car dirt. You took us into your tender care and proceeded to heap upon us a hospitality so real, so lasting, that boundless fiction itself has never surpassed. We were yours, and we soon learned to be mighty glad of it.

We had the time of our lives. It may be in the days to come that old Gloom may weave into the fabric of our memories many a somber pattern, but never a figure can she contrive that will obscure that indelibly bright spot placed there by our visit to your fair city. Canada may well feel proud of her printer sons, and the glorious old International Typographical Union honored to be brought to the realization that the red blood of unity, of principle, of brotherly love courses so vigorously and so steadfastly through the veins of our brothers in the Land of the Maple Leaf. Again we say:

Toronto! You are certainly all right!

Well, we got the convention. We didn't think when we left the shadows of the old peak that we were to meet with the determined opposition of any other city. We felt assured that the fact that we had been in the field a couple of years would keep the other fellow out. But Pittsburg was there with a bunch of as fine gentlemen as ever broke out of Pennsylvania, and what they did to keep us worried to the last minute was sufficient.

Of course, we were mighty glad to win; but it's tough to have to defeat an adversary that you're "with" heart and soul. Pittsburg Union got full return for every cent she expended in sending that delegation of "live wires." There is no danger of the spirit of unionism dying out in Pittsburg when No. 7 has such stanch ones to the fore.

With all the receptions, the lime-light pictures, the "Ricketty-Blix"-ing and "Hail! Hail"-ing, the argument that won the convention for the Springs was: Every printer who holds a union card should see the Home—his Home. It is a good argument, and when the convention meets here next year hundreds of our members will realize its force and go back to their constituencies feeling prouder of their membership and thankful to those who labored so strenuously to bring the convention here. The Home today is not the Home of ten years ago. It is just what our delegate, "Bill" Snyder, told the Toronto convention it was: "A living monument to the generosity, perseverance and stability of union printers." And it is the duty of every one who can—and there are few who can not, if they will—to attend the 1906 convention and see to what a glorious work he has contributed.

No. 82's committee of arrangements is already organized, and will work unceasingly to perfect every detail. A committee of leading citizens will soon organize to assist in every possible way.

We will soon send out full plans for the organization of "Pike's Peak or Bust" clubs. Get in as a charter member and stay in. You will be surprised how easy it will be to make the Colorado trip if you make up your mind to do so. You will never regret it.

Inspired by the success of the Union Printers' Home, the National Association of Letter Carriers, in convention at Portland, Ore., last week, accepted a site just east of the Home, and will in the near future begin the erection of an institution to care for their sick and disabled members. Henry Russell Wray, secretary of the local chamber of commerce, who accompanied No. 82's delegation to Toronto, was largely instrumental in inducing the letter carriers to locate their home in the Springs.

I note with regret the sad death of "Mike" O'Connor in Syracuse. Had poor Mike remained at the Home when sent here by Grand Rapids Union, there is little doubt that he would have very largely regained his health, as he was then but in the incipient stage of the dread disease. Your correspondent erred in saying that the climate of Colorado did not agree with him. It was just what he needed. But Mike had the migratory fever in its chronic form, and simply had to be on the move. Poor fellow!

When the smoke clears away from the eight-hour skirmish, get onto the "Pike's Peak or Bust" wagon—and stay there. CHARLES M. CARTER.

LINCOLN, NEB.

No. 209 is alive, and hereafter we will try to keep that fact before the boys via the columns of THE JOURNAL.

Jesse Mickel, long the machinist on the Daily Star, has moved to Harvard, Neb., to look after the "mill" at that place.

E. F. Stacks, operator, has hied him away to the mountains. He and his wife and baby will try the Denver climate for a while.

Mr. Greenley, who succeeded Jesse Mickel as machinist at the Star, has in turn been succeeded by Joe Hatch, who comes back to Lincoln after an absence of a year or two.

Our executive committee, Fred Ihringer, Henry Bingaman and F. W. Mickel, together with Messrs. "Smoothness" and "Silence," are doing some effective organization work here.

We are keeping tab on the eight-hour situation, and are thoroughly awake to its portentousness. While we are not likely to encounter serious difficulty here in the establishment of the shorter workday, we are glad we have been forehanded. If we do not need it ourselves, it wouldn't come amiss elsewhere, and the membership of No. 209 is generous in spirit as well as in deed.

We told the committee while we were in Toronto that our vocabulary, while a rather large one, didn't contain words sufficient in number nor expressive enough in meaning to convey our idea of No. 91's welcome. We will have to let it go at that.

Delegates Coffey and Smith returned "safe" and "sane."

Jake Greenley, president of No. 209, was in Omaha a few days recently getting points. Some things are being said about what's going to happen in Omaha, and Jake went up to size up the situation.

A word of advice to those unions who haven't an auxiliary: If you could understand (as we know here) how beneficial an auxiliary would be to you in any work of any nature you undertake, you wouldn't be without one for a thousand dollars. If you imagine your wives, mothers, sisters and daughters, organized into a working force, can't help you, ditch the idea at once. No. 209 is better, bigger and stronger today by reason of the work and influence of Capital Auxiliary No. 11. Get to work. Help your women folks to organize.

The members of No. 209, acting on a suggestion from W. M. Maupin and their own desire, are to form a "Colorado Springs" club. Each member pays in $1 per week or more from now until time to go to the convention. It is believed we'll have a crowd of fifty ready by convention time. By-laws will be adopted and arrangements perfected, and the club will go in a body in special cars. Now, Snyder, don't you was sorry you was so "flowery"?

For fear of the blue pencil, I'll quit right here.

H. W. Smith.

CHARLESTON, W. VA.

No. 146 is still very much alive and is demonstrating the value of the proprietors having and using the label. A member who has been out of the union for a long time was reinstated at our September meeting, and a reason for his coming back was that he needed the label. Much work is done here for the local and state labor bodies, and you might as well try to "use hades for a powder house" as to try to work off any printing on these people without the label thereon.

The eight-hour day prospect is bright as ever.

Three volumes of the supreme court reports (reprints) have been awarded to the Acme Printing Company, at Morgantown, and the contract calls for hand composition, the difference being about $555 more for hand than machine composition. This firm some time since secured the contract for the printing of the current court reports for a term of four years, and they, also, are to be hand set. We would have been glad to have had this work remain in the city, but we were powerless in the matter, as local offices could not successfully bid against the Morgantown parties.

The state of trade here is fair, with more than enough hand men to supply the demand.

John L. Mason has gone to Moundsville (not to the penitentiary, though), where he will engage in the newspaper business as manager of the Daily Herald, he being a large stockholder.

C. E. Caldwell, who for several months has been running a job office at Norfolk, Va., has sold his plant and returned to the city.

Labor day was not celebrated here by a labor parade as usual, but the merchants' association did a stunt with an advertising parade and several special features, including high jumping (not of board bills), barrel and fat men's races, etc.

J. R. Foster was our delegate to the state federation of labor convention held at Clarksburg on September 6.

COFFEYVILLE, KAN.

No. 578 received one application for membership at its September meeting. We want all the worthy applications possible to get. We believe in expansion, and more especially in the latter months of 1905, while the eight-hour battle is being fought. If all eligible printers were under the protecting wing of the International Typographical Union, then the typothetæ would suffer a lasting defeat.

We are sorry to learn that one Harlow, who formerly had his card deposited with this union, is now in the "rat" business at Muskogee, I. T. We can't wish him success.

In looking over the picture of delegates and visitors at the recent Toronto convention, published in last month's Journal, we noticed the familiar faces of three printer friends we used to work with years ago. They looked so good to us that our eyesight was dimmed when we finished our view.

We wish to emphasize the fact that our offices have signed for the eight-hour day.

Mylo G. Karr.

The printers' picnic, which had been planned for a fortnight with pleasing anticipation, has passed into history, and only the memories remain.

The boys all had a good time—that goes without saying. Early Sunday morning the big wagonette with two teams swung south toward the Parker road. In it were some sixteen jolly fellows, members of Coffeyville Typographical Union No. 578, and a few invited friends. In a shady dell near Snow creek six pecan trees threw delightful shadows over the grass beneath, where a cool, sparkling spring bubbled from the rocky hillside, the camp was pitched and the grub-wagon unloaded. The committee in charge had provided an ample supply of eatables and drinkables, and the boys did full justice to the spread. The day passed quickly with songs, stories and a happy interchange of thoughts usual to a crowd of good-natured men. One of the party had his camera, and four nice negatives were made of picturesque spots, some including the "gang" in characteristic poses.

The entire outing was enjoyed by all. The cool shade and delightful outdoor surroundings were a relief to the faithful fellows who daily and nightly toil amid the whirl and bustle of the print shops. It furnished a bright spot that will be remembered with a feeling of pleasure for months to come.

WORCESTER, MASS.

The penalty served out to Shelby Smith at the convention I earnestly hoped would prove a lesson to other labor publishers who are members of unions and who have, for the past year, been antagonistic to the executive council; but my hopes evidently have been blasted, as several of these publications, one of them the Labor Advocate, of Reading, Pa., edited by Harry De Gour (Toronto, '05), contains a cartoon representing two members of the executive council as executioners, Shelby Smith being the victim, and the labor press, in the form of beautiful women, shackled.

Several columns are also given to denunciating the acts of the council, and the committee on appeals, which tried the Smith case, and Harry proves himself to be a long-winded kicker throughout his paper. If you think, Mr. De Gour, that by continuing the publication of such abominable pictures and such malicious statements you are doing the cause of true unionism any good, you are strongly mistaken, as such pictures and statements as were made in the issues of the Labor Advocate in the so-called convention and Labor day editions are looked upon as unjust and uncalled for by every true union man, and the quicker you do away with that kind of journalism, and you resort to the right kind, the better it will be for the grand cause, and the better success of your paper.

A movement has been started which will probably take the form of a resolution at some future meeting to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of No. 165. Worcester Union received its charter from the International December 11, 1885, and if this anniversary is celebrated it will be the first in the history of the organization. The charter members were Messrs. Phillip Schofield, Eben Foskett, John B. N. Soullierre, Aaron M. Gould, Frank E. Brown, C. E. Wyatt, and George Van Wagoner, who is now treasurer and the only resident member. Mr. Van Wagoner, since the organization was instituted, has been almost constantly in office, having filled all the elective offices and served on all standing and special committees, including the central labor union and allied trades delegations, and was a delegate to the Philadelphia convention. Of the other charter members Mr. Foskett is a practicing physician in New York; Mr. Soullierre conducts a general store in this city; Mr. Wyatt is following the trade in Philadelphia, Mr. Schofield in New York, and Messrs. Gould and Brown have been on the deceased roll several years. There is a good number of members of from twelve to fifteen years' standing in the union, and many of them are enthusiastic over the prospect of celebrating in some fitting manner the twentieth anniversary of No. 165.

A continual downpour of rain from early morning until late in the afternoon of Labor day caused the postponement of one of the best labor demonstrations ever planned in the history of the central labor union of Worcester. Extensive preparations had been made, and everything indicated that not only the parade was to be a grand success, but the field sports to be held in the afternoon were to be largely attended. Over 1,000 visiting iron molders from towns throughout New England had planned to take part in the parade and were to attend the field sports in a body. Some of the best athletes in the country and half a dozen champions were entered, and the meet promised to be a rare treat to the lovers of this sport. The expense was very large to the central labor union, but the committee has decided to hold a fair in Mechanic's hall, October 12, 13 and 14 to reimburse the central labor union for their loss Labor day.

Since the reaffirmation by the Toronto convention of the eight-hour day, officers and members of No. 165 are looking over the field and are viewing the situation with redoubled interest. The executive committee, seeing the immediate necessity of thorough organization work, has urged upon the president to call a special meeting, to devise ways and means to carry out the work. The committee has perfected plans which it hopes will prove successful. A thorough canvass of non-unionists will be made, smoke talks and other entertainments given and a general shakeup is to take place. At this writing the work has already begun and bids fair to be successful.

The very inclement weather on Sunday, September 3, caused a small attendance at the meeting, and much of the business, including the delegate's report of the Toronto convention, was postponed until the October meeting.

The annual central labor union souvenir, containing fifty pages of reading matter and ads, was distributed to the members at the October meeting. A page article entitled "Help the Trade Union Movement—Purchase Union-Made Goods" has received much favorable comment. The book was printed from the Harrigan Press.

Charles L. Johnston, of the Post chapel, was elected recording and corresponding secretary at the August meeting, and entered upon his new duties September 1. Mr. Johnston was elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of former Secretary "Billy" Cantwell, who went to Chicago to learn how to operate the linotype, and who at last accounts was holding down a "sit" in Madison, Wis. Success to the former secretary, as well as to his successor.

In the future I may be counted on as being a strong advocate of our union being represented at the conventions. The experience, knowledge and education gained, coupled with the excellent acquaintances and entertainments enjoyed, are something that a delegate or visitor can never forget, and must forever be of most valuable assistance in making the organization he belongs to stroll in the path of success.

Frank Early, of New Haven, a former comp. on the Gram, spent a week in this city renewing old acquaintances.

Miss Anna Cullen, of the Messenger, has returned from New York, where she attended the New York linotype school, preparatory to the installation of a machine on the Messenger, which she will operate. The new machine will be a double-decker, and it is expected will be in operation about October 1.

J. Eugene Lapointe, of the Gazette chapel, has recently been appointed musical director of Notre Dame Church choir. He possesses a sweet and powerful tenor voice, and has had much experience as a director in other churches. This is one of the largest choirs in the city, and Mr. Lapointe is to be congratulated on his appointment.

Thomas A. Delehanty has returned to work in the Gram composing room, after a long siege at St. Vincent's hospital, followed by a sojourn at one of New York's beaches.

F. M. Gravelin, until recently with the Blanchard Press, has leased the E. C. A. Beeker office and started in business for himself. The plant will be known as the College Press.

Frank P. Hughes, of the Davis Press composing room, is now a resident of Marlboro. Three hours out of the twenty-four are consumed in going to and from the office, but Frank says it is healthful, and he looks it.

Several members of the Society of Journal Correspondents, upon looking over the proof of the photograph taken at Toronto, wondered at the cause of that peculiar squint in one of the correspondents' eyes. The brother members will recall that just as the photographer pressed the tube a bevy of beautiful girls passed by, and it is possible that D. C. L.'s anxiety to "kill two birds with one stone" caused the "peeper" to twist, and consequently make him appear as the "one-eyed man in the bunch."

F. M. SALTUS.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.

At the regular meeting of the union, September 14, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The presidency of No. 61 is being vacated by the fact that our president, John Henry Jackson, returns to his former home in England,

Resolved, That we sincerely thank Brother Jackson for his faithful and useful service in a troublesome office;

Resolved, That while we regret to lose him from our own number, we heartily give him our best wishes for his safe return to England and his future prosperity there, and the assurance of our lasting esteem;

Resolved, That these resolutions be transmitted to THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL for publication therein.

In this connection I owe Mr. Jackson a word of personal apology. In my last month's letter I used the jocular phrase, "he hasn't found the United States good enough for him," in reference to his expected departure, and used it in such a way that it admitted of being understood as if he himself had said this, and I find that it has been so understood, to his annoyance. I did not so mean it, and I hope he will pardon me.

As for that meeting of September 14, it was decidedly the briskest, most businesslike and most efficient meeting of the union that I have seen during the year and a half that I have attended meetings in Cambridge. The approach of the first of January is putting vigor into us—and high time, to be sure. Not only do the applications for membership increase from meeting to meeting, but other preparations for action are being made in a purposeful way. The only reminder of the traditional Cambridge apathy (aside from the talk of two or three despondent members) was the universal unwillingness to accept the office of president or vice-president. This unwillingness, which always makes a Cambridge election ridiculous, results in leaving Jackson still president, according to my reading of the secretary's book, till next meeting. This is no calamity, if only the cause for it were more reasonable and creditable.

Don't forget to be getting your friends into the union. Carry application blanks in your pocket; the secretary has them. The man who works by your side knows that the eight-hour fight is coming on, and even if he refuses to join us he will respect your loyalty in trying to enlist him. If the first of January comes without your having ever spoken to him about joining, he will make some very sarcastic talk about your shiftlessness in such matters at such a time—the same sort of talk as you would make if you were in his place under the same circumstances. Wouldn't you?

STEVEN T. BYINGTON.

TOPEKA, KAN.

The operatic season is wide open in Topeka. It was opened by a telegram from James M. Lynch to Conductor Charles Sutherland.

The first number by Sig Sutherland was to the typothetæ, "Oh, Won't You Come to My Tea Party?" and, as the president of the typothetæ was out of the city, the secretary of same came back at Sutherland with "I Guess I'll Have to Telegraph My Baby," which he did, and the president, a Mr. Hall, "Packed the Junk He Called His Trunk" and hastened home at once. But in the meantime a conference of the two executive committees was held, and Mr. Adams, of Adams Brothers' firm, sang "Way Down in My Heart I Got a Feelin' for You," and was answered by the union quartet with "All I Want is Fifty Million Dollars." Then the meeting adjourned. Next day there were only a few solos, the first by the proprietors being, "It's Funny What Money Will Do," and offered to sign a scale of $14.40 for eight hours. This solo was answered by Sig Sutherland rendering that sentimental ballad, "Take Back Your Gold." Then the whole show, all of No. 121, took the center of the stage and sang, "I Don't Care to Go Back There No More," and all job men were called out.

After this Sutherland "cush-footed" around to the typothetæ offices and asked each firm to sign up. The Mail Printing Company, Mail and Breeze and the Kansas Farmer Company signed and broke into full song, "I'm On the Water Wagon Now," Mr. Sutherland waving the contract aloft, keeping eight-hour time.

But Adams Brothers, Crane & Co. and Hall's sang, "Go Away Back and Sit Down," when our leader approached their booths, and was promptly answered by "You'll Get All That's a-Comin' to You." Then came slow curtain, with plenty of red fire from the proprietors as to how many prints they could corral in so many hours.

Things brightened up for the proprietors' chorus next day as they sang to Kansas City for scabs, "Oh, Won't You Be My Sweetheart?" and were answered by one lonesome print, "I Want a Happy Home in Kansas." His transportation was paid, so

'tis said, and it turned out he had an International Typographical Union card, and was not looking for work if he could find anything else to do. Then that old one, "See-Saw," was indulged in by both parties, and "nowhere was got." Thus stands the comic opera at present.

The reports from the employers' side of the case, as published in the Topeka papers, prove that "truth is stranger than fiction—to some people."

Delegate T. B. Brown gave one of the best reports of the Toronto convention it has ever been my pleasure to listen to. Most cases, when the delegate returns, he tells you of the wining and dining, the good times, and winds up the report about like this: "I attended the convention as per instructions, spent all the money voted by the union, and for this I thank you." But with Mr. Brown it was different. He had things to say, and he said them. He had facts and figures, a fund of knowledge, and the ability withal to make his fifteen minutes' talk extremely interesting to the membership of No. 121.

No. 121 was in the Labor day parade ninety strong, and yours truly was appointed captain. It was a tough job keeping that bunch wide spaced. But it was a success. E. B. MURPHY.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Toronto can't be beat.

Rochester is also on the map.

My first convention.

One of the best times I ever had.

The membership committee is doing a little missionary work. Two applications were filled out and the candidates taken in at our September meeting. One is a probationary.

Herbert R. Kelt, of Paterson No. 195, formerly of this city, was a visitor here last month, and called on his old friends and relatives.

Labor day was observed at Danbury this year. Despite the rain in the morning, a large attendance was present from all over the state, almost every union being represented. Over eight hundred attended from Bridgeport. They were accompanied by a band and drum corps. Typographical Union No. 232 was represented by about twenty. On account of the stormy weather, the parade was shortened. In the afternoon, the weather clearing, the field sports were held at the fair grounds. All present report a good time.

Advertisements have been published in one of the local papers for jobbers and machine men, promising steady work, for Newark and Jersey City. They will not meet with success in this city.

Committees from Bridgeport and Danbury unions last month made a trip to New Milford and Newtown, and in both towns met with success. There is one printer employed in each place, and both promised to be with the union men in their eight-hour fight.

The offices in this city that use the label have had a fair run of work this summer. One large concern in this place reports one of the dullest seasons in years. Why? Did not carry the little joker.

New Haven and Hartford have started the fight for eight hours. Bridgeport is ready to start at a moment's notice. Some of the employers have been canvassing to find out how the men stood on the eight-hour question. One proprietor received a prompt reply: "I shall walk out if not granted the eight hours." EDWARD BENNETTO.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

President Samuel Gompers, First Vice-President James Duncan and Second Vice-President John Mitchell held a conference with James Elverson, jr., during last month, in an effort to induce the proprietor to renew friendly relations with Typographical Union No. 2. Nothing definite was accomplished at the meeting, although they agreed to hold another conference later in the month. There are indications that a settlement will be brought about. The organization committee, in its report to the union at the September meeting, spoke in a hopeful manner about a satisfactory conclusion of the unpleasantness between the Inquirer and the union. It is the desire of the entire membership that this be so, as a victory in this fight will be taken as a just reward after fifteen months' hard work. The officers of the union have never for one moment doubted that we would be successful if the membership and the International Typographical Union would continue to furnish the sinews of war. After the action of the Toronto convention in giving the unanimous endorsement of the International Typographical Union to the fight against the Inquirer, every one felt that success would surely crown our efforts. When the committee on appeals handed in its report on the Philadelphia situation, recommending to the council that the sum of $250 per week be paid to the local union, and that the convention should give the fight its endorsement, it was enthusiastically received, and was equivalent to an expenditure of many thousands of dollars by the local union. The proprietor of the Inquirer was anxiously awaiting the action of the fifty-first session of the International Typographical Union regarding the Inquirer. Now he realizes we are a unit and that the fight will be fought to a finish.

Labor day was fittingly observed in this city. Notwithstanding the fact that it rained the entire day and night before, there was a good turnout. The weather was threatening in the morning, and this no doubt deterred some from parading. No. 2 took advantage of this opportunity to again bring before the public the fact that the Inquirer is still unfair. All through the line of march banners were carried bearing the words: "The Inquirer is still unfair. Don't read it! Don't advertise in it!" The rear of the printing trades section was brought up by about two hundred newsboys, who enlivened the line of march by singing songs and cheering when passing the North American, the Telegraph and the Public Ledger offices, the three union newspapers. Alfred W. Stulb was marshal of the printing trades section, and on account of previous military training he rode his steed like a veteran. He was ably assisted by George W. Clifton and Benjamin F. Benner, mounted, and George W. Williams as aides. In the line of march with the union were Joe Labadie, of Detroit, an organizer of the American Federation of Labor, at one time a printer, and N. F. Small, of Royersford, third vice-president of the state federation, who took great delight in calling to the newsboys, "You don't sell the Inquirer, boys!" and then the vociferous answer, "No!" This feature of the parade seemed to be enjoyed by the spectators.

There have been thus far very few offices affected by the fight for the eight-hour day. In one office there were four men discharged because they refused to sign a nine-hour contract, and in another one man had signed a three-year agreement, but his life was made miserable by his fellow workmen until he went to the employer and repudiated the contract and offered to stop work. The question of signing individual agreements with proprietors was brought up at the last meeting of the union, and there never was such a din of protest as was heard against it. The union unanimously and positively declared for the eight-hour day, and that we would hold out for it until the last man expired. The enthusiasm was great.

Through the efforts of the men in the Public Ledger composing room, Sunshine, a weekly publication, now carries the label. This was brought about by constantly calling the attention of the saleswoman to the fact that the emblem of fairness was missing. She brought that fact to the attention of the publishers, and now the label appears in the editorial columns. This is the kind of work that counts.

In the future No. 2 will meet on the third Monday after the third Saturday of the month, at 8 o'clock. By a referendum vote of 454 to 119 this was carried on Wednesday, September 13. The argument was made that Saturday was not satisfactory to the morning newspaper men, that night being the busiest of the week. At the Toronto convention a recommendation was made that local unions hold meetings so that those working on seven-day papers could attend. This practically means Sunday meetings, which is the best day to suit both branches. The change of meeting to Sunday has been defeated several times in the past half dozen years, mainly through the opposition of the book and job men, and the newspaper men were glad to accept Monday as a compromise.

While in Toronto our president, Alfred D. Calvert, never for one moment lost his interest in the international game—meaning baseball. After an interesting session of the convention, and every one was anxious about the legislation affecting this city, the president, in passing one of the large newspaper offices, shouted, "Wait a minute until I see the score!"

Out of fifty men gathered in this city by typothetæ agents to fill the places of the Chicago strikers, only two went to work, and later they joined the union. Most of those who left here were members of No. 2, and took advantage of this opportunity to see the country at the typothetæ's expense.

The work of organizing the non-union printers, both book and job and newspaper, has been entered into with vim. A competent corps of assistants has been appointed by Ernst Kreft, who was unanimously selected by the union to succeed Charles E. Hawkes. Mr. Hawkes made a farewell address to the membership at the August meeting, in which he complimented us for the determined spirit manifested, and assured us that it was equal to that shown by any other union in the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union with which he had come in contact. It was with regret that the members of No. 2 parted with the services of Charles E. Hawkes, as during the year and a half he has been preparing and conducting the campaign against the Inquirer he has endeared himself to us all. His accurate, businesslike method of doing everything was particularly noticeable, especially to those who had seen disagreements between proprietors and the union conducted in such a blundering, haphazard manner that it is no wonder No. 2 has had such a hard time to try to keep in the forward rank of printers' unions.

In behalf of the Philadelphia delegation to the Toronto convention, permit me to say the verdict was unanimous that there does not breathe a more hospitable set of men than the Canadian printers. It was not only the greatest convention ever held by the International Typographical Union on account of the emphatic endorsement of the eight-hour day, which means the emancipation and uplifting of printers throughout the country, but the entertainment was the best and every detail was looked after so carefully that it brought forth words of praise from all who were in attendance, either as delegates or visitors. It is amazing the amount of business transacted at an International Typographical Union convention, when one considers the time lost to attend festivities, but there is no doubt that it is due to the fact that President Lynch conducts the business in such a masterly way that there is no unnecessary delay while the convention is in session, and, with the able assistance of Secretary Bramwood, who has everything at his finger ends, there is not a hitch in the proceedings.

It is hoped that the executive council will deem it wise to adopt the suggestion made at the Toronto convention by a delegate from Paterson, N. J., to request William R. Hearst to establish a newspaper in this city. A Hearst paper in Philadelphia would boom things.

Tom Lambert has gone to the Soldiers' Home at Hampton Roads. For over thirty years he has been a member of the International Typographical Union, and during that period has visited every section of the country. It was in September, 1879, while holding a situation on the Record in this city, that he, along with James E. Gaither, hit the Louisiana lottery for $15,000. They were walking in Fairmount Park and conversing about the disadvantage of being poor, when the suggestion was made that they invest in the lottery. They bought a two-dollar ticket and agreed to divide if they hit anything. Imagine their surprise when ticket No. 41003, a part of which they had purchased, hit the capital prize. There was much rejoicing among the printers. Tom held open house at Wolf's saloon, a printers' resort, Fifth and Chestnut, from midnight until daylight. All you could eat and drink free. There was a large attendance, and every one agreed that they had done their share toward making Tom's entry into the moneyed class a success. He afterward tried the saloon business himself, but on account of his excessive liberality the venture proved unsuccessful.

Success to the new officers of the Society of Typographical Journal Correspondents. They look like an able set of men, and everything points to a year of great happenings. To keep the eight-hour movement uppermost in the minds of the membership is the first order from the new president, Herbert W. Cooke, of Boston.

Now is the time, fellow Philadelphians, to loan your JOURNALS to any non-unionist with whom you may become acquainted. He will see the error of his way and realize that he is standing in his own light for advancement. JOHN MEADE.

SOUTHEASTERN EIGHT-HOUR CONVENTION.

The southeastern eight-hour convention met in Atlanta, Monday, August 28, and was in session one day. Delegates were present from every state in the jurisdiction except two—Mississippi and Kentucky. The sessions were held in Federation of Trades Hall.

The convention was called to order by Wade P. Harding, president of Atlanta Typographical Union No. 48, who, after a few introductory remarks, introduced to the delegates E. W. Gaines, president of the southeastern eight-hour convention. Mr. Gaines made a forceful address, and he was frequently interrupted by hearty applause, showing conclusively that the convention was fairly bubbling over with eight-hour sentiment. Mr. Gaines said that he felt assured that the eight-hour workday would be in force all over the south in the very near future.

The committee on credentials reported the following delegates present: N. D. May, L. J. Kilburn and H. H. Myers, Macon, Ga.; M. R. Pace, Richmond, Va.; Thomas J. Smith and Fred H. Davis, Jacksonville, Fla.; F. R. Webb and C. R. Outlaw, Rome, Ga.; M. C. Wallace, Columbia, S. C.; E. S. Cheek, Raleigh, N. C.; E. W. Gaines, Norfolk, Va.; John J. Williams, Charlotte, N. C.; J. H. Church, Anniston, Ala.; Oza Blodgett, Chattanooga, Tenn.; H. P. Hanson, Memphis, Tenn.; R. P. Schoppert, Birmingham, Ala.; Fred Alexander, New Orleans, La.; W. H. Winn, Columbus, Ga.; R. L. Whites, E. E. Griggs, Jerome Jones, W. H. Grant, R. T. Holderby, W. P. Harding, Atlanta, Ga.; Albert E. Hill and Robert Hallum, Nashville, Tenn.

The following fraternal delegates were also present and were allowed to participate in the deliberations of the convention: Central Labor Union, Charlotte, R. E. Wilson; Atlanta Federation of Trades, W. H. Quinn and L. P. Marquardt; Birmingham Printing Pressmen, R. E. Carlisle; Atlanta Printing Pressmen, Dennis Lindsey; Atlanta Allied Printing Trades Council, John M. Russell; Atlanta Bookbinders, R. H. Long; Bartenders' League of Atlanta, R. H. DeLorme and A. P. Levy.

A roll call of the delegates was had, and as each name was called the representative made a complete report as to the existing conditions in his territory and the prospects for securing the eight-hour day. The reports were flattering in the extreme, and with few exceptions the southeastern towns were shown to be in splendid condition. The work of organization had been carried steadily forward, looking toward the inauguration of the eight-hour day on January 1, and the chances of success were exceedingly bright.

A telegram from President James M. Lynch was read to the convention, expressing regret at his inability to be present, occasioned by the unexpected strike in Chicago. The delegates were keenly disappointed at this news, as they had looked forward with much pleasure to the opportunity of meeting the able eight-hour leader. A resolution was adopted endorsing the strike in Chicago.

At the afternoon session the following important resolutions were unanimously passed:

Whereas, The International Typographical Union of North America has for several years had under consideration the question of an eight-hour workday; and,

Whereas, The consummation of this day is now in sight and the horizon is bright and brightening; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the printers of the southeastern section of the United States, in convention assembled, do pledge our individual and collective influence to the accomplishment of this object; and be it further

Resolved, That every delegate pledge himself upon his return to his local to impress upon them the importance of organizing and pressing forward in this great movement; and be it further

Resolved, That the action of the International Typographical Union, during its recent session in Toronto, in reaffirming the action taken by the referendum vote, meets with our cordial approbation, and we congratulate them upon the present auspicious surroundings; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the International Typographical Union headquarters, signed by the president and secretary of the convention.

The following is the roster of officers of the organization: President, E. W. Gaines, Norfolk, Va.; first vice-president, S. M. Pettus, Charlotte, N. C.; second vice-president, R. T. Holderby, Atlanta, Ga.; third vice-president, H. C. Hull, Asheville, N. C.; secretary-treasurer, John J. Williams, Charlotte, N. C.

One representative from each state in the jurisdiction of the convention was elected to serve on the executive committee, which resulted as follows: E. W. Gaines, Norfolk, Va., chairman ex officio; Fred Alexander, New Orleans, La.; R. P. Schoppert, Birmingham, Ala.; H. P. Henderson, Memphis, Tenn.; M. R. Page, Richmond, Va.; T. J. Smith, Jacksonville, Fla.; M. C. Wallace, Columbia, S. C.; J. P. Stack, Louisville, Ky.; N. G. Tuttle, Vicksburg, Miss.; E. B. Erwin, Salisbury, N. C.; J. C. Burson, Greensboro, N. C.; W. P. Harding, Atlanta, Ga.

Many methods were suggested and action taken looking toward a more thorough organization of the southeastern district.

Secretary-Treasurer John J. Williams was instructed to have the following circular letter printed and give the same a wide distribution among all classes of business and professional men throughout the southeast:

Based upon natural laws, we believe that everybody should have eight hours for sleep and eight hours for recreation. This leaves eight hours for labor, which is a natural workday and all that should be asked of a person, in common humanity. This is why we want the eight-hour day.

We desire the eight-hour day because the introduction of labor-saving machinery has brought about conditions which no longer call for men to work more than eight hours in order to produce all that is necessary to perpetuate the human race, and because we believe we are justly entitled to our equitable share of the benefits derived from inventions which reduce the number of workers.

We want the eight-hour day because it has been demonstrated that a longer workday deprives thousands of the opportunity to gain a livelihood because of the introduction of modern machinery, thus making either paupers or criminals of them.

We want the eight-hour day because we believe the study of economics by our citizens is not only valuable, but essential to the perpetuation of American institutions, and because we believe a high grade of intelligence can only be obtained through a reasonable number of hours devoted to study each day.

As a business proposition, appealing to both employer and employe, we ask for the eight-hour day because we believe it to be a physical impossibility for a man to give his best efforts to his employer for a longer period than eight hours a day.

In order that a man may have and retain that clearness of brain and intellect and degree of health and strength necessary to enable him to do full justice to his employer, be a factor of social importance in his community, as well as to be a blessing to his family, we want every person to have the eight-hour day.

History has shown in all ages that the prosperity and advancement of a nation has been in proportion to the happiness of its people. Oppression in any form has inevitably resulted in producing a low moral and patriotic tone, and these lost to a nation, retrogression is the inevitable consequence.

We believe that the introduction of a general eight-hour day, allowing as it must more time for social enjoyment, intellectual improvement and needed rest, will do more to make good citizenship than any or all other agencies which may be employed.

Inasmuch as the United Typothetæ of America has repeatedly refused to meet and discuss with us the differences existing between us, we deem it fitting and proper to outline briefly in this address the position assumed by the International Typographical Union and our claims for its justification.

We maintain that the duration of a day's work should not be determined by the caprice nor by the greed of the employer, but should be influenced, if not controlled, by the economic conditions existing. In view of the thousands now out of employment—notwithstanding our much vaunted period of unprecedented prosperity—we believe that an universal eight-hour day will go far toward providing a remedy for this deplorable condition, if it does not furnish a panacea. The flattering reports coming in from all parts of the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union furnish unquestioned assurance that our effort to establish an eight-hour day has practically already succeeded, and if any further assurance were needed, it has been furnished in the enthusiastic session just held by the southeastern eight-hour convention.

When the convention adjourned, subject to the call of President Gaines, the delegates felt that the meeting had not been in vain, but, on the contrary, much good would result from the meeting, as each one would return to his home and carry out the plans adopted by the convention, which would undoubtedly result in carrying to a successful issue the question of the eight-hour day in this section.

After adjournment the delegates were taken in tow by the Atlanta printers and spent the time in sightseeing, visiting Ponce de Leon Park, Atlanta's "Coney."

As a fitting close to the convention, a banquet was tendered the visitors at the Kimball House at night, when the magnificent new banquet hall of this famous hostelry was formally dedicated.

The following program was carried out at the banquet:

Introductory remarks by W. S. Wardlaw, chairman eight-hour committee, Atlanta Typographical Union No. 48.

Toastmaster, Press Huddleston.

"Atlanta," Mayor J. G. Woodward.

"Welcome," W. P. Harding, president Atlanta Typographical Union No. 48.

"Eight Hours," Albert E. Hill, organizer International Typographical Union.

"Southeastern Convention," E. W. Gaines, president southeastern convention.

"The Pressman," E. L. Parham, president Atlanta Pressmen's Union.

"Federation of Trades," J. B. Hewitt, president Atlanta Federation of Trades.

When the formal program had been concluded, the delegates and prominent guests were called on for impromptu remarks. Among those who responded were Hon. C. T. Ladson, M. C. Wallace, Fred Alexander, Dennis Lindsey and W. H. Winn. Earle E. Griggs recited an original eight-hour poem.

A feature of the banquet that resulted in much favorable comment was the absence of the customary intoxicants. It was an impressive moment when Toastmaster Huddleston proposed a toast to the president of the International Typographical Union, James M. Lynch, and the entire assemblage rose as one man and drank to the health of the president and his successful conduct of the great eight-hour day campaign—in water!

The Atlanta meeting of the southeastern eight-hour convention will long live in the minds and hearts of those who were fortunate enough to attend, and there can be no doubt as to the good results achieved. W. S. WARDLAW.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

This city made no attempt to celebrate Labor day, some of the large manufacturing concerns running the same as usual. Possibly the local workmen have become skeptical and believe they have nothing to celebrate.

Several members of No. 429 went to Lansing, Mich., on September 4, marching in the parade with the Lansing Union, which entertained them hospitably and shared no expense to make the visit enjoyable.

Roy Johnson, who formerly resided here, and who now pounds the keys in Beaumont, Texas, stopped in Battle Creek on his way south from the Toronto convention. Roy has prospered since he migrated.

Our union has been informed that Mert Ashton, a Seventh Day Adventist printer of this city, is working in Chicago at Rand, McNally's. Ashton held a card for a short time after the Review and Herald burned down.

From the number of offers received from Chicago by local typos, it would seem that the Battle Creek proprietors had furnished their competitors in the Windy City with a list of the employes they wished to get rid of.

Four of the largest offices in this city have passed through the receiver's hands during the past twelve months. As we have been until recently entirely a ten-hour, open-shop town, this should help to convince opponents of the shorter workday that prosperity and long hours are not synonymous.

C. W. Post, in one of his latest effusions on his favorite topic, starts with the heading: "Insane Editors. «Hate Destroys the Brain of the Labor Union Publishers." Then follow two columns of appeals to prejudice instead of reason. After a careful perusal of this and other articles of his, it would seem safe to say that union publishers are not the only ones whose brains are destroyed in this manner.

Battle Creek printers are looking for an exceptional run of prosperity this winter, with hard coal at $8 per ton and the inability to enforce a $2 a day scale for nine hours. We believe we lead southern Michigan, and perhaps the United States, in the price of coal.

The different uses to which we put the city water supply might be worth mentioning. Owing to some legal technicality, Lake Gognac is being used as a public bathing resort. The lake is about half a mile wide, and on any warm night several hundred bathers may be seen disporting themselves in its refreshing waters, which are being used for drinking purposes, etc., etc., by the rest of the community. To add to the intrinsic value of this liquid, the cows on the dairy farms bordering on the lake use it for quenching their thirst, wading about to their hearts' content.

Battle Creekites are looking for a general picking-up of business in the near future.

CHARLES DE BRUYN.

NORFOLK, VA.

It is to be regretted that the members of our local showed such little enthusiasm in Labor day. We did not have as many in line that day as we might have had. Perhaps we will ride in carriages in 1906, as we did in 1903, at which time every one was present when "time" was called. We can hardly expect, though, for many comps. to endure the hardships of a twenty-five-minute march through streets, when they expect to tramp around for several hours afterwards. 'Tis too fatiguing.

A contract with the local typothetæ prevented a walkout of the book and job men here. It is to be hoped that the committee appointed at the September meeting will, at their conference with the typothetæ, secure the eight-hour day without any trouble. Eleven job shops have signified their intention to work eight hours after January 1. Maybe the others will see the advantage of such a move, also.

At this writing a double-decker mill has just been installed in the Dispatch office.

On August 22, at the democratic primary, E. W. Gaines led the ticket for delegate to the legislature. His majority was up in the hundreds. That shows what organized labor can do if every one "sticks." Hold together like that on the eight-hour workday, and we will surely win out.

Business still holds good here.

A small delegation from our local went up to Richmond on the 17th for the purpose of encouraging the boys of No. 90 who are out.

Whenever you can, do not forget to put in a word that will help to bring the International Typographical Union to our city in 1907. We are going to make a strong bid for the convention for that year (exposition year). ELWOOD F. MOORE.

HOLYOKE, MASS.

From all accounts we have nothing to be ashamed of in regard to our convention, either in attendance or in enthusiasm for the eight-hour day. And then, too, we had the proceedings printed in such good form in THE JOURNAL that it was a pleasure to read of the business transacted.

Business in job work still continues quiet.

The Transcript is installing another double-deck linotype in the job department.

Be sure you patronize label goods, and request your friends and others to have the label on their printing.

The eight-hour movement is now conspicuous in many cities, and the victories already won show that it is only a matter of a short time before it will be the universal workday in the printing trade.

Do you know of any non-union prints?

E. S. ALDEN.

BOISE, IDAHO.

Labor day in Boise will long be remembered as one of the most successful in her history, every union participating in the parade, and for the first time all merchants closed their places of business for the day to join in the celebration. Boise today is one of the best organized cities in the Pacific northwest.

Ed Sinnott, representing the American Type Company, of Portland, has just completed setting up two presses, one in Twin Falls and the other at Weiser, and expects to have one running in Hood River by the end of the week. Shows the progressiveness of southern Idaho.

Avery C. Moore has bought the Weiser World. Already the World has taken on metropolitan airs in the shape of a Simplex and a new press. Avery and our friend "Lige" Caton, now of Portland, did valiant work for the eight-hour day in the legislature two years ago, but were defeated by the mine owners of the state. Avery, in his Labor day address in Boise two years ago, won the hearts of all union men when he said: "A union card is a badge of honor." He evidently still believes it to be so, for at No. 271's last meeting he gave notice that six application blanks were needed at Weiser for his employes.

SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

Secretary J. H. Strief, of the Iowa State Federation of Labor, on a recent Saturday evening repaired to the little city of Le Mars, twenty-five miles distant from Sioux City, and completed the organization of Le Mars Typographical Union No. 651. To Organizer Evans is due the credit for the union's inception. This is a result that has been desired on the part of Sioux City for many years, and to know that thirteen faithful have resolved to make our gods their gods and to sleep at the feet of unionism is a realization of the godfather's fondest hopes.

President M. E. Ingman resigned his office at the last meeting, and was succeeded by W. H. Duncan. Mr. Ingman and his family, including his son, Eugene, who is a linotype operator, have moved to Seattle, where he expects to reside in future. He has proved himself to be one of the most conscientious union men Sioux City has ever had, and the good opinion and high esteem in which he is held is based on nearly two decades of experience in Sioux City. He is a man of the highest mental and moral character and is a valuable addition to any community in which he may choose to reside.

As an illustration of the fact that printermen are successes in all branches of business, be it known and remembered that Thomas F. Boyd, who was a compositor on the Philadelphia Ledger from 1873 to 1881, and who was well and favorably known as one of the "swifts" before the war, has been manager of Sioux City's only opera house for over a year, and last year conducted the house through the most prosperous season of its history, this statement being true in spite of the further fact that W. I. Buchanan, ex-minister to Brazil and director of the Buffalo exposition, was at one time manager of the same playhouse. Mr. Boyd is sixty-five years young, as Elbert Hubbard would say, and is full of interesting reminiscences. He relates that he visited Philadelphia a year ago and found but one of his colleagues of a third of a century ago, now employed in the Ledger composing room. Like Mark Twain, Mr. Boyd started out as a tourist printer when he was only twenty years old, and worked on the old St. Louis Globe and the New Orleans Crescent, and on the Sacramento (Cal.) Union before the war. His younger brother, Sam Boyd, long since deceased, accomplished the remarkable feat of setting 101,000 ems in six days on the Philadelphia Ledger. Though Mr. Boyd retired from the trade twenty-five years ago, he is a printer by trade, and proud of it.

John Elvin, who twenty-three years ago was a caseholder on the Sioux City Journal, along with Gus Mattison, "Gabe" Runkles, Charlie Embeck, Tom Collins, Mandel Marx, "Red" Hill, Joe Mikesell, Will Pierson, Cogswell, Tom Boland, and when George Augustus Somarindyck, now of Syracuse, N. Y., was galley boy, came to town the other day and stayed a week. John's home is in Minneapolis, where he has lived for the past nineteen years. John originally came from Nebraska City, but the zephyrs of many years have whisked rapidly by, and the place now knows him no more, except as his recent visit there refreshed the memories of the elders of the printing craft. Elvin never forgets the cold winter's night eighteen years ago when he and "Knocker" Kennedy came over from St. Paul to pay the scribe a visit at Austerlin's printers' boarding house in Minneapolis. There was much of the stuff that cheers, and those who added to the gaiety of the occasion were such celebrities as "Sad-Eye" Macbeath, "Billy" McArthur, Bert Peake, Jimmy O'Rourke, Mose Williams, John Lambert (now of Denver), Joe De Barth, John Painter Hinkle, Alma Murdock and "Majah" McGillicuddy. Great joss house—that of Austerlin. By the way, this same Austerlin is now a salesman for one of the largest printing and stationery houses in the northwest, at fifty "plunks" per week, owns property in St. Paul, and is otherwise accredited as an estimable citizen of that town.

Oh, yes, while I think of it: Perhaps few of his thousands of friends recognize in the name of W. H. Williams, the present state labor commissioner of Minnesota, an oldtime friend. But he is none other than the widely known "Windy" Williams, who was copycutter on the Tribune in Minneapolis many years ago, and who came with the Alden J. Blethen force of men from Kansas City when that distinguished gentleman, now of Seattle, gathered up his personal effects and $125,000 in cold cash, as the result of five successful years of newspaper business in the city on the Kaw, and made his debut in Minneapolis as a business partner of the polished and suave "Willie" Haskell, who now is doing the business manager "stunt" on the New York Journal for W. R. Hearst. "Windy" is just the same as when on Sunday nights he used to cut "fat" takes of copy (perhaps only time copy out of the old Craftsman), and watch the wise ones "pull out" to get a chance at the hook. Time and its mutations leave "Windy" none the worse; he has played a losing game at politics in his state, at times, as have nearly all democrats, but his patience is being rewarded, as he now is a shining light in the Minnesota political firmament, and those who will remember him and glory with him in his success are legion.

"Mickey" Hickey is now a full-fledged Eagle, having journeyed safely the tortuous and devious path and taken the "awbligation" in all its imposing solemnity as imparted by Chaplain Emerson. He is now entitled to take a seat alongside his somewhat more distinguished though hardly less strenuous brother, Theodore Roosevelt. That "Mickey" is proud of his newly acquired honor it is needless to mention.

Ex-Public Printer Frank W. Palmer, who was recently deposed from his office, certainly has one good friend and sponsor in the west in Hon. George D. Perkins, editor and proprietor of the Sioux City Journal. Mr. Perkins was for eight years a member of congress, and was Speaker Reed's chairman of the committee on printing. Editorially Mr. Perkins alleges that the government printing office is a citadel of graft, both large and impecunious, and that Mr. Palmer is a victim of its enmeshing thraldom. Mr. Perkins' real and only complaint against Mr. Palmer is that in his old age he was not wise enough to perceive the handwriting on the wall and retire with a good name. While Mr. Perkins is one of the best employers of union labor, and is a believer in its tenets, hopes and aspirations, he says that the labor unions control the politics and internal lack of economy in the government office, and points out, by implication, that if the business of the office is not administered with more justice along the lines of economic progress, the reaction, when it comes, as come it must, will be both harsh and inglorious to the cause and principles of union labor. But primarily congress is the guilty factor, says Mr. Perkins. And Mr. Perkins is right about it!

A. D. SCOUGAL.

WASHINGTON, PA.

The last meeting of this branch of the International Typographical Union was, in attendance, about the largest on record. For the first time in No. 456's history a young lady was in attendance, and the way the "boys" were spruced up with their best union-made clothes on, and all with an eight-hour smile, added brilliancy to our already handsome meeting room in a $1,000,000 county courthouse. Ex-Delegate McCracken, fresh from Toronto, was listened to attentively and his speaking "On the Goodness of Our Brother Kanucks" brought forth applause. Mr. McCracken was appointed a committee of one to get members from the ranks of the printers at Canonsburg, seven miles from here, a town which has one daily and one weekly newspaper, with a good job shop in connection with the mentioned daily publication. There are about eight or ten eligible union men at Canonsburg and the committeeman's accomplishments in "bagging the game" will be watched for. If tact, diplomacy and fairness will do it, Mr. McCracken is "on the lid."

It is with a certain satisfaction—and should be entertained by all—that we see that the American Press, published by the American Press Association, makes much mention in a recent issue of the Printers' Home and other typographical union matters. The issues of this publication go broadcast to the different "front offices" of all newspapers in the United States and Canada. On these grounds we can pardon the publishers somewhat for not crediting certain paragraphs to THE JOURNAL.

William Smith, ex-president of Pittsburg (Pa.) No. 7, who has been employed in the Journal job rooms in this city for a year or more, is at his old home in Mingo Junction, W. Va., suffering from what is termed by reputable physicians as lead poisoning.

Now that John D. Rockefeller entertains personally the newspaper jokesmiths, the Society of Typographical Journal Correspondents can see light ahead. Ship ahoy! John! old pal!

Miss Corre Spondent: Would you consider it a poisenal question if I asked what nationality yer pop wuz? Mr. O'Dirks: Coitenly not; he's a printer.

The daily report of the Toronto convention printed in the Globe of that city was received in this city daily, and the same was posted up in the Record chapel, where all who wished to could see what was going on.

It may be gratifying to the union printers of this city to know that Washington's school board buys nothing but "label" books. Robert Doyle, of hand-set days, is a member of the school board, and imparts this information.

Pay days in "Little" Washington nowadays are spoken of as when "canonized bones burst their cerements."

The strike of the brewery workers in this town has been amicably settled, and the "wurzeberger flows, flows!"

"Publishers to Fight Eight Hours" is a headline in a New York newspaper. How happy they would be if they had only to fight eight hours! —Ex.

THE "OPEN SHOP" QUESTION.

In my opinion, the question of the "open shop" is one which far overshadows anything that ever came before the International body during its existence. It is so far-reaching that it is almost impossible to grasp the situation. It exceeds in importance the nine-hour day, the eight-hour day, or any other issue that ever came before the International. If I had my way about it I would rather return to the ten-hour day, if thereby that terrible phantom, the "open shop," could forever be eliminated from the printers' horizon.

Your correspondent has worked in "open shops" before his union interdicted it, and I must say it was anything but pleasant. In one place they all received more than the union scale, so they said, but as there was no amount marked on the outside of the envelope, and as they invariably sneaked off in some out-of-the-way place when they opened their envelope, it was always a question in my mind if they even got the union scale. If they did, it was always a conundrum in my mind what for. Supposing they do get the scale, look at the enormous sums which are paid out annually by our membership to maintain that scale, while the unfair men pay nothing. Is that right? Is it justice to our own membership?

The "open shop," in the opinion of your correspondent, is a deadly menace to every printer within the jurisdiction of the International body. Not only to printers, but to every trades organization throughout the country. Witness the loss of a strike by any trades body, and they are immediately confronted with this hideous proposition—the "open shop."

The typothetæ seems willing to surrender almost everything in order to get this desideratum. Look at their advertisements for help wanted—they almost invariably wind up with "open shop." Why so persistent in this matter, if not for their own benefit?

It would decrease our membership at least one-third, I estimate. Because, in our body, like in some cities and towns, there are people who like good roads, streets, courthouses, etc.; they know an excellent thing when they see it, but they hate to put their hands in their pockets and pay for it, if it can be avoided.

At the last session of the International body I don't think they paid the attention to the "open-shop" question which they should have done. They seemed to be too much engrossed with the eight-hour movement, a question which, I think, is virtually decided. But they have struck us in a more vital point, as witness the recent strike in Chicago.

WILMINGTON, DEL.

Labor day was celebrated in our little city by the largest parade of organized labor ever held here. It was under the direction of the central labor union, and was the result of careful and painstaking labor of several months. The march was under the auspices of Chief Marshal S. H. Fairland, assisted by Aides J. C. Shaw, Edward McClintock, Harry Behen and A. R. Saylor. The parade was in three divisions, and each was well supplied with music. At the close of this portion of the exercises, adjournment was made to Brandywine Springs Park for the addresses of the day. The chief speaker advertised, P. J. McGuire, of Philadelphia, was, through some unavoidable occurrence, unable to be in attendance. Harry Behen, president of the central labor union, was the presiding officer, and introduced the speakers. John Ogden, of Baltimore, was the first speaker, and he paid particular attention to the benefits constantly accruing from organized labor and the necessity of acting as a unit in matters which concern our welfare. He paid his respects in a very decided manner to the labor union man who failed to participate in the parade. His principal theme, however, was the value of the initiative and referendum, and, as an old member told your correspondent, "It was the very best I ever heard, and I felt amply repaid for all my trouble in going to hear him." This is also the sentiment of a great many more of his auditors. The following speaker paid more attention to the trusts and their attendant evils, scoring them for their activity in affairs of state and other political work which did not come properly under their notice, and neglect of conditions relating to their employes and their welfare. This speaker was John M. Dorney, and his speech showed much study of trust conditions as given by reports of the United States civil service commissioners. We might enlarge on some of the points, but other matters will take that space. Taken altogether, it was a day well worth the labor of the committee, and one which advanced the cause of unionism in our small city.

The action of Columbia Union in passing a resolution fining members for doing extra work on their own account after the day's labor in the shop was commented on by Every Evening (Wilmington) as follows:

> Here are men to whom the eight-hour day is irksome, because it does not occupy their time sufficiently, and so they seek employment of some of their spare hours and, incidentally, add to their profits by working outside of the regular hours. * * * It is no wonder, in the face of the conditions we have cited, and of other conditions even more potent, that employes generally should resist the unwise and impractical proposition.

We have known of cases where men would work all day and "sub" on a morning paper at night, thus keeping a fellow workman, who stood in need of work, out of a job. This is one cause of so many men becoming beneficiaries of public charity. Columbia Union is to be congratulated upon the step it has taken, and it would be well if some more of our large unions would follow her example.

The eight-hour committee of No. 123 has issued a circular letter to the members asking for a full attendance at the October meeting, that final steps may be taken in reference to the shorter workday. For some unexplainable cause the attendance has been small for the past several months, and it is hard to awaken interest again. This should not be. We have only a short while until the first of 1906, and, with every printer in town working, the chances of an easy victory look exceedingly good. But we must stand together, for if we are divided we shall certainly fall. The union which divides itself on such a question is one which shows no spirit of progress and stands good chances for surrendering its charter for the non-compliance with the laws.

The last issue of THE JOURNAL was eagerly awaited in our midst, possibly because we were denied the privilege of having our representative in attendance. It was an exceptionally good number, and interesting from cover to cover.

We are glad the convention was an "eight-hour convention," and will do all in our power to further that end. D. H. RUSSELL.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

At the last meeting of the union the initiation fee was raised from $5 to $10. New members from this city and outside towns are taken into the union at every meeting. Little Rock is now thoroughly unionized in the printing trades line. Little or no trouble will be had over the eight-hour day, except possibly in one of the large job offices.

It is now understood that the Democrat newspaper and job plants will be located in separate buildings later on. As now planned, the newspaper will occupy the Thompson building, on Fourth street, and the job department the new building, which will not be completed for some time.

Labor day was not celebrated to any great extent this year, on account of yellow fever and quarantine regulations.

As far as is known the Chicago Typothetæ has met with poor success in securing printers in this section of the country. Not one left Little Rock for Chicago as a strikebreaker.

Work for machine men is good at the present writing. OTIS WILSON.

EIGHT-HOURS.

Each and all take heed—it's coming,
In the world's great busy humming,
Gladsome news will greet our ears,
Hailed with joy—to quell all fears.
Typos listen, stand together!

Hardships wane and stormy weather
Once and for all lose their stinging,
Ultimately to us bringing Reasonable hours and wages,
Sought by us through gradual stages.

Just a short time yet my brothers
And you'll see, as will all others,
Naught but joy and satisfaction
Unalloyed—gained through our action.
Are we in the bounds of reason?
Right must prevail in any season,
Yet being right we make demand.

Firmly, and as one we stand,
Increased wages and eight hours,
Released from arbitrary powers,
Safe within our fold we cherish,—
The victory gained shall never perish.

WHAT'S WHAT?

The several articles in the August number of THE JOURNAL on the question, "Should Trade Unions go into Politics?" leads to the above exclamation. I suppose all of the writers had in mind whether it would be advisable that members of labor organizations act as a political unit on election day.

Much can be said on this subject, and no doubt will be, each of the contributors reflexing sentiments in substantiation of their beliefs and varying as the conceptions of men differ on all questions affecting the interest of the working class.

To approach this subject intelligently, it appears to me it is essential that we arrive at a general conclusion as to what a trade union or labor organization represents and what are its aims and objects. I bear in mind that a trade union is a body of craftsmen who have come to a realization of the fact that as workers they have interests in common, and that it requires concerted action and intelligent consciousness how best to safeguard their wellbeing. They know that the employing class has no particular love for them as workers, and their labor efforts are contracted for at a price that can be made mutually agreeable insofar as it guarantees the employer a profit in the transaction. It is a question of dollars and cents to the buyer of labor power as much as it is to the seller thereof. Unless there is profit in an industrial enterprise the capitalist will not engage in it, and if the worker can not get a living in following a vocation he looks about for an opportunity that will afford it.

It will not be denied, I think, that the employer has somewhat the best of the bargain. In the first place, he has at his command some means of his own, or those intrusted to his care, with which to carry on his industry or pursuit. Then as an individual he is also possessed of labor power which he can apply according to his aptitudes. The worker, as a rule, has only his labor power at his command, and must try and find a buyer for it on the most advantageous terms to himself. If a fellow worker will work for a lower price than he has been receiving or is satisfied with less than he wants, other conditions being equal, the employer will hire him who offers the greatest profit. To overcome this underbidding of one another workers organize, agree upon wage scales as a standard of effort, and fix the number of hours per day in which they will create wealth for others at the terms named.

This buying and selling of labor power is the basis of the class war, or class struggle, as the socialist says. It is purely a question of economic determinism. One finds it to his economic advantage to contract for labor efforts under conditions that will be profitable; the other finds that necessity compels him to seek a buyer of his energy and permit him to apply it in wealth productions that he may satiate himself and perchance perpetuate his species.

That is the industrial relation. But besides the industrial and economic relation, as workers, we also constitute a part of the social and political life of our communities. Our employers, whose material interests are opposed to ours, also constitute a portion of society, and are affected by the relations that may obtain. If we, as workers and wealth producers, subjugate ourselves to social environments inimical to our interests, it must necessarily follow that the employers benefit thereby. The static relations seldom undergo a change unless dynamic forces revolutionize the system.

As political factors in our social life workers according to conditions environing them have allied themselves with the dominant parties, republican or democratic, whig or tory, liberal or conservative. And as long as the industrial system did not manifest the great contrasts between those that work and those who work the workers, it was natural that they should endorse the policies of those political parties which met their approval. But how about today, when the power of government is utilized almost exclusively in protection of vested rights, so-called, and which have resulted from the exploitation of the workers.

Are we not confronted with the fact that the interests of the employing class are antagonistic to the working class? Do we find that members of the employing class, in utter disregard of their material interests, make common cause with the working class in an endeavor to make life more worth living? I dare say not.

Agreeing to the conclusion here presented, it thus behooves us to admit that trade unions and labor organizations should teach the members thereof that consistent action on their part alone can lead to results. They must study economic relations and their effect politically. Understanding, then, that in competitive system of production the working class without a political organization to effect their social relations is like a ship without a rudder in a stormy sea. Common sense ought to suggest that members of trade unions act as a political unit on election day. Not to endorse candidates, but nominate them on platforms representing working-class issues.

Keeping in mind "that material interests dominate men's actions" or "that man is dominated by his material interests or what he considers them to be," I have no hesitancy in predicting that the working class will soon cease to be cajoled in acting contrary to its wellbeing. ROBERT BANDLOW.

NEW LONDON, CONN.

On Wednesday, September 6, a strike was declared in three of the job offices in the city that had refused to sign the new contracts with the eight-hour-day clause attached. President Murphy called on the several proprietors during the last week in August in an endeavor to have them sign for the eight-hour day, as our contracts ran out the first of September. He was unable to meet with any success. President James M. Lynch was notified, and he sent Organizer Charles T. Scott here to assist No. 159 in negotiating the new scale. On the arrival of Organizer Scott he, in company with President Murphy, visited the several proprietors, and after several long sessions was able to secure the signatures of the Day Publishing Company, which operates the Morning Telegraph, Evening Day and a job establishment; the Daily Globe, and M. J. Sullivan Print, to the eight-hour contracts. At the New London Printing Company the manager was not willing to sign until the others had signed (we learned the next day that the several proprietors had voted to stand firm against signing the eight-hour contracts), so we gave him until Wednesday, September 6, to sign. On refusing, the office was struck, and everybody walked out at noon. The Utley Printing Company was visited, and the proprietor claimed he had a contract with the typothetæ not to sign before January 1, 1906. This office was also struck and the men came out. The Bingham Paper Box Company refused to even consider the eight-hour day and was opposed to the nine-hour day. It was decided to call the men out here at noon, Thursday, September 7. James A. Rogers, Charles D. Douglass and Olin W. Paige refused to walk out. The other three members of No. 159 employed here obeyed the mandate of the International Typographical Union.

The three gentlemen (?) of the "long-tailed" variety who have stayed in their hole have been a drag on us for some time. They never did show much unionism.

The conditions are thus briefly told: At the Bingham Paper Box Company, of the three men who remained in, two are working and another has been laid off; the Utley Printing Company and the New London Printing Company have been obliged to close their doors. At the next writing we are confident we will have two of the three offices inside the fold. We have but seven men out, and two-thirds of the membership working, and will get the eight-hour day January 1, 1906.

We are all alive in New London, and are in a happy frame of mind. Prospects are good for a settlement of our trouble shortly. No success as been met in trying to import "rats" here. We are too well organized in the surrounding towns. Organization in the country towns is what counts.

New London can boast (?) of the first "rats" on the eight-hour day. We have three, and are not proud of them.

One of our members told a proprietor that a man who broke the International Typographical Union obligation was not fit to talk to the dogs.

New London will be represented in New Haven at the state convention, September 28, by Robert Tarring, our secretary-treasurer, who is vice-president of the association. Others of our members will also attend.

Let us all get together and give a strong pull, and we can win out. Let no one get "cold feet." Be an honest, true man, and not afraid to stick to the greatest, grandest labor organization on earth.

Please send us a "rat" trap. We are afflicted with three, two of whom are musical.

ROBERT TARRING.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

The August meeting of No. 33 was held at Boyden Heights, East Providence. President John Moffatt, of the New England Allied Printing Trades, was present and spoke on the progress of the eight-hour movement in this state. The committee on revision of the constitution reported, were given authority to print, and a special meeting was ordered before the next regular meeting for the purpose of considering proposed changes. A committee of three was appointed to make preparations for parading on Labor day, and a tax of $3 was ordered on those members who failed to participate without valid excuse. The auditing committee reported and were given a vote of thanks for their excellent work. William Carroll was elected delegate to the annual meeting of the Rhode Island Federation of Labor.

Both delegates submitted reports to the union at the August meeting. In their opinion, nothing could exceed the splendid hospitality of our Canadian brethren. The souvenir was the finest specimen of the typographic art ever issued on such an occasion. The enthusiasm displayed for the eight-hour day was unanimous and contagious, and the almost unanimous blow struck with firmness at unjustifiable personalities was very gratifying and is expected to have far-reaching effect.

There was so much rain on Labor day that the parade of the labor organizations had to be postponed until Sunday, September 10, when it took place.

Delegate Maurice E. Hughes, after returning from Toronto, left again for a visit to his native place in New Brunswick, Canada.

James Muspratt was on the sick list for the greater part of August, but is now entirely recovered.

Albert E. Morrill passed his vacation in Durham, N. H., his boyhood home.

A meeting of the printers employed in the several printing offices in the Pawtuxet valley was held in G. A. R. Hall, Phenix, on the evening of August 30, when a preliminary organization was effected. Organizer Scott, President Moffatt, of the Allied Printing Trades Council of New England, and President O'Connor, of No. 33, were present and explained the objects of typographical unions. It is a good field for such a movement, as the mass of the inhabitants of that section of the state are working people.

Thomas Boyd McQueen, of the New York Herald; William F. Elsbree, of the Boston Globe; Delegate Edwin Taylor Morse, of Hartford, Conn., on his way back from the Toronto convention; John H. Porthouse, master printer, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Edward B. Hall (1857 charter member of No. 33), of the New York Times; Frank J. Capron, of the Worcester Telegram; Albert P. E. Doyle, of the government printing office, Washington, D. C.; G. F. Schofield, of the Baltimore Sun, and A. T. Hilburn, of Philadelphia, Pa., have been in Providence recently. WILLIAM CARROLL.

TYPOGRAPHICAL TIPS.

Hello, Bill!

Who escaped being put into irons en route from Toronto? What flag is that? Now laugh, darn ye!

Me for Colorado Springs!

Is Herbert W. Cooke "big" enough to know better? He certainly had fun at ye brewery.

B. J. Hawkes, of "Big 6," was our heavyweight.

Best International Typographical Union convention that I ever attended. No. 91's entertainment committee was busy every minute—and those mementoes from the convention were worthily bestowed. Our compliments, gentlemen of the committee.

The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks meets in Denver next July, the International Typographical Union at Colorado Springs in August. For my part I believe that it would be a good move if the two dates could be brought nearer together, so that we could make it a double-header. This paragraph is respectfully referred to the executive council for further consideration. I would like to hear from other JOURNAL correspondents anent this matter.

Frank Kidd, of No. 101, was the noisiest kid that attended the convention.

I wonder if Bobel, of No. 8, will have that "pig" at Colorado Springs next year?

Fred T. Irwin, of No. 152, Manchester, N. H., (who, by the way, is a ringer for Bloomer, of Washington), got more snap shots than the official photographers. I hope that he will favor THE JOURNAL with some of them.

We have our labor to sell for eight hours per day—make your bids, gentlemen of the typothetæ!

Ask John F. Busche, of "Big 6," about the "Leaden Heel" when you write to him for one of his convention cards with the "invisible label."

There were 1,026,499 immigrants landed at the United States ports during the fiscal year ending June 30—not many book and job compositors in the lot, however.

The first appointment as United States commissioner of labor was made by President Arthur in July, 1884, John Jarrett, of Pittsburg, Pa., being the appointee; Mr. Jarrett's commission was revoked, however. No further move was made to put any one into the office until the latter part of November, 1884, when President Arthur appointed John D. Fahrenbatch, of Ohio—this appointment was also recalled. Matters drifted along for some time until Mr. Arthur, at the solicitation of the adherents of "Terry" Powderly, practically promised that his appointment would be made. In spite of this, the whole question drifted along until January 22, 1885, when Carroll D. Wright, of Massachusetts, was given the commission. Mr. Wright was at that time the commissioner of labor for Massachusetts, and held the two offices very successfully until 1888, when he relinquished the Massachusetts commissionership. The United States bureau remained under his control until January 31, 1905, when he was succeeded by Professor Charles P. Neill, of the Catholic University, Washington, D. C.

Poverty is heightened by the increased power of capitalism.

"Cheap Labor Wanted."—What does $1 per day mean to a workingman and his family? It means poverty, privation and debt; children forced from the schools into the workshops—the wives and mothers to the factories; it means a future race dwarfed in body and intellect; it means more jails, reformatories and poorhouses; it means more taxation; it means a larger immigration; it is not a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. The average wages paid in 1900 in the manufacturing industries of the United States was but $437.93. This was very near the $1 limit.

New York, N. Y. WILLIAM S. WAUDBY.

A FEW WORDS.

To the Officers and Members of the Society of Typographical Journal Correspondents:

The annual meeting of the Society of Typographical Journal Correspondents, held in Toronto, Canada, August 15, 1905, unanimously elected me president for the ensuing year. I ask your unanimous support in an endeavor to make the society a power for good, not only in the affairs of the International Typographical Union, but throughout the entire labor movement. With this end in view I wish to offer the following

SUGGESTIONS:

1. The annual meeting voted to request all correspondents to devote at least one paragraph a month to the eight-hour day from now until its universal inauguration.

2. In preparing correspondence an effort should be made to have something of general interest; to include matters of broader scope than those which affect only the printing trades, and to touch upon those things which affect the movement as a whole; take broad ground, and discuss questions which will tend to educate and elevate the minds of the union printers of this country, and give them to understand that there is something more to the labor movement than the mere paying of dues.

3. Correspondents are requested not to confine their efforts to the columns of THE JOURNAL, but to write from time to time something for the other labor papers outside of the printing trades. The International Typographical Union has always taken high ground along the lines of industrial reform, and stands today as a shining example to other labor organizations. Its members are looked up to for advice and counsel; don't let them ask in vain. The pathway of most labor papers at best is rather thorny, and those who possess the ability to write entertainingly should appreciate this and act accordingly. The press of this country is today publishing a mass of comment and criticism from outside the labor movement; it is up to us to give facts and comments from inside. I would be glad to hear the opinions of the members on this subject. Write me.

Your officers invite suggestions. By exchange of ideas and a practical application of them there is no question but we can make the Society of Typographical Journal Correspondents a power for good in the labor movement of this country.

More suggestions anon. Fraternally,

HERBERT W. COOKE, President.

LAND MONOPOLY—ANTI-MILITIA.

In the review of the Toronto convention in the September number of THE JOURNAL I am credited with having proposed a resolution "endorsing single tax." That was not my purpose or intention. The resolution was introduced for the purpose of having the International Typographical Union delegates to the American Federation of Labor convention propose and support a change in the plank on land monopoly in the American Federation of Labor platform, so that it would read as follows: "The abolition of the monopoly system of land holding by taxing all land at its full value." This can be done at the present time in every state of the Union and every province of the Dominion, and assessors should appraise all land according to its value. Had I intended an endorsement of single tax I would have added the following words to my resolution: "And the abolition of all other taxes now levied," which would include taxes on buildings, machinery, personal property, polls, licenses, imports, etc. Plank 10 of the American Federation of Labor platform now declares for the abolition of land monopoly by substituting therefor an occupancy and use title. Such a system would not prevent the private appropriation of ground rent. It would give the person occupying and using a valuable location an advantage over a person using a less desirable location. It would be a denial of equality in the right to the use of land. It would give special privileges to some instead of equal rights for all. It would be applying to the land question the same unjust theory which was in vogue in the old days of hand composition in unfair or non-union newspaper composing rooms, where favored individuals set the "fat" and pocketed the unearned increment. In union offices, where a square deal was in vogue, the men who handled the "fat" paid for the special privilege they enjoyed, and in that way equality was established as near as possible between the "fat" and the "lean," or between the department frame and the news frame. Simple justice demands that the square deal should apply to land tenure. The occupancy and use theory as applied to land is the same as that in vogue in "rat" offices.

If debate on Delegate Berger's anti-militia resolution at the Toronto convention had not been cut off by a call for the previous question, I would likely have taken the opportunity to speak about as follows:

"Soldiers are idlers on the back of labor. They do no productive work. The useful laborer's business is to produce wealth. The business of the soldier is to cut off human life.

"Standing armies and large navies are maintained not to battle with outside enemies, but to perpetuate the rule of injustice, monopoly and trusts, a la Colorado last year and Russia this year. The United States should be too great to do an injustice to another nation, and that greatness should prevent an injustice being done to this country.

"Wars of conquest are usually undertaken for the benefit of land grabbers, franchise promoters and exploiters. The beneficiaries should do the fighting for themselves.

"It is not patriotism which drives recruits into the army, but an industrial system which makes jobs scarce and employment hard to find at even starvation wages. Many a young man enlists that he may not starve in a land of plenty. And others enlist because of the fact that it is human nature to make a living with the least possible exertion, or along the lines of least resistance. And in consequence many enlist who would rather be idlers than useful workers.

"If productive workers must support idlers other than landlords and monopolists, I would respectfully suggest that it be those who are unable to get employment, rather than those who don soldier togs and carry a 'shoot gun.' The rifle of the soldier is likely to be aimed at the laborer with very little provocation." W. L. CROSMAN.

THE UNION BUTTON AGAIN.

How can we make the typographical union button more in evidence, is a subject to which I have given considerable thought of late, and when I saw Mr. Schmidt's article in the August number of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL I was convinced that there were others who had this question in mind.

Of thirteen union printers I have interviewed on the subject during the past six weeks, but one has been the possessor of a button. According to the statements of these gentlemen it was not that they objected in any way to the button, but simply because they had "not got around to it yet." We all know how it is; some little thing, like the button, which we could well afford and really want, we will put off sending for from day to day and week to week. Perhaps we are very busy and dislike to spare the time to order it and so neglect a real duty, not only to ourselves but to the whole organization.

I will make a suggestion which may further the popularity of our union button. Add 50 cents to the regular membership fees and thereby provide every new member with a button with his first membership certificate, and notify the secretary of each local union that on a certain date there will be a special assessment of 50 cents on every one who does not have a button; said secretary to ascertain the number in need of buttons and order accordingly. It seems to me that this would surely give the badge greater popularity, as I am convinced that the majority of the younger members, at least, would wear it.

Would be glad to hear from members anent this subject. JOHN N. PAGE.

VAGARIES OF THE COMPOSITOR.

Here is a collection of the vagaries of the newspaper compositor, which appear for the first time. They were preserved by the proofreader, who intercepted them en route to the paper. Oftentimes it is impossible for the operator to decipher a word and he gets it as nearly right as possible, depending on the man higher up to figure it out. This idea is, no doubt, responsible for most of the following. It is safe to say that such mistakes as go the rounds credited to the printer originate in the mind of the "funny column" editor, who occasionally is at loss to fill space. No sane person is going to believe that the printer ever made Mrs. Jones hold an "infernal" reception, instead of an "informal" reception. Such things are credited to the printer in much the same spirit as all witticisms are accredited to the Irish.

It was in copy from a Methodist convention that the printer made it read: "The Rev. Charles Kendall took as his subject 'Wood in Warships.'" It is hard to imagine a Methodist minister talking on this subject. What the copy really said was: "The Rev. Charles Kendall took as his subject 'Word and Worship.'"

In the report of a wedding, by careless manipulation of the keys, Lieutenant and Mrs. VanCleve had a "marital" wedding, when really they had a "martial" wedding.

About an examination for nurses to enter the hospital service the typo made it read thus: "There was an extermination of nurses at the city hospital this morning. There were fifty candidates." Most people will agree that there is a slight difference between an "examination" and an "extermination." Such a report scattered broadcast naturally would discourage any one who purposed entering the profession.

At another time the compositor compelled the state fish and game commissioner to confiscate a 100-foot "scene," instead of a 100-foot "seine."

With the penchant some penmen have for separating the letters composing a word it is not hard to see why the printer made it read: "The '50 ft corn' in Kansas is doing well," instead of "The 'soft corn' in Kansas is doing well."

The "Want" ads are the bane of the newspaper printer. They are, with few exceptions, hurriedly and poorly written. It is no wonder, then, that in advertising for a hostler the advertiser was made to advise applicant to come "leary," which, as is known, is the slang expression for "afraid," when he really wanted him to come "early."

In a laundry ad the laundry firm announced that "We call and get your 'lawn dry.'"

A farmer had for sale a "big, fat mule." The compositor interpreted it a "big footed mule."

SALEM, ORE.

It has been some time since I have seen No. 210 represented in the columns of THE JOURNAL, and as no one else seems to care to "take his pen in hand," I will endeavor to have a mite to say occasionally from this part of the Webfoot state—but why that appellation has been applied to Oregon I have not yet been able to determine.

Salem will have no trouble the coming January as far as the eight-hour movement is concerned, as all the offices are and have been working on that basis for some time. Both newspapers are paying over the scale, and, considering the population, the membership in general is very much pleased with the condition of affairs as they at present exist.

John C. Knowland, formerly of the Statesman job rooms, has leased a plant and started in business for himself.

The Daily Statesman has recently enlarged and added a couple of situations to its force. All of which will help some.

The Northwestern Publishing Company a short time ago incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000, purchased a two-story building, and rumor had it that Salem was going to have another daily paper. So far, however, it has failed to materialize.

F. L. Whims and August Krantz were delegates from the typographical union to the state federation of labor meeting, held in Portland, September 4, 5 and 6.

The summary discharge of Public Printer Palmer demonstrated the fact that, after all, President Roosevelt is running the slipboard in the big government printery.

Organize the country printer. The typothetæ seems to be casting a life line in that direction, with what degree of success it is hard to determine. We need the country printer, both for his own good and to increase the membership of the International.

An American Federation of Labor organizer could do a little missionary work in this vicinity, I think, with some success. There was a time when Salem had a well-organized central body, but of late it has gone into "voluntary bankruptcy," so to speak, and I do not believe it would require much of an effort on the part of a good "mixer" to put several now defunct unions on their feet.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

The writer has only one improvement to suggest for future International conventions, namely, that they be held oftener and in every section of the country, so that all may have an opportunity to attend. The average printer, like his fellow workman of other trades, is apt to view the labor problem from the narrow limits of his own "alley"—from the local environment in which he spends the greater part of his life. Not coming in contact with broader influences, he sometimes criticizes the officers and policies of his union, not with any desire to be unjust, but simply from lack of a larger understanding of affairs. To attend one of these great conventions and observe the manner in which the business is conducted, to listen to the discussion of important questions upon the floor, and to mingle with working people from north, south, east and west of this great continent—all these experiences help to broaden the intelligence and sympathies of the visitor and increase his confidence in himself and his class. To be a delegate or visitor to an International Typographical Union convention means to be an "international unionist" for all time.

No. 15, at the September meeting, ratified, by a practically unanimous vote, the new agreement with the Democrat and Chronicle. The contract is to run for three years, and grants an increase in wages all along the line: Operators are to receive $22; admen, etc., $19; jobbers, $16—and eight hours. The new scale of wages is to go into effect immediately, the eight hours on July 1 next, at which time the last existing contract expires. This agreement is now in force.

Marshall R. Dutton has been elected recording secretary of No. 15.

Lucius D. Phinney died in this city on Tuesday, September 12. Mr. Phinney at the time of his death held the oldest card in Rochester, having joined Syracuse No. 55 in 1853. He was one of the charter members of No. 15 when it was reorganized in 1883. His fidelity to the cause never failed him throughout his long and honorable career, and by his death the International Typographical Union loses a stanch friend and coworker.

On Saturday, September 16, the union printers employed in eight of the typothetæ offices of this city quit work, after a refusal to grant the eight-hour day. Owing to the Saturday half-holiday, other shops did not go out until Monday morning. Those employed at the Post-Express remained at work pending the arrival of the proprietor, who was absent from the city. It is expected that about 150 will be affected by the strike. Every effort was made by our officers to arrive at a peaceful settlement of the difficulty, but in each instance where a member of the local typothetæ was approached he claimed to be without authority as an individual to treat with us. The proposition was then put up to their local organization, and, after some little delay, it flatly refused to recognize the eight-hour day. Each chapel then made a last demand upon the individual proprietor, and upon his refusal to concede the shorter workday, all quit work. While pressure and temptations of various kinds were placed upon our members in an effort to break the eight-hour movement, they remained firm and unshaken, and, with one or two exceptions, were loyal to their obligation. The chief objection made by the typothetæ against the eight hours—the increase in the cost of printing which the consumer would not pay—was proven to be fallacious when some firms offered their workmen as high as $6 above the scale if they would abandon the eight-hour demand. The tie-up of the several offices was complete, the foremen walking out with the men. One of the most inspiring sights, however, was the appearance at headquarters of the Andrews delegation, among whom were six of our lady members. The only efforts made by the shops affected to "run" have been to set to work a lot of miscellaneous boys, old men, etc. Up to time of writing (September 18) thirteen independent firms have signed eight-hour agreements, among them being the Democrat and Chronicle, the largest firm in the city. The outlook is promising, and before this letter is read it is expected that the eight-hour day will be firmly established in Rochester.

HENRY D. HENDERSON.

ATLANTA, GA.

Labor day in Atlanta was fittingly observed. The parade was bigger, brighter and better than ever before. And it was essentially an eight-hour parade. Every man in line wore a huge eight-hour button. Eight-hour badges were everywhere in evidence. On the floats were painted, like circus dates, the figure 8. It was a fine compliment to the typographical union, and every one seemed to be fired with eight-hour sentiment. "Eight hours! Eight hours!" The cry resounded all along the line of march. And W. S. Wier, a member of No. 48, the orator of the day, made a splendid eight-hour speech. Labor day in Atlanta was a magnificent eight-hour rally, proving conclusively that every other organization is behind the printers in their effort to secure for its book and job members the shorter workday.

Hon. C. C. Houston, twice a member of the Georgia legislature, is now a candidate for councilmanic honors from the third ward.

Several of the delegates to the southeastern eight-hour convention remained over in Atlanta for a few days, and their stay was made enjoyable to a degree. Oza Blodgett, president of the Chattanooga Union, was accompanied by Mrs. Blodgett, who was entertained while in the city by the woman's auxiliary. Schoppert, of "B'ham," and Davis, of "Jax," were loath to leave the Gate City of the South. Fred Alexander, of New Orleans, and Henry Hanson, of Memphis, seemed to be delighted at the fact that the yellow fever quarantine regulations necessitated a ten days' stay in this city before they were permitted to return to their respective bailiwicks.

The Atlanta News (afternoon) will likely inaugurate a Sunday morning edition at an early date. Also considering the advisability of installing a double-decker (of the "Maud" pattern) in the adroom.

cil of the International Typographical Union, the officers of No. 48 have been quite busy within the past few days securing agreements from the book and job employers to the effect that they will inaugurate the eight-hour day on January 1, 1906. At the present writing agreements have been secured from ten firms. None of these, however, are members of the typothetæ. Several conferences have been held with a committee from the typothetæ, as well as individual members, with no good results. It is quite evident that unless the typothetæ members sign within a day or so the men will be called out. The struggle, if it comes, will be of brief duration. Even now, with no strife, we can not supply the demand for printers.

W. S. WARDLAW.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The printers of this section are awaiting with keen interest the outcome of the eight-hour controversy in the east. The newspaper reports are not always reliable, but we glean enough to feel sure that there are signs of victory in the air. So many independent offices have signed up with the unions that the inability of the typothetæ shops to operate without thorough co-operation on their part, and the assistance of competent workmen, on the other hand, presages a successful issue.

Our situation remains unchanged, excepting that all the locked-out men have secured positions, and the two or three offices leading the forlorn hope are daily becoming satisfied that eight hours and no more is the fixture-day for San Francisco. We are indebted to hundreds of friends in printing circles throughout the country for words of congratulation on the outcome of the contest, and more particularly for information and other assistance furnished at the right time.

Delegate H. L. White has returned from Toronto. He speaks in glowing terms of the hospitality tendered him at the hands of the Canadian entertainers, as well as the officials of the unions visited.

Walter T. Eager, of the Chronicle, died on August 24. He was a native of Lowell, Mass., forty-five years of age, and was employed on the paper named for twenty-three years.

The Labor day parade was a great success. The labor council walked up one side of the principal thoroughfare—Market street—while the building trades council paraded on the other side in the opposite direction. The men marched eight abreast, and the continuous lines, with the mounted officials, the floats and the music, made up a stirring scene. It is estimated that between thirty and forty thousand men and women participated, and the allied printing trades division made a specialty of the eight-hour victory. Appropriate badges were worn, with a medallion bearing a large figure "8" and the word "hours" beneath.

The trade unionists of this city are a good deal exercised over the injunction proceedings that are used to our detriment in labor controversies. We believe that the constitutional rights of free speech and free press are invaded by some of the decisions. The larger question of whether citizens are not entitled to publish the truth, to protect the advantages organization has given them, to guard zealously the boon of one day's rest in seven, and to watch for encroachments on the wage and hour scales, is entirely lost sight of. If John Smith feels that he has the God-given and free-American privilege of working his cooks and waiters seven days a week, and he is named as a man unworthy of organized labor's patronage—something we have a perfect right to do—he immediately informs a judge how his business is suffering and secures an injunction restraining anybody and everybody from interfering. The question simmers down as to whether John Smith is of more importance than thousands who are concerned in his action, who may lose their day's rest because of the natural desire of other employers to compete on an equal basis.

A consignment of new labels just received from Indianapolis reminds me that Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood is authority for the statement that San Francisco uses more labels than any other city in the land, except Chicago and St. Louis. We have succeeded in adding to our list the name of one of the largest offices here that has side-stepped the issue for years. And there are one or two more to follow.

G. I. Brayton, whose letters to THE JOURNAL have attracted considerable attention, has left the lands beneath the Southern Cross. He was last heard of in Germany, where he couldn't find an English-speaking typesetting machine, and where the linotype scale is $8.50 a week of forty-eight hours, and $7.25 (fifty-four hours) for hand composition. Mr. Brayton contemplates a visit to all the European capitals, and longs for another sight of the beauties of San Francisco.

The president of the local citizens' alliance, Herbert George, of Colorado, published a story in his weekly (and weakly) paper in Denver that has caused mingled merriment and disgust. Mr. George has a brilliant style peculiarly his own. His pen is polished, his flow of language flawless, and as a leader of morality he is superior to his rivals in the anti-union field. Mr. George told how the citizens' alliance "whipped the unions" (?) in the recent primary election. And didn't the big editors here gnash their teeth when they read the statement! "It was so diplomatic," they didn't say. The moral side of the story dealt with a "mash" of the citizens' alliance man on the ferry boat. Inasmuch as the readers of THE JOURNAL are all respectable, suffice it to say that the young lady's hosiery was described, her language repeated, and "Honey" George (as she called him) told of a visit to a French restaurant over which the veil will be drawn.

The Union Printers' Mutual Aid Society believes in taking time by the forelock. Though the picnic for next year is nine months away, committees are at work, and the place of gathering has already been decided upon.

J. J. Chaudet, of the Call, and his bride are spending their honeymoon in Kentucky. St. Louis and San Francisco printers congratulate the couple.

WILLIAMSPORT, PA.

It was a hummer—haven't got, nor ever will get, over the enthusiasm and good time at the convention. Waiting (now look pleasant) to hear the call To-ron-to, Canada, again.

One of the newspaper offices here has one of the likeliest labor-saving "cubs" on earth today. Too much trouble to change name of month on first page date, so he made it August 32.

E. W. Till has gone to Phœnix, Ariz., for his health. From latest reports he is not regaining it at a very rapid rate.

That inspired last paragraph of the eight-hour committee's report should be upon the tongue of every member. Read and reread it; you will not weary of it.

We wonder how many ex-delegates walked a mile or two, or a square or two, while in Toronto? We know a few who did.

President Cooke, of the Society of Journal Correspondents, says he will have something for the membership to do. Good; always ready to do things, especially for our own "best of them all" JOURNAL.

S. HERMAN ALTER.

MONTREAL, CANADA.

Labor day was this year celebrated with added enthusiasm, especially among the printers. Led by a fife and drum band, both unions (145 and 176) joined together, each having a carriage and banner. Union No. 176 had two printers' devils, dressed entirely in scarlet, carrying a banner with the inscription, "We turn over a new leaf, and will not work more than eight hours." There were about 300 printers in line. The line of march was long, but just at the end it rained—and it rained, with the result that the games had to be postponed until the following Saturday, and were then carried out very successfully.

A serious fire occurred in the premises of C. R. Carneil, Craig street, September 13, which almost cleaned out the entire four floors. The fire started in the composing room on the third floor. The compositors had worked till midnight, and about 4 in the morning the fire was discovered. It was caused by a defective wire. Mr. Corneil is considerably inconvenienced by the fire, as there was a great deal of work on hand. Temporary quarters were secured in the adjoining premises. The loss is about $30,000, fully covered by insurance. No lost time resulted.

The approximate loss of time through trade disputes in Canada during the month of August was 57,775 working days, compared with 48,584 in June and 46,500 in July, 1904.

The latest reports to the Labor Gazette (government) shows the printing trade in Canada to be in good shape. Reports received from correspondents at thirty-four centers are as follows: Very busy, 2; busy, 8; active, 15; quiet, 6; dull, 2; no report, 2.

The twenty-first annual session of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada was held at Labor Temple, Toronto, September 18.

We should look after the Cummings memorial fund.

William Gilmour, ex-president, and delegate to the Washington convention, was, on Friday, September 15, presented by Recorder Weir with the medal of the Royal Humane Society for his heroic effort to save the life of Alfred Moorehouse July 1. Mr. Gilmour richly deserves it. As the recorder said, it took a good deal of nerve to hand over one's child to its mother (Mr. Gilmour was carrying his baby at the time) and jump into a rapid stream, with the possibility of never again seeing his own.

Boom the eight-hour day.

Ernst Kreft and Mr. and Mrs. Hawkes, Philadelphia; E. S. Sherman and J. Vander Perel, Denver, and Mr. Cherry, Indianapolis, were among those who stopped over in Montreal after the convention.

Ed Tilley has left the Star, and is now employed on the Herald.

JOHN CANTWELL.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

At the time of writing this, work is brisk in all the shops, and one or two more men could easily beat out the price of a meal ticket.

Our Labor day parade was a hummer. It was undoubtedly the biggest one ever held in Oklahoma City. The typographical union went out strong, it being necessary to collect only three $5 fines for not marching. The members wore linen dusters and yachting caps, and carried white umbrellas, and should have had first prize for being the best appearing local in the parade, but through something we have been unable to understand we got second money, the painters taking first prize. But my! my! our boys certainly looked fine! and our lady members, too, dressed all in snowy white and leading our bunch in a "low-necked" hack.

Our label committee has been doing some vigorous label campaigning the past month, distributing several thousand cards with a request on them to the merchant to have the label on his printing.

We are all pulling hard for the eight-hour day on January 1, and, while the shops insist that our appeals will be in vain, we are hoping for the best.

Joe Rogers, who has held down the jobroom foremanship at the Times-Journal for so many years, is now the heavy makeup on the Oklahoman. Mr. McIntosh has also switched, and is now at Harper's jobrooms.

The dose of medicine administered to Shelby Smith by the convention was undoubtedly a bitter one for him, but let us hope that Mr. Smith will have the good sense to obey its mandate and make the apology that is undoubtedly due the executive council, thereby closing the incident and devoting himself to the paramount issue—the eight-hour workday. The council might have made mistakes—as all of us have done, and they would not be human if they had not—but as for being in league with rats—well, none of us believe that; but, on the contrary, we believe the executive council is actuated by the best of motives in all that it does. Right about, Mr. Smith, and put your shoulder to the wheel!

Cornell Guthrie, one of our oldtime members, was through recently, but didn't stay long. Cornell has retired from the struggle for the present, and will do overtime on dad's farm and raise poultry for a living.

Cards deposited—L. Garrison, Fort Smith; Cornell T. Guthrie, South McAlester, I. T.; H. B. Haley, Montgomery, Ala.; William Wingo, South McAlester, I. T.; J. T. Norton, Phœnix, Ariz.

Cards withdrawn—Cornell T. Guthrie, H. B. Haley.

W. H. MARTIN.

PITTSBURG, PA.

The report of the Toronto convention read by Delegate Fred Klein was quite a treat, there being but one bad feature in it, viz.: the vote for convention city in 1906. Few delegates ever took more pains to give a report so terse, yet giving a better idea of the transactions of each meeting. A vote of thanks was tendered Messrs. Klein and Kennedy for their labors.

William H. Barnes is about again. He recently underwent an optical operation. It is hoped the desired improvement in sight may speedily and permanently come to him.

The typothetæ representatives who have been scouring and advertising in this vicinity have met with little or no success. They did not get a dozen men all told, and it is an assured fact that those they did get are only going at their expense and have no intention to scab in Chicago or any other place.

We now have a net membership of 550—coming up a little, e'en though it be but slowly.

We had a goodly number in the parade on Labor day, the largest turnout No. 7 has had for two years. We were represented in the officiary, also, Harry Driver and Joseph L. Evans being the ones chosen. Brother Evans received quite an ovation as we passed him in the review. One face sadly missed was that of Mark Gordon, who is now working in Cleveland. A photo was taken by the Dispatch artist, and displayed the morning after the parade on the front page of that paper. "Tommy" Jones, a member of No. 7, beat the noisy drum in the band which furnished our music. The exercises following the parade were largely attended.

President Samuel Gompers was a guest of labor organizations in our city for a few days. Besides being here for celebration of Labor day, he, with the local committee, did much preparatory work for the American Federation of Labor's coming session, which convenes here in November. When about to depart for the east, he was given a grand send-off, which was styled as a very unique thing by our city papers. The committee in charge sang until the train was out of sight. The entertainment and treatment generally which Mr. Gompers received here certainly made him feel glad he came. He seemed to be practically the guest of all the city. Old City Hall was chosen as the best place to hold the convention of the organization.

An International Typographical Union button! Where can I get one? The query was put to me three or four times on Labor day. Now, don't ask again, but "plank down" your 50 cents and demand that you be furnished one. If our secretary-treasurer has "all sold out," he will immediately send for more. It is indeed a surprise to see stanch old veterans in our union army without even the semblance of the International Typographical Union on them (some don't even carry working cards in their pockets, only when about to "pay up"). Personally, I belong to three other organizations, yet the International Typographical Union emblem is the only emblem ever worn by me. Don't neglect this matter longer. The committeeman in one office recently asked the secretary to send for about five for his office; instead, Secretary Lafferty sent for ten or twelve, and the committeeman returned but two out of the box. This button, to my mind, sends more chills up the back of the members of the typothetæ than almost anything I know of, save the eight-hour button.

Here in Pittsburg the typothetæ in recent convention did not effect any great scare when it put Harry P. Pears, of the W. G. Johnston Company, and W. J. Golder, of the Pittsburg Printing Company, again on their officiary. Even our papers, in printing the news, poked a little fun at them by unintentionally calling them H. P. Pars and W. J. Golter. (Mr. Golder is German, and that is the way some of our boys pronounce his name.) Both these bosses have long been against every move we make. Mr. Pears tried hard to keep up the fifty-seven-hour week.

Any "print" who has been employed on Herr's Island knows the genial Ernest Crawshaw. He has left the stock sheet printed there and has gone to a place more inviting, I believe. Bellevue, Ohio, a fine little town near Sandusky, invited Ernest to come there and take charge of its best plant. Sorry, as all who know him are, we bid him goodby and wish him and his family well in their new home.

Our Pittsburg papers are now giving place to typothetæ "want adds" that might scare some people unaware of the actual condition and the success they are bringing. Just six appeared in one paper on the 18th inst. Two were from Chicago, one from New York, one Detroit, one Springfield, Ohio, and one to answer a local agent now in our city. I received a letter to call and see an agent stationed at one of our hotels and registering from New York. When I called he had gone. His efforts were a failure, just as have been all attempts hereabouts, to gather up supplies for other cities.

Work is still very slack in most of our shops.

Two of the largest went back on "short time" again this week.

President Samuel Gompers will address our chamber of commerce when here in November. This body has several boss printers among the membership, and his little spokerage may do us a little good. HARRY C. CAMPBELL.

LAS VEGAS, N. M.

There have been great stunts performed in the Optic office since my last writing. Work galore, and for months ahead, is the problem to be faced in this hustling city of the southwest. The two machines here have been working day and night, and an extra operator is badly needed and would receive royal treatment without need of asking.

The postponed monthly meeting was held on Wednesday, September 13, and two new members were brought into the fold.

No. 312 took a leading part in the celebration of Labor day, the president and one other member being on the arrangement committee. Several meetings were held in connection therewith, and the biggest Labor day celebration ever held in Las Vegas was the result.

You ought to have seen our badges—white silk streamers with "No. 312, I. T. U., 1905," boldly printed in black.

Some gossips have said they didn't know the printers of Las Vegas were organized; they do now, though.

The members are much interested in the changes made in the laws at Toronto. They are all certain to record their votes, too.

No. 312 will have a delegate at Colorado Springs, so 'tis said, and the writer thinks so, too.

Only one new arrival this month, and it was interesting to hear the hurried "Are you an operator?" and notice the silence that followed.

S. J. SANSOM.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Dan Patch is all right; he can travel a few most any time and more especially when there is a large stake in sight for the fellow who buys his oats. Yet when comparisons are made, it can truthfully be said that the International convention has the "makins" of a record breed about her get-up. After a careful perusal of all that appeared in the last issue of THE JOURNAL, one can not help but come to the conclusion that every man entered had set out to win a record, and the aggregate prize was the eight-hour day, with blue ribbon attachments and a gold medal thrown in. There can be no fault found with any one thing—barring but one—with all that was done. That one thing is rather a delicate subject to speak about, but as it is in the minds of some, it perhaps may not do any harm to mention it. While we personally have deplored the vituperations emanating from various sources, more especially from Philadelphia, we from this distance can not but see a vast difference in the sentence meted out to Shelby Smith, had those gentlemen who had been maligned and vilified, after receiving their pound of flesh, turned the other cheek and remarked that we still are brothers. The convention with almost a unanimous vote testified to the fact that they not for one moment believed what had been said about the International executive board. Then after the charges had been proven not true, and the pound of flesh was about to be exacted, why would it not have been both Christianlike and magnanimous to have poised the uplifted sword and pleaded his forgiveness, that he might have gone forth a better and truer disciple in the cause of unionism? It may perhaps be none of our business to mention this, it comes to us, and it has come to others. It was a lifelong opportunity that seldom comes to mankind to forbear—we hope it is not too late to show that same spirit.

By the time this reaches the readers of the Twin Cities they no doubt will be in the eight-hour column or will be making ready to hie themselves to the pineriés for the winter. At the last meetings of Nos. 30 and 42 a committee of seven was elected to formulate a scale and present it to the typothetæ of the two cities. This new scale had but minor additions to the old one with but one exception, and that referred to the number of hours that should be worked per week. The two committees were composed of the following gentlemen: E. J. Shaw, chairman; T. W. Hynes, Oscar Anderson, S. C. Nobles, Will Libby, Newt H. Stillwell, Will J. Rohr, Minneapolis. C. A. Palmer, secretary; C. H. Higgins, Bert Burlingame, Chauncy Barnes, Ray Ginzkey, J. N. Rendler, C. S. Tousley, S. Paul. The makeup of the committees was such that both the machine and job branch were represented.

We are indebted to Vice-President John W. Hays for a copy of the beautiful souvenir to delegates, issued by Rochester Union No. 15. In it we recognize many familiar faces, and all of them handsome ones. It was a very tastily printed booklet, and its publishers, T. F. Moore and Robert N. Chapman, also remembered us through the courtesy of John Kennedy, who was a visitor at the convention. Thanks.

James Williams, of the Daily News force, suffered the loss of his little daughter the past month. In his bereavement he has the sympathy of all.

There is a persistent rumor going the rounds that the Minneapolis Daily Times will give up the ghost and pass into history on or about the 19th inst. How well founded this is we have been unable to learn, but the indications are such that something is bound to happen.

The Minneapolis Journal announced on the 15th inst. that, beginning October 1, it would issue a Sunday morning paper. What effect this will have on the newspaper situation in this city remains to be seen. However, as the associated press franchise of the Times expired upon the 19th, some of the wise ones avow that it is the forerunner of the death of the latter paper, and others say that the Minneapolis Daily News will take over the plant and issue their paper from the Times' plant.

Before this reaches our compatriots the strike for eight hours will have begun. Here in the northwest we have been making preparations for many suns and moons; and so have the proprietors. When all is summed up it would appear that the printers have both jacks and the ace, king and queen, euchre being the game. We may be mistaken, but about all that is expected is a vacation of a week or so, and then a shake of the hand and the putting of the nose to the grindstone once again. Never before in the history of No. 42 has there been such a unanimity of feeling as at the present time, all of which augurs much for the future.

It would appear to a man up a tree that the typothetæ would have to select their campaign workers from the ranks of unionism, should they ever expect to win in measuring swords with a foe worthy of their fierce (?) assaults. Still, let them remember that "he who lives to run away may, perchance, live to fight another day."

The eight hours are as inevitable as rent, as positive as taxes and as certain as death. You can not dodge them. WILL J. ROHR.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

In the September JOURNAL, it is noticed, quite a number of correspondents boasted of the strength of the printers' delegations in the central bodies. Along this line No. 89 is not behind. Of the five offices of Chattanooga central labor union, three are held by printers—who constitute a majority of the executive committee.

President Blodgett represented this union at the southeastern eight-hour convention, held in Atlanta, made a satisfactory report of the proceedings of same at last meeting, and says the Atlanta bunch treated the delegates "all right." Mr. Blodgett was accompanied by his wife.

W. H. (Bert) Woolly has the sympathy of numerous friends in the loss of his wife, whose death occurred the first of September. Mrs. Woolly had been in declining health for several years, and her demise was not unexpected. Interment was at Knoxville, Tenn., the old home.

John Tinker, of the Times chapel, was quietly married to Miss Jenny Elder on the evening of September 7. The bride is a talented and popular young lady of Chattanooga. John, besides being an esteemed member, is prominent in several fraternal orders, and is well known here and elsewhere.

Labor day celebration was somewhat of a change this year. The parade feature was abandoned. Exercises of the usual nature were held at Olympia park, under the auspices of the central labor union, and the day pleasantly spent by a large number of people.

Chattanooga felt fortunate in securing the chairmanship of the label committee. Chairman Barnes was a good man for the place, and "there with the goods."

O. F. Pennebaker, a past president of No. 89, is president of the local musicians' union.

Over 200 firms have signed agreements to have the label on their printing.

Dan M. Jones, of the MacGowan-Cooke Company, attended the meeting of the Great Council of Red Men of the United States, at Nashville, during the early part of September. Mr. Jones is high up in the order of Red Men, and attended the great council in the capacity of great representative of Tennessee.

THE JOURNAL improves with each number. Wish it could be issued fortnightly, as under the old plan.

Who said the convention here in 1907? Do you mean it? "JACK" O'BRIEN.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

Our delegate to the convention of the International Typographical Union at Toronto, O. E. Alberts, presented his report at the last meeting of our union, and a report it was. The universal opinion was that "never in the history of the union was a better, more explicit and elaborate report presented." Brother Alberts is very much elated over his trip, and gave an accurate and descriptive account of all travels, as well as of the doings at the convention. "Baldy" has a unique collection of visiting cards, printed matter, souvenirs, etc., which followed him from Toronto to Schenectady. His extended report was favorably received by the members.

Our president, Dennis M. Mahar, attended the state convention of the workingmen's federation at Ithaca last week as the delegate of our union.

Oscar Maynard, foreman on the Evening Star, who accompanied Delegate Alberts on his trip to Toronto last month, we regret to say, is very low with typhoid fever at his home in Canada. Everybody knows "Mike" to be of a jovial disposition, and, being so far remote from his friends and the city of his labors, his illness makes conditions doubly sad. Every printer in Schenectady fervently hopes that Mr. Maynard may recover speedily and soon return to us.

Another visitor from Schenectady who accompanied Mr. Alberts was Adelbert Hall, who says he had the best time of his life while away from his machine.

Ho for Colorado Springs in 1906! The first candidate in the field is Orra Bourne, who is just now busily engaged figuring it out "why his chances are not just as good as the other fellow's."

The war being waged by the International Typographical Union throughout the country for an eight-hour day has reached this city. The printers employed in the General Electric shop are the only ones affected in Schenectady; all other offices have been working eight hours since last December. The General Electric chapel and the eight-hour committee are at this writing holding conferences with the officials of the company, and everything looks favorable for a satisfactory settlement.

Our Labor day parade was partly spoiled by a steady downpour of rain, but the parade took place just the same. The picnic was a grand success, and netted the trades assembly the sum of over $500. We now have in our Labor Temple fund over $1,500. L. J. HUMPF.

In Memoriam

THOMAS J. SCHOLES.

The Mailers' trade district, in convention assembled in Toronto, Canada, ordered the following resolution spread upon the minutes:

Whereas, It has pleased an All-Wise Ruler to call from our midst our fellow member, Thomas J. Scholes, of New York Mailers' Union No. 6; and

Whereas, The membership of No. 6 have lost a faithful friend and right true and worthy member through his many years' connection with the union, and the Mailers' trade district a stanch and true co-worker.

Whereas, In memory of the worthy dead we feel called upon for expressions of sorrow and sympathy; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we hereby extend to the bereaved family our sincere and heartfelt sympathy; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the deceased's family, a copy to THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL for publication and a copy spread upon the minutes.

JOSEPH M. CHRISTIE.

The following resolutions on the death of Joseph M. Christie were adopted by St. Paul (Minn.) Union No. 30 at the September meeting:

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to remove from our midst our coworker and brother, Joseph M. Christie; and,

Whereas, This union has lost a stanch friend and unionism an ardent advocate and earnest worker in the cause, one who was always ready to stand up for the principles he thought were just and right for the betterment of all, even though he should lose in a financial way by so doing, one who was always willing to lend a helping hand to a needy brother; and,

Whereas, That in the death of Mr. Christie it is fitting that proper recognition should be made of these qualities; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this union extends to the bereaved ones our sympathy and condolence in their hour of trouble; that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to his widow; that they be printed in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL and the Minnesota Union Advocate, and that the charter of this union be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days in his memory.

PATRICK J. FOGARTY.

Patrick J. Fogarty died at his residence, 29 Seventh street, on August 28 from an apoplectic stroke, received three days previous, in the seventy-first year of his age. The deceased was a native of Castle Comer, Ireland, and left there a boy, settling in Kingston, Canada. He came to New York in 1850, and had been a resident of the Seventeenth ward for the greater part of that time. For a number of years he did the printing for the board of domestic and foreign missions of the Episcopal church. He retired from business a few years ago after being connected with the printing department of R. G. Dun & Co. for over twenty years. He was an old member of "Big Six," and he leaves two sons, both members of the union, and two daughters, one being the wife of ex-President Murphy. He was well known among the older generation of printers and had the respect and confidence of his fellow-craftsmen. His funeral was held on August 31 from his late residence, and was attended by members of the Dun chapel, who laid on his casket a wreath of flowers. Services were held in the Church of the Nativity, on Second avenue and Second street, and interment was in Calvary.

JAMES E. HENNIHAN.

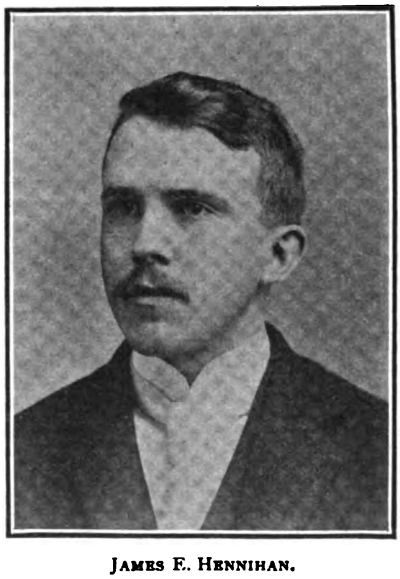
The following resolutions have been adopted by Springfield Typographical Union No. 216:

It was with sorrow that this union learned of the death of its much esteemed fellow member, James E. Hennihan, which occurred August 10. Mr. Hennihan had many friends among the printers of this city and was always a faithful worker for the union; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this union greatly deplores his demise, and that his loyal spirit and fidelity to our principles shall be held in loving remembrance by this union; also

Resolved, That this union extends its sincerest sympathy to the family of our late brother, and assure them we share their grief for the departed; and be it further

Resolved, That the charter be draped for a period of thirty days, and a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, and also spread upon the records of this union.



JAMES E. HENNIHAN.

VOLNEY PATTEE.

Volney Pattee died at Beaumont, Texas, August 18, 1905. Death was sudden, in a physician's office. Verdict of coroner, heart disease. Mr. Pattee held an honorable withdrawal card from Tacoma (Wash.) Union No. 170, of date April 3, 1893, signed by J. L. Gibson, president, and B. H. Bennett, financial secretary. Mr. Pattee had been an employing printer in this city for several years, and had always conducted a union office, although he had not identified himself with our local union.

OFFICIAL BATTLE CRY OF THE I. T. U.

We propose to sell to the employer eight hours out of twenty-four, and we will do as we please with the remaining sixteen.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES.

Items for the official columns of The Journal should be prepared on a separate sheet, and the style of the paper followed as closely as possible. Such items should not be made a part of a letter dealing with other subjects, for if this is done the items are likely to be overlooked, even though the greatest care be exercised. Write as plainly as possible—especially proper names—using one side of the sheet only. Communications must in all instances be accompanied by the author's name and address. All official matter must be in the hands of the editor BEFORE THE TWENTIETH OF EACH MONTH, to insure insertion in the issue immediately following. The observance of the foregoing will tend to insure what is desired by all—promptness and accuracy in the publication of official matter.

THE JOURNAL MAILING LIST.

When a member requests a change in his Journal address, he should give the name and number of the union with which he is affiliated, together with his present and former address.

Additions to the mailing list can only be made when received through the local secretary. Members not receiving the magazine should furnish the local secretary with their addresses.

Additions, corrections or alterations reported by local secretaries should be kept separate from other correspondence. When a member deposits his card, and his name is reported for the subscription list, the secretary should state where the member previously received The Journal, and give the name and number of the union with which he was affiliated. When a member draws his card, is suspended or expelled, or in any manner ceases to be an active member of the local, the secretary should request that his name be dropped from the mailing list.

A large number of those who take cards and remove to unorganized towns fail to renew their cards. To prevent loss in such instances, it has been decided that members holding cards, and located outside of the jurisdiction of a local union, must either deposit their cards with the nearest union and pay dues each month, or pay International dues in advance, in order to get The Journal. Where a card-holder pays his dues to the local in advance, a specific report should be made by the secretary upon the case, in order that the name can be placed on the list and the magazine sent to the member for the time for which dues have been paid.

The 25th of each month is the latest date upon which changes for the succeeding issue can be made on our mailing list.

Upon request, secretaries will be furnished with a copy of the list of their members to whom The Journal is being sent.

All correspondence regarding The Journal should be addressed to J. W. Bramwood, Newton Claypool building, Indianapolis, Ind.

NOTICE.

Roanoke (Va.) Union No. 60 will not accept any traveling cards for the present. Traveling printers will do well to take some other route.

T. W. Hudson, Secretary.

THE unions do something, in fact a great deal, to improve conditions within the sweatshop, but they do it principally by insisting on the replacement of the small shop by the large factory. Besides aiding the unions in this splendid work, the best that can be done is to demand the enforcement of the ten-hour law for women and to amend the law so that it shall give them two more hours on Saturday. If the unions are properly supported they will see that this law is enforced.

The unions can not raise wages to any extent, but they can regulate and level them. Their success in introducing the factory is due principally to the union label. Anything that helps this label aids in the abolition of the sweatshop.—William English Walling.

OFFICIAL BATTLE CRY OF THE I. T. U.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., September 20, 1905.

To the Officers and Members of Subordinate Unions:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—Though the by-laws prescribe that the secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union "shall publish in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL a sworn statement of the balance of his bank books of deposit monthly," and "a full monthly statement of receipts and disbursements of all kinds," it is the unanimous opinion of the executive council of the International Typographical Union that it would be inadvisable and detrimental to the best interests of the organization to technically adhere to these provisions during the present struggle for the eight-hour day.

This being our unanimous belief, and in accordance with our sworn duty to safeguard the interests of the International Typographical Union at all times, the secretary-treasurer is hereby instructed to omit the publication of the monthly balance and the monthly statement of disbursements above noted, until further instructions are given, and the monthly financial statement of said secretary-treasurer shall be confined, for the present, to the publication of receipts for per capita tax, supplies, etc.

It is understood, in this connection, that a complete statement of said disbursements and balances shall be published in monthly sequence in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL at a later date. This, we believe, will comply with the intent of the law requiring the publication of expenditures, and at the same time fully protect the interests of the organization.

Fraternally yours,
JAMES M. LYNCH,
HUGO MILLER,
J. W. BRAMWOOD,
Executive Council International Typographical Union.

THE CHURCH AND LABOR.

The first two paragraphs on page 297 (September issue), containing part of The Journal's editorial comment on the movement set on foot in the Presbyterian Church by the last general assembly to investigate the relations between workingmen and "the church," have in them the very pith and marrow of the reason why the new generation of workingmen hesitates to continue the intimacy of the former generations whose lot was cast in an industrial organization less strictly outlined. The very elements that now have to be combated in the daily work, and their affiliated elements, are found to be, in the cities especially, the chief factors in what has come to be called "the church."

In the writer's opinion, the surest test of the sincerity of the brotherly interest that "the church" takes in workingmen would be to submit to each board of session and trustees (and to the clergy in so far as it would apply to them), a catechism as to whether or not each elder or trustee is an employer or employe; whether in a manufacturing business, or mercantile, or banker, broker, or insurance man; whether a doctor or a lawyer; whether he is a member of an employers' union or labor union; whether he employs union labor or runs an open shop, or is antagonistic to labor unions.

As to the appointment of committees by the Home Mission Board throughout the country, let the scrutiny extend to these committees, and if it be found that their members are in a large majority in favor of shorter hours and better pay for the "artisan" class, and in favor of abolition of child labor and restriction of female labor, then surely the onus is on the workingman to show cause why he should not enroll himself with such a band of brothers.

A simpler plan might perhaps be to submit to synods and presbyteries a resolution embodying tersely the aims and aspirations of workingmen, polling these bodies by yeas and nays, and having the ministerial fraternal delegates communicate the results to the unions for mutual study and adjustment.

International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union

PRESIDENT'S NOTES.

When we inaugurated our International Union, on January 1, 1902, we were still confronted with an important problem which required solution. I refer to the fact that there was on that date a minority comprising about 800 organized electrotypers which was not disposed to affiliate with our International Union. These electrotypers were organized in five local unions, located in the cities of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston and Buffalo.

The most friendly relations had always existed between our membership and these independent electrotypers, both bodies appreciating the fact that it was not a question of unionism which separated each from the other, but simply a difference of opinion regarding the best method of organization to be followed in order to thoroughly advance the welfare and interests of the entire craft.

Feeling satisfied that membership in our union and advocacy of its policy was for the best interest of all those employed at electrotyping and stereotyping, we made up our minds that the only thing to do was to demonstrate and thereby convince the other fellows that our views and ideas were correct, and we have, since then, proceeded along those lines. Our first successful step was achieved in 1904, when the Chicago electrotypers became convinced and unanimously amalgamated their entire union, numbering about 330, with our International body.

In the early part of 1905 the Philadelphia electrotypers, after giving the matter considerable thought, decided by a five-sixths vote of their entire membership to apply for a charter, which was granted to a new local union comprising seventy members, a minority of about twelve or fifteen refusing to join with No. 72 in taking this step.

Affiliation and amalgamation was agitated until July 23 last, when a meeting was held in New York city, which was attended by a sub-committee of three, representing the executive board of our union, consisting of Secretary-Treasurer Williams, M. J. Shea and the president, and the entire executive board of the International Electrotype Plate Makers' Union, this meeting resulting in the following agreement or understanding being reached and signed by both bodies:

At a meeting held in New York city on July 23, 1905, attended by the executive board of the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union, represented by President Freel, Secretary-Treasurer Williams and M. J. Shea, and the executive board of the International Electrotype Platemakers' Union, it was agreed that the representatives of the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union would make the following recommendations at the annual meeting of their union, which is to be held in the city of Chicago, Ill., during the week beginning August 14, next:

First, that a representative of the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union attend the coming convention of the International Electrotype Platemakers' Union, to be held in Buffalo, N. Y., on September 3, next.

Second, that a separate charter be issued to those employed at the foundry branch, and a separate charter be issued to those employed at the finishing branch of our business in the city of Philadelphia, Pa.

Third, that a separate charter be issued to those employed at the foundry branch of our business in the city of New York.

Fourth, that a separate charter be issued to those employed at the foundry branch of our business in the city of Boston, Mass.

Fifth, that a joint charter be issued to those employed at the foundry and finishing branches of our business in the city of Buffalo, N. Y.

If these recommendations are concurred in it is the belief of the representatives of the International Electrotype Platemakers' Union that it will satisfy their membership and probably bring about an amalgamation of both bodies.

Executive Board International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union, by GEORGE W. WILLIAMS, Secretary-Treasurer.
Executive Board International Electrotype Platemakers' Union, by F. J. DONOVAN, Secretary.

At our convention in Chicago, Ill., last August, this agreement was unanimously ratified by a rising vote, and at the convention of the International Electrotype Plate Makers' Union, held in the following month (September 3 and 4), which I attended as per agreement, it was also ratified, and by unanimous vote they decided to amalgamate with the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union.

This assures the immediate amalgamation and affiliation of all the independent electrotypers located in New York, Philadelphia, Boston and Buffalo, and adds a total of about 400 new members to our International Union, besides bringing all the organized electrotypers and stereotypers in North America under the jurisdiction of our International Union. We wish to call attention to the fact that this amalgamation has been brought about without creating any discord or friction whatever, and of their own free will these independent electrotypers have joined hands with us to secure for the stereotypers and electrotypers of North America fair wages, reasonable hours and satisfactory working conditions. In behalf of the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union, the president tenders a hearty welcome to our new brother members.

JAMES J. FREEL.

A FEW THOUGHTS.

The attitude of President Roosevelt toward the great corporations of the country has been brought to public notice again through his recent remarks on the question before the Chautauqua Assembly. Apparently his views have not changed in the least since he sent to congress his now famous message urging government control of railroad rates. And yet, almost simultaneously, comes the announcement that there will be no extra session of congress this year. This may mean a number of things, the most probable of which is that he has seen the utter futility of expecting remedial legislation from congress as at present constituted. It means that, at least until public sentiment is more fully aroused, the nabobs of the senate will not vote to put shackles, even of straw, upon themselves. Newspapers and public speakers with interested motives continue to exploit the theory that the people rule in this country, but thinking men realize that the financiers in control of American railroads constitute the most powerful oligarchy in the world. It looks as though President Roosevelt had been brought to a realizing sense of this fact.

Mr. Roosevelt is a unique figure in American public life. Untainted by any of the pitch with which politics defiles its devotees, he has yet held many public offices, and attained at last to the highest of them all; not, of course, without making mistakes—and enemies—but with no suspicion cast upon his honesty and sincerity. Descended of the Dutch aristocracy which ruled old New York generations ago, himself an aristocrat to his fingertips, he takes far more pride in the fact of his honorary membership in a labor union, and that the western Rough Riders count him their friend. Egotistical and finicky he may be, and altogether prone to stand by those whom he considers his friends, which is an unfortunate failing in a President of the United States; nevertheless, with his ingrained honesty and love of fair play, and entire freedom from the taint of commercialism which poisons our politics and afflicts the people, Theodore Roosevelt is a unique figure in American public life.

Touching the president's address at Wilkes Barre, reference was made to his quotation from a letter of a Catholic clergyman, whom he indorsed as a "stanch friend of the laboring man," which seemed to decry the efforts of the latter toward higher wages and shorter hours. Pardon me for reproducing the quotation, as it is necessary for the point which I wish to make:

> There is one discouraging feature connected with the upward tendency of the wage scale among the workmen of this country. The higher the wages, the more money they spend in saloons. The shorter the hours, the more they are inclined to absent themselves from home. An apparent disregard for family ties is growing among the poorer classes which will eventually lead to a disregard for the blessings our country affords them.

From my point of view, this attitude on the part of the clergy is doing more to alienate the workingman from the church and all that it represents than any economic movement, however vicious, can ever do. The man who holds such beliefs is not a "critic" of unionism, if you please, but an enemy. I will go further, and say that he is an enemy of society. He puts himself on a level with the demagogue who cries that all rich men are hogs and thieves and oppressors of the poor. There is a class of workingmen who will without doubt spend their leisure hours, be they few or many, in dissipation, to the neglect of every duty; but the majority of them will be better husbands and fathers, more intelligent and worthy citizens, by reason of increased income and leisure. And if they are not more devoted churchmen, it will be largely the fault of their spiritual advisers.

Bearing on the religious phase of the labor question, although not, perhaps, germane to the point at issue, was the case of the woman, a large stockholder in a big cotton mill, and a Christian in her own right, who sent for the manager and insisted that the practice of employing children in the factory should be stopped. The manager argued without avail, and finally told the lady that if this course was pursued there would be no more dividends on her stock, and then she surrendered. It reminds one of the young man who asked the Savior: "Master, what shall I do to be saved?" "Sell what thou hast and give to the poor, and follow me," was the divine command. We are told that "the young man went away sorrowful, for he had much possessions." Whether the lady of the stocks shed tears over her decision is not related.

A BADGE of SERVITUDE

That's what the union button has been called by a number of irresponsible union haters. We quite agree with these gentlemen. It is a badge of servitude—servitude to principles of justice, servitude to principles of honor, servitude to ideas of decent conditions in the industrial world. Show that you are a union man not merely a member. The I.T.U. Button is the handsomest "badge of servitude" made. It is neat in design and is made of heavy rolled gold warranted not to break nor tarnish. They cost but fifty cents. Don't put it off any longer. Get one now. Address all orders to

J. W. BRAMWOOD, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER, INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA
ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE, INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA, AS SECOND CLASS MATTER ISSUED ON THE FIFTH OF EACH MONTH

VOLUME XXVII — October, 1905 — NUMBER FOUR

REPORT OF PRESIDENT.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—There is but one subject before the International Typographical Union—the establishment of the principle of not more than eight hours for all members of the organization. All other problems, all other questions, all other propositions are incident to the great economic advancement that we are attempting, and which has met with success in many instances. Achieving the eight-hour day, betterments will follow naturally. Higher wages, if we are to accept the history of other organizations enjoying the eight-hour day, are sure to succeed its general introduction. Nor is there ground for the claim that the employer will be unduly burdened when he can purchase from his employe only eight hours' time. Again we can appeal to other trades in substantiation of this claim. There is more building today than at any previous period, aye, and better building. More people find a livelihood in the structural line, both as employer and employed. Modern edifices, compared with the product of the ten-hour day, are as the wooden brigantine to the modern battleship, where again the eight-hour day has scored a recent triumph. More cigars are made and consumed today under the eight-hour rule in the cigar trade than formerly under the ten and twelve-hour requirement. In our own craft, larger and better newspapers are produced, with a workday of eight hours and less, than when the endurance of the individual marked the daily limit of his toil. Wherever the eight-hour day has been introduced in the book and job trade it has proven satisfactory to employer and employe, despite recent artificial objection to it in one or two instances, created in order to bolster up the crumbling contention of the nine-hour advocates. Of the total membership of the International Typographical Union, more than twenty-five thousand work eight hours or less per day. We do not want the eight-hour day by reason of charity—or philanthropy. We do not want it in order that our physical or mental well-being may be improved. We refuse to abandon our eight-hour demand because we may under present conditions be more fortunately situated than other artisans. We want the eight-hour workday because we are convinced that it suffices for the work there is to do, the work that is to be done, the demand of society for the product of the press. We propose to sell to the employer eight hours out of the twenty-four, and we will do as we please with the remaining sixteen.

THE YEAR THAT HAS GONE.

In my report last year reference was made to the industrial disturbances marking the period covered by that document. These disturbances, to a lesser degree perhaps, were with us in the period that has elapsed since the St. Louis convention. We have also had prominently before us the hostile employers' associations. Except in the case of the commercial employers' organization, which for reasons that all of us understand, has displayed marked opposition, the year 1904-1905 has for us been comparatively free from friction. The admonition of last year's report, that we bear in mind the dangers that surround us, "so that our policy and our methods may be dictated by wisdom, prudence and forethought," has been borne in mind. Our relations with that great organization of progressive employers, the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, have been uniformly pleasant, and we have avoided friction with newspaper publishers unconnected with any central organization. Expecting fair treatment from these employers, we have endeavored to accord like treatment, and the industrial peace that has been our lot is the best evidence that we have been successful in our fealty to the golden rule. Despite present unpropitious portents, we hope to eventually establish amicable, satisfactory and mutually profitable relations with the United Typothetæ of America.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL—EIGHT-HOUR COMMITTEE.

In this report the work of the executive council in the St. Louis and Philadelphia cases is set forth. The report of the International eight-hour committee is also a part of this document.

EIGHT HOURS.

THE WILL OF THE MEMBERSHIP.

The referendum approved, by a most decisive majority, the eight-hour plan submitted by the St. Louis convention. Another and most decided step was taken toward the eight-hour day for our book and job printers. And this despite the fact that effort was made, through printing trade publications and otherwise, to influence the book and job men to vote against the St. Louis method. In one large city several employers issued a circular to their employes, intimating that direful things would happen if the printers attempted to secure an eight-hour day. But the eight-hour proposition was affirmed, nevertheless, by a majority that even its most enthusiastic supporters did not hope for. The plan became effective on January 1, 1905, and provided that an assessment of one-half of one per cent "on all moneys earned be levied upon the membership of the International Typographical Union for the purpose of a defense fund." On January 1, 1906, "the eight-hour day shall become effective in all union establishments under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union." In each instance where the eight-hour day is refused "work shall cease." In taking favorable action, the membership also declared its "entire willingness to negotiate with the United Typothetæ for an agreement under which the eight-hour day will become operative," and so instructed its eight-hour committee. Harmony, and not war, is desired. But we must have the eight-hour day.

AND WE MUST ORGANIZE.

While the membership has declared and defined its position, and given to the eight-hour movement new life and impetus, the problem is not solved by any means. We have much work to do, and we must apply ourselves to our task with zeal and determination. Every qualified journeyman that can be reached must be brought within the union fold. Money is valuable, but thorough organization is better. We must protect the union against the unaffiliated, and the surest way is through the process of elimination. Why do we find it necessary to create a defense fund? Why are strikes prolonged and defeat met with? Because of the non-unionist. Then in every jurisdiction a movement should be carried on until every journeyman printer possesses a union card. If on January 1, 1906, we control the situation through thorough organization, there will be little need of a defense fund, and there will be only rare instances of suspension of work. It is International law that "any subordinate union may consider a place within a radius of fifty miles of its location, in which place no union exists, as within its jurisdiction, for the purpose of admitting non-unionists in such place to its membership." How many unions control the territory within a radius of fifty miles? And yet this can be accomplished. There is no reason why we should not have every printer on our membership rolls, especially so in cities in which unions are now in existence. This is a most important question. It should have consideration at every union meeting held between now and January 1, 1906. Do not wait until the eleventh hour.

A TRIBUTE TO PERFECT ORGANIZATION.

In "Official Circular No. 9" the United Typothetæ of America discusses at considerable length the campaign we are making for the eight-hour day. Figures are juggled and preposterous statements abound. For instance, it is asserted that in connection with cities in which the eight-hour day has been arranged for or is in effect "it is also worthy of note that a great majority of these points are away from the great manufacturing centers of population, and are in most cases outside of any large competitive area." It is in the following quotation, however, that the truth is told, the tribute paid to militant unionism, and the cue given to our unions. The circular says: "Again, the local conditions and the position of these various points should be considered. It is undoubtedly a fact that the majority of the cities and towns enumerated are ones in which not only the printing trade, but every other trade in that particular point, is strongly union." Is it any wonder that we urge organization? It means the eight-hour day and peace.

SO THAT IT MAY BE UNDERSTOOD.

Thousands of eight-hour circulars have been distributed throughout the jurisdiction. Hundreds of eight-hour letters are now in the possession of officers and members. The St. Louis convention said: "We endorse without reservation the work and methods of the International eight-hour committee. We believe in this connection that the committee has thoroughly covered the ground and has put into effect every method that thus far has given promise of advancement to the eight-hour cause." In order that the attitude of associated employers may be understood, the eight-hour circulars should be carefully digested. On this point the convention declared: "We regret that the eight-hour day in book and job rooms is not a question at the present time for adjudication between the International Typographical Union and the United Typothetæ of America, but in view of the action taken by the United Typothetæ of America in convention assembled at St. Louis, in which it is asserted 'That the United Typothetæ of America declares it is opposed to any reduction of the fifty-four-hour week' and 'that the United Typothetæ of America will resist any attempt on the part of the International Typographical Union to reduce the present hours of labor,' no other conclusion is possible. That an agreement on peaceable lines is not now possible is solely the fault of the associated employers, and this contention is borne out by the action of their last convention. Further, we dispute the statement of the typothetæ that a reduction in the hours of labor would be disastrous to the employe. We maintain that the eight-hour day is the logical workday, that it is sufficient for the needs of the trade, and we give emphatic endorsement to the doctrine that the introduction of labor-saving machinery is not for the benefit of the employer alone, but should also result in better working conditions for the employe in the way of reduction in the hours of toil and increased remuneration."

AS THE FEDERATION OF LABOR SEES IT.

President Gompers, in his report to the American Federation of Labor convention at San Francisco, took occasion to say:

"The American Federation of Labor has been of incalculable benefit to a large number of international unions and local unions in the introduction and enforcement of the eight-hour workday, as attested by the large number of our fellows who now work under that rule. Inasmuch as the International Typographical Union has taken the initiative of its own accord in the matter of introducing and enforcing the eight-hour workday, I submit for your consideration and recommend that this movement of the International Typographical Union receive the sincere and hearty endorsement and co-operation of this convention of the American Federation of Labor, and of every union member as well as every wage earner and those who sympathize with practical, evolutionary, economic progress.

"It is not now known whether there will be any contest against the eight-hour day; whether any antagonistic action will be taken by the employers to the men. We do know, however, that at the last convention of the employing printers of the United States, organized under the name of the typothetæ, a resolution was adopted declaring against that movement. In any event, it seems clear to me that every action should be taken by this convention and by our organizations generally, not only to pledge the support of the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated unions to the International Typographical Union in its effort to enforce the eight-hour day, but that a special committee be appointed by this convention to give the subject-matter consideration; that the committee should consult with the officers and representatives of the International Typographical Union during the convention and report thereto before adjournment; that either that committee or another committee be authorized to be appointed for the purpose of co-operating with the executive council of the American Federation of Labor and the officers of the Typographical Union, so that the best possible aid can be rendered to our fellow workers in the great movement that they have undertaken and in which they have the hopes, wishes, prayers and co-operation of every one interested in the welfare of the human family and the progress and civilization of our people.

"Of course, in the effort to help one particular organization, especially in the laudable purpose it has mapped out for itself to achieve, we are not circumscribed or limited in our effort to help any and all of our fellow workmen who are in a position to make any effort for the advancement or promotion of their interests. We shall, therefore, welcome not only the initiative of our fellow unionists to obtain improved conditions, and particularly the improved conditions that come from a shorter workday, but we shall be glad to help in the initiation of any movement that will contribute in any way toward the protection, the promotion of the conditions and interests of our fellow workmen, and to render them every assistance within our power."

THE CONVENTION'S ACTION.

The special committee, to which was referred that part of the president's report treating of our eight-hour movement, made the following report, adopted unanimously by the convention, and because of its importance, quoted in full herewith:

"We have had before us the president of the International Typographical Union, and we find that the movement for the eight-hour day for the book and job printers of the United States and Canada was inaugurated at the Cincinnati convention of the International Typographical Union, held in 1902, that it was further considered at the Washington convention, held in 1903, and that at the St. Louis convention, held in August of this year, it was decided that the eight-hour day should be enforced on January 1, 1906, and that for the financial support of this movement an assessment of one-half of one per cent should be levied on the earnings of all the members of the International Typographical Union.

"This plan was submitted to a referendum vote, as provided by the laws of the International Typographical Union, and President Lynch informs your committee that the proposition received a majority of more than fourteen thousand votes. Therefore, the assessment will become effective on January 1, 1905, and on January 1, 1906, effort will be made to put the eight-hour day into effect.

"We are also informed that there is an association of commercial printers entitled the United Typothetæ of America, the employers' association. That the officers of the International Typographical Union have made effort to secure an agreement with the United Typothetæ under which the eight-hour day for book and job printers would become effective, and that the employers' association has thus far refused to enter into such an agreement. We are furthermore informed that the United Typothetæ of America is at present accumulating a defense fund in order that the eight-hour day enforcement may be combated. It is hoped by the employers to gather together at least $500,000. In view of the above your committee would recommend:

"First—That the American Federation of Labor approve and endorse the movement under way by the International Typographical Union for an eight-hour day for the book and job printers of the United States and Canada, and pledge to the support of this movement both moral and financial assistance.

"Second—That if at any time after January 1, 1906, the International Typographical Union desires the financial support of the American Federation of Labor, and if after investigation by the executive council such financial support is found necessary in order to insure victory to the printers, the executive council shall levy the constitutional assessment on affiliated bodies, this assessment to continue for such length of time as in the judgment of the executive council may be necessary.

"Third—Your committee recommends that a committee of five members be appointed to act with the executive council in furthering the eight-hour day for the book and job printers.

"And we desire to conclude this report by extending to the International Typographical Union the hearty well wishes of the American Federation of Labor for the success of the printers' eight-hour project."

THE EMPLOYERS ORGANIZE OPPOSITION.

Under the auspices of the United Typothetæ of America, mass meetings of employing printers have been held in St. Paul, intended to cover the northwest; Kansas City, intended to cover the southwest; Atlanta, for the southeast; Boston, for the New England states, and Philadelphia for the central states. At these meetings our eight-hour campaign is the sole topic for discussion, and resolutions are adopted pledging the attendants to oppose the introduction of the eight-hour day. As far as your president is aware, the main argument at the meetings is that the eight-hour day is impractical and that it will ruin the printing business. We do not coincide with this view, and we believe that the eight-hour day would stimulate the printing business, and in the end would be of value to the employer as well as to the employe.

In my department in the official organ I have covered all of the employers' meetings at some length, and a full review of the proceedings is not necessary at this time. Suffice it to say that the meetings have had an effect contrary to that expected, neither overawing our membership nor weakening in any way the eight-hour sentiment, but arousing our unions to the necessity for preparation, and aggressive organizing campaigns have resulted.

It is also worthy of note that in some instances the attendants at these meetings have returned to their home cities and signed eight-hour contracts with our local unions. The executive committee of the United Typothetæ of America, at a meeting in Kansas City on April 11, the day succeeding the mass meeting of employers in that city, changed the arrangements for the 1905 typothetæ convention, and in this respect nullified the action taken at the St. Louis Typothetæ session last year. The 1905 convention will be held in Niagara Falls, N. Y., the week of September 4. The St. Louis selection was Atlantic City, N. J., in June. Do the employers hope, or have they been led to believe, that some action may be taken by our convention that will prevent the eight-hour day from becoming effective on January 1? The changed date for the typothetæ convention emphasizes the importance of our Toronto gathering, and it is believed that it will give small comfort to the associations of employers who have announced their opposition to our eight-hour day.

WHAT THE SMALL EMPLOYER CAN EXPECT.

What has the small employer to gain if he affiliates with an organization composed of capitalists who control nearly all the profitable patronage, and are reaching out for the little that remains to the printer conducting a modest business? Perhaps the following, from the letter f my correspondent, who attended the St. Paul mass meeting, may answer the question: "While the guests were assembling for the banquet and business meeting, several members of the typothetæ from South Dakota decided to hold a little business meeting of their own. There were various objections to a violation of rules by South Dakota Typothetæ members, regarding the giving of knives, fountain pens, subscriptions to newspapers, and other presents, in order to gain the good will of county officials and thus aid in landing work. It was decided that the giving of presents must be stopped. A motion was made to have the prices of county printing of a certain kind advanced one class. A member suggested that it would be necessary to advance with considerable caution. He stated that the law requires the county officials to advertise for bids for all county printing, and, while the law was a dead letter at the present time, an incautious putting on of the screws might cause some one to squeal and the law to be revived. Another member brought up the question of furnishing supplies, and moved that no supplies, legal blanks, etc., be furnished to country printers at less than list prices, thus compelling the country printer, if he desires to handle them, to charge more for them than they are being furnished for by typothetæ members. A substitute motion prevailed, however, to the effect that no county supplies whatever be furnished to country printers. It would be a good thing if country printers were made aware of this fact, in view of the effort that is being made by the United Typothetæ of America to get the country printer to help that organization in this fight against the eight-hour day."

THERE ARE TWO OBJECTS.

The organization of the employing printers is not the only object of these mass meetings, held at central points. It is realized by those in charge of the employers' campaign that in the ranks of all unions there is an element that always looks with apprehension on every forward movement. When storm clouds appear, it is this element that begins the cry for "peace at any price." Then there is the obstructionist and the member whose activity is measured by the strength and continuity of the criticism of others that is his chief characteristic. To overawe the timid and supply the critic with fresh ammunition is the main object of these "mass meetings." Only when our membership, by a majority of more than fourteen thousand votes, gave voice to the almost unanimous demand for a shorter workday in the book and job trade did the employers realize the strength and determination behind the eight-hour movement, and only then was it decided that mass meetings were required. The further action of the federation convention in San Francisco, pledging us monetary support if necessary, again alarmed the typothetæ. They saw that the negative position taken at their last convention was not having the expected effect, and they know that the demand of twenty-three thousand of their employes can not be smothered with resolutions. Then was the "mass meeting" idea brought to the front. It is for the timid member and the professional critic that these mass meetings are held, and behind them is the hope that our ranks may be broken and thus our object defeated. The answer rests with those who have all to gain—our members.

THE SIX-CITY CONFERENCE.

In April there was a conference at International headquarters between representatives of six of the largest unions of the central west—Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit and Indianapolis—and the executive council of the International Typographical Union. This conference was for the purpose of formulating a plan of action on the eight-hour question which could be followed concertedly by the unions named, all of whose wage scales have expired or will expire prior to January 1, 1906. The following plan of procedure was outlined:

"We greatly regret the hostile activity of the United Typothetæ of America and other associations of employing printers, in calling meetings for the purpose of arousing opposition to and denunciation of the eight-hour workday, and we fear that if this antagonistic course is continued the friendly relations now existing between the employers' organizations and the International Typographical Union will be disrupted. We believe that the dignity and business interests of the organizations of the printing trade will be best served by conference and conciliation.

"We reaffirm our belief in the justice of the position of the International Typographical Union on the eight-hour question, and we suggest the appointment of a committee by the United Typothetæ of America to meet and act with our International officers, and we believe that if such a conference is held it can adjust the points that are at present in contention.

"Pending a possible meeting of the representatives of the associations referred to herein, we are convinced that it is incumbent upon the unions here represented to place present conditions before the membership of these unions, so that a course of action may be agreed to that will safeguard the common cause. We submit, therefore, the following recommendations:

"That in the event of the typothetæ or other employing-printer associations locking out the members of any union here represented, or taking any other action precipitating a conflict on the eight-hour question prior to January 1, 1906, and prior to the effort at International conciliation alluded to herein, we can only consider such action as a violation of contract relations, and of a character unwarranted and without basis in common fairness, and as calling for a general suspension of work in the book and job trade.

"That all new agreements must be presented to the executive council for approval previous to submission to employers' associations, so that nothing contained in these agreements will jeopardize the interests represented in the shorter workday movement.

"We again urge on the United Typothetæ of America the desirability of a conference with the officers of the International Typographical Union, and we express it as our opinion that if the typothetæ declines to participate in such a conference, it will be held solely responsible for any friction, suspension of work, or monetary loss which may occur on and after January 1, 1906."

The foregoing was submitted to all the unions represented at the conference, and was ratified by them.

THE DETROIT CONFERENCE.

This conference came as a result of the six-city conference and scale negotiations in Chicago and St. Louis. Representatives of the Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Detroit Typothetæ recently met in the first-named city and agreed upon a uniform three-year contract, with the exception of the rate of wages, said form of contract specifying that the nine-hour day should prevail during the life of the agreement. The typothetæ representatives also asked that a conference be held between representatives of the unions and the typothetæ in certain cities, for the purpose of considering the points at issue—especially the shorter workday—and endeavoring to reach an amicable adjustment, it being understood that the executive officers of the International Typographical Union and United Typothetæ would be in attendance. The representatives of the unions readily agreed to this, and the conference was arranged to take place in Indianapolis on Friday and Saturday, May 26–27, the place of meeting being later changed to Detroit, owing to the disinclination of the executive officers of the United Typothetæ to meet in Indianapolis.

The meeting was attended by representatives from Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Detroit Typothetæ—the typothetæ of Cincinnati and Cleveland failing to attend, though invited to do so—and representatives of Chicago, St. Louis, Detroit, Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Cleveland Typographical Unions. The executive council of the International Typographical Union and the executive officers of the United Typothetæ attended in an advisory capacity.

The better part of two days was spent in endeavoring to arrive at an amicable adjustment of the eight-hour question, but without avail. On Saturday the joint committee of two from each local organization represented—appointed the previous day—reported its inability to agree, and its report was accepted by the conference.

The committee's report showed that the union representatives introduced and urged several conciliatory propositions, but that they were met on each occasion by an utter refusal on the part of the typothetæ members to consider aught except absolute surrender on the part of the union, so far as the shorter workday is concerned.

After some discussion the following resolution, offered by the union representatives, was adopted just prior to adjournment:

"It is the sense of this body that the officers of the International Union and the officers of the United Typothetæ of America get together some time between now and January 1, 1906, in an endeavor to arrive at an amicable adjustment of this difference."

At a meeting of the union representatives after the closing of the conference, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"We, the undersigned representatives of Indianapolis Typographical Union No. 1, Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3, St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8, Chicago Typographical Union No. 16, Detroit Typographical Union No. 18 and Cleveland Typographical Union No. 53, having met in conference in the city of Detroit with representatives of the typothetæ in our different cities, in an effort to adjust the eight (8) hour question, and having made several fair and reasonable propositions, all of which have been rejected by the typothetæ,

"Now, therefore, take the first opportunity after the adjournment of the joint conference, to reaffirm our allegiance to and support for the eight (8) hour movement, and the plan outlined by the International Typographical Union for putting the eight (8) hour day into effect."

The executive council of the International Typographical Union has been, and is now, ready and willing to meet the executive officers of the United Typothetæ for the purpose of endeavoring to reach an amicable adjustment of the eight-hour question, but all overtures to that end have so far failed to elicit a favorable response from officials of the United Typothetæ.

ST. LOUIS.

On Monday evening, June 5, the president of Typographical Union No. 8 telephoned the headquarters of the International Typographical Union at Indianapolis, and said that at a regular meeting held on June 4 St. Louis Typographical Union had instructed its officers to sign a contract for three years with the St. Louis Typothetæ, this contract to be on a nine-hour basis for the contract period. On Tuesday, June 6, the International secretary-treasurer visited St. Louis, protested against the signing of a nine-hour contract, explaining that it was illegal and in contravention of International law. On Wednesday, June 7, the executive council considered the St. Louis situation, in Kansas City, where it was then holding a conference with representatives of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. As a result of the consideration of the St. Louis matter, the following telegrams were sent:

The executive council attended a special meeting of St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8, held on the evening of Thursday, June 9, and again protested against the ratification of a three-year contract on a nine-hour basis, and pointed out the International law, the compacts entered into by No. 8 at Indianapolis and Detroit, and the provisions of the eight-hour plan endorsed by the referendum. The council urged No. 8 to stand firmly for the eight-hour day. But despite the emphatic protest of the council, the officers of No. 8 were again instructed, in compliance with their recommendation and advice, to sign the illegal contract. THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL'S POSITION.

(Letter.)

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 17, 1905.

"Mr. Joseph A. Jackson, 1517 Benton street, St. Louis, Mo.:

"MY DEAR SIR—Confirming our conversation over the long-distance telephone today, I desire to say that the executive council stands just where it did on the evening of Thursday, June 8th, as to the support of the members of No. 8 who may be locked out by the book and job employers in St. Louis, or who may be compelled to engage in a strike in order to conserve the law:

"Provided, St. Louis Union repudiates the illegal nine-hour contract with the St. Louis Typothetæ, and reaffirms its allegiance to International law, the eight-hour demand and the eight-hour plan endorsed by the referendum of the International Typographical Union, and serves written notice on the St. Louis Typothetæ that this action has been taken.

"Immediately after the action is taken and the council is furnished with an attested record of the action of the union, together with an attested copy of the notice to the St. Louis Typothetæ, No. 8 will be reinstated by the executive council.

"Permit me to reiterate that if trouble should occur in St. Louis because of this action by the union, and after compliance with the International Typographical Union law, as set forth under the subdivision 'Defense and Strikes' (page 66, Laws of 1905), then the executive council will support the reinstated union.

"Pending action by the special meeting of No. 8, which you inform me is to be held tomorrow, no further steps will be taken by the council.

"C. M. Skinner, Chairman Executive Committee, St. Louis Typothetæ, St. Louis:

"DEAR SIR—The following resolutions were adopted at a special meeting of St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8, held on June 18:

"'Resolved, That St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8, assembled in special meeting to "consider the suspension of the charter and the new scale," instructs the president and the secretary-treasurer of the union to immediately notify the executive council of the International Typographical Union by telegraph, and at the earliest possible moment in writing under our official seal, that Typographical Union No. 8 hereby submits to the law as declared by the council, and will observe and obey the same; and that all legislation by this union in connection with the recently enacted job scale be and is hereby rescinded. And that our officers are further instructed to request the council to notify the union as soon as may be of the revocation of the order suspending No. 8's charter.

"'Resolved, That in the opinion of the union this action is not an action upon the scale, within the meaning of the law, but is a compliance with the law as declared by the executive council, and is necessary in the emergency now confronting the union, in order to preserve our charter rights pending an appeal to the convention of the International Typographical Union.'

"Respectfully,

"Acting on the first resolution contained in the communication of June 19, addressed to the executive council, signed by J. A. Jackson, as president Typographical Union No. 8, and J. J. Early, as secretary-treasurer, the executive council has today revoked the order suspending the charter of Typographical Union No. 8. This action is taken with the understanding on the part of the executive council that No. 8 in the first resolution declares its allegiance to International law, and that the illegal nine-hour contract recently entered into between No. 8 and the St. Louis Typothetæ has been rescinded, and that No. 8 has placed itself in position to co-operate in eight-hour campaign and fulfil its pledges made at Indianapolis and Detroit, and that no contract will be entered into without full compliance with International law. Answer at once if council's understanding is correct, and then formal letter reinstating charter of No. 8 will follow, reinstatement to take effect at twelve o'clock noon today.

NUMBER EIGHT'S CHARTER REINSTATED.

(Letter.)

"INDIANAPOLIS, June 20, 1905.

"J. A. Jackson, President, and J. J. Early, Secretary, St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8:

"GENTLEMEN—At a meeting of the executive council held this day, the following resolutions were adopted:

"'Whereas, The executive council did, on June 12, 1905, resolve "That the charter of St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8 be herewith suspended, in accordance with the provisions of section 2, article x, of the constitution of the International Typographical Union, for failure and refusal to obey the laws and legal mandates of the International Typographical Union and executive council, and the instructions of the executive council, said suspension to take effect immediately (9:45 A. M., June 12, 1905) and continuing in effect until St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8 complies with the laws and legal mandates of the International Typographical Union and the executive council, and until the charter of the union has been reinstated by the executive council;" and

"'Whereas, The International president did on June 17, 1905, with the approval of his colleagues on the executive council, write Mr. Joseph A. Jackson as follows: "Confirming our conversation over the long-distance telephone today, I desire to say that the executive council stands just where it did on the evening of Thursday, June 8, as to the support of the members of No. 8 who may be locked out by the book and job employers in St. Louis, or who may be compelled to engage in a strike in order to conserve the law: Provided, St. Louis Union repudiates the illegal nine-hour contract with the St. Louis Typothetæ and reaffirms its allegiance to International law, the eight-hour demand and the eight-hour plan endorsed by the referendum of the International Typographical Union, and serves written notice on the St. Louis Typothetæ that this action has been taken. Immediately after the action is taken and the council is furnished with an attested record of the action of the union, together with an attested copy of the notice to the St. Louis Typothetæ, No. 8 will be reinstated by the executive council," and

The foregoing brief statement of fact is submitted for the information of the delegates to the Toronto convention and the membership of the International Typographical Union.

As "Exhibit A," there is appended to this report the telegraphic form of notification to several subordinate unions of the suspension of the charter of No. 8, and copies of their formal protests to No. 8 against the illegal contract. This information is given so that the membership may gather just how comprehensive were the measures taken by the council.

PHILADELPHIA.

During the seven months preceding the St. Louis convention the International Typographical Union expended $2,500 in Philadelphia. At the St. Louis convention the following agreement was entered into between the executive council and the representatives of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2:

"ST. LOUIS, MO., August 12, 1904.

"Agreement Between Executive Council, International Typographical Union, and Organization Committee of Philadelphia Union No. 2:

"The executive council agrees to pay $2,500 as soon as possible after return to Indianapolis, and place at disposal of Philadelphia $200 per week for a period of ten weeks, if in possession of the money, and such further assistance at the end of that period as the funds at the disposal of the executive council will warrant, and may be deemed necessary by the executive council.

"JAMES M. LYNCH,

"The undersigned representatives of Philadelphia Typographical Union accept the above.

"W. C. MACPHERSON,
"JOHN J. BOOTE,
"C. J. ZENTMEYER,
"ALBERT K. VOORHEES,
"Philadelphia Delegates to International Typographical Union Convention."

It will be noted that the executive council was to pay—and it did pay—$2,500 to Philadelphia, and place at the disposal of No. 2 $200 per week for a period of ten weeks. "And such further assistance at the end of that period as the funds at the disposal of the executive council will warrant, and may be deemed necessary by the executive council." At the expiration of the ten weeks the council continued the assistance at the rate of $200 per week for an additional two weeks, carrying No. 2 beyond the date of the general elections, as an impression seemed to prevail that a settlement with the Inquirer might be possible prior to election day.

No. 2 then appealed for further assistance, and the council took the action set forth in the following letter:

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., November 9, 1904.

"W. C. Macpherson, Chairman Organizing Committee No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

"DEAR MR. MACPHERSON—The executive council has instructed me to forward you the following supplemental decision on the request of your committee for financial assistance for organizing work in Philadelphia:

" 'The executive council has fulfilled every agreement that it made with Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2. It has placed at the disposal, to date, of the Philadelphia reorganization committee, the sum of $7,400—$400 more than was required under its obligation. On several occasions the council has been assured that the appropriation then under consideration would, if granted, in the opinion of the petitioners, result in a victory in the Inquirer boycott and the virtual and successful ending of the Philadelphia work. This was notably true of the session between the representatives of No. 2 and the executive council at the St. Louis convention. Despite all this and the appropriations thus far made, as far as the executive council can determine from the reports submitted, we are no nearer a conclusion of the Inquirer contest than we were at its initiation. Still, firm in the belief that every effort should be made that promises success to unionize Philadelphia, the council is willing to continue financial assistance from the International Typographical Union on the following basis:

" 'First—The supervision of the Philadelphia reorganization work and the Inquirer boycott by an International organizer or representative should be discontinued, and the management delegated by the committee to one of its members, or to some member of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2, who shall be placed under salary at the scale of No. 2, together with a reasonable allowance for expenses.

" 'Second—The expenses of the contest, and the contest as at present conducted. should be materially reduced and modified. It is the opinion of the council that the contest against the Inquirer has become a stern chase, and necessarily a long chase, and that as effective an opposition as can be conducted can be carried on at a moderate expense.

" 'Third—The council is willing to continue financial aid to the extent of $100 per week until further notice, Philadelphia Typographical Union to contribute a like amount; and the council further reserves the right to terminate its conpection with the Philadelphia work at any time.

" 'Philadelphia Typographical Union to indicate its acceptance of the foregoing before the plan is made effective.'

"Please advise me as early as possible whether or not No. 2 desires to accept the proposition of the council as set forth above.

"With kind regards, I am,

"Fraternally yours,

"J. W. BRAMWOOD,

"Secretary."

The Philadelphia organization committee declined to accept the council's proposition, the matter again came before the council and the council reaffirmed its position. No. 2 then asked endorsements from subordinate unions for the following proposition:

"Shall the executive council pay to Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2 $200 per week out of the special defense fund or any other available funds, said financial assistance to be used in fighting the Philadelphia Inquirer, to begin with the week ending November 19, 1904, and to continue until the next convention of the International Typographical Union, or until the fight is won: Provided, Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2 shall contribute at least an equal amount; that the conduct of affairs continue under the same direction as heretofore, and that vouchers and financial reports be submitted as required by the executive council?"

Under date of January 14, 1905, the secretary of the executive council was informed by the president of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2 that that union had "been informed under seal by more than fifty subordinate unions that they have endorsed our petition to the executive council" to submit the foregoing proposition to a referendum vote, and made formal demand upon the executive council, through its secretary, "for a submission of said proposition in accordance with the provisions of section 3, article xvii, International Typographical Union constitution." Attached was a list of the unions that officially notified No. 2 of their endorsement of its petition. The decision of the executive council is set forth in the following document:

THE COUNCIL'S DECISION.

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., January 19, 1905.

"A. D. Calvert, President No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

"DEAR MR. CALVERT—The council has fully considered your letter of January 14, 1905, setting forth that No. 2 has been notified by more than fifty subordinate unions that they have endorsed the petition of No. 2 for a referendum vote on the question of appropriating $200 per week for the use of your union on the terms set forth in the proposition quoted in your letter. Your formal demand that the council submit said proposition to referendum vote has also received due attention.

"In answer thereto, the council desires to call attention to the following summary of facts in this case:

"On August 12, 1904, an agreement regarding the financial assistance to be rendered No. 2 was entered into between the executive council of the International Typographical Union and duly authorized representatives of No. 2, which agreement was more than fulfilled by the executive council.

"Shortly before the expiration of the ten weeks' term mentioned in the agreement of August 12, 1904, your organization committee, in a letter dated October 17, 1904, requested a continuance of financial support on the basis of $200 per week.

"In a letter dated November 2, 1904, the secretary of the executive council informed the organization committee of No. 2 that financial assistance would be rendered to the extent of $200 per week for two weeks, and that the question would receive further consideration on the return of President Lynch to headquarters.

"Under date of November 9, 1904, the council forwarded, through its secretary, the supplementary decision reached in this case. In this decision, the council announced its willingness 'to continue financial aid to the extent of $100 per week, until further notice,' provided No. 2 accepted the conditions as to the conduct of the fight set forth in the decision above mentioned.

"In a letter dated November 12, 1904, your organization committee declined to accept the proposition contained in the council's decision, and requested further action.

"In reply, the secretary of the executive council, in a letter dated November 14, 1904, informed your organization committee that President Lynch was en route to the convention of the American Federation of Labor, in San Francisco, and that no further action would be taken until his return to headquarters.

"On the return of the International president, the council reaffirmed its decision of November 9, 1904. This action was communicated to your organization committee by the secretary of the council, in a letter dated December 14, 1904.

"In its circular to subordinate unions, dated December 22, 1904, Philadelphia Union No. 2 requests them to join in a petition to the council to submit a proposition to vote of the membership, to require the executive council to pay Philadelphia Union No. 2 the amount of $200 per week, under conditions set forth in the proposition. In this circular, No. 2 directs attention to the action of the council on the question, especially noting the offer to appropriate $100 per week.

"The proposition for which Philadelphia Union asked the endorsement of subordinate unions is, to all intents and purposes, the same proposition as that covered by the executive council in its decision of November 9, 1904, and reaffirmed on December 14, 1904.

"The council therefore holds that the circular of No. 2, which has been endorsed by more than fifty unions, is in reality, and in force and effect, an appeal from the decision rendered by the council on November 9, 1904, and reaffirmed on December 14, 1904.

"The constitution of the International Typographical Union specifically states that appeals from the council's decision 'may be taken to the International Union in regular session.' Nowhere in the law is there any warrant for an appeal to the membership from a decision of the council.

"In its decision in this case, the executive council merely exercises the specific powers conferred, and performs the duties imposed, by the constitution and laws of the International Union, which it is sworn to abide by and uphold.

"For further information on this subject, the attention of your union is directed to the contents of the enclosed circular, issued by the council under date of December 30, 1904, which in all essential points is made a part of this decision.

"On the grounds set forth, and in accordance with the laws of the parent organization, the council decides that an appeal from its decision can legally 'be taken to the International Union in regular session' only (see section 2, article xi, constitution), and that the pursuance of other methods is both illegal and ineffective.

"The council further decides that section 3, article xvii, constitution, does not apply to appeal cases, or to propositions relating to the disbursement or appropriation of funds, the method of procedure in such cases being specifically prescribed in the constitution.

"The council holds that it has no power, under the law, to submit the proposition of Philadelphia Union to a referendum vote, and it therefore declines to do so.

"In this connection, the council desires to say that the interpretation and enforcement of International law is one of the duties imposed upon the executive body, and its decision is final, unless reversed by 'the International Union, in regular session.'

"By order of the executive council.

"J. W. Bramwood, Secretary."

After full consideration of the situation in Philadelphia, and the imperative necessity for organization work in preparation for the struggle for the eight-hour day, and the menace to that movement represented in the disorganized condition of No. 2's jurisdiction, the executive council prepared the following "open letter," and mailed a copy of it to each member of No. 2, in the hope that individual consciousness of duty and willingness to perform it might be aroused:

"An open letter.

" 'Philadelphia, with its thousands of non-unionists, is most dangerous to a large portion of our membership.'—Extract from circular issued by Philadelphia Union No. 2, under date of December 22, 1904.

"Indianapolis, Ind., February 7, 1905.

"Mr. Alfred D. Calvert, President No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

"Dear Sir—Again referring to the necessity for organization work in Philadelphia, the executive council desires an early and comprehensive outline of the methods that are to be followed by Philadelphia Typographical Union, as to the book and job branch.

"We have had nothing definite relative to organization work since our communication to your organization committee, dated November 9, 1904. We are aware, however, that there has been an effort put forth by representatives of No. 2 to nullify International law, as interpreted by the executive council.

"The Philadelphia work, as considered by and outlined to the Washington convention, provided for organization solely, and the executive council then expressed itself, through the International president, as willing to continue to make appropriations until Philadelphia was 'thoroughly unionized.' The Philadelphia delegation, speaking through one of its members, said that the position of the council was entirely satisfactory to the Philadelphia delegates.

"In a circular issued to the membership under date of December 22, 1904, it is stated by your union, over the signatures of its president and secretary, that there are 'thousands of non-unionists' in Philadelphia. It is not apparent that any continued and determined effort has been made to organize these non-unionists. On the contrary, the main part of the effort thus far put forth is represented by a newspaper boycott that has been ineffective to date as to the result sought for. Even though the Inquirer fight may be won, it will then be necessary to take up and prosecute boycotts against the Press, the Record, the Item and the Bulletin, and it is only reasonable to suppose, with the Inquirer experience to guide us, that these boycotts will occupy many months, extending in fact far beyond January 1, 1906.

"According to the data given in the non-unionist report of Philadelphia Union No. 2, received at International headquarters on July 8, 1904, there were 270 non-unionists employed in the five non-union daily newspaper offices in your city. We desire to call your attention to the fact that even though your union succeeded in bringing all these newspapers within the fold, such a result would only affect a small percentage of the 'thousands of non-unionists' which you say are 'most dangerous to a large portion of our membership.'

"As is herein pointed out, the work thus far undertaken in Philadelphia has not followed the plan placed before the Washington convention, and has not been along the lines of least resistance considered by that convention—the organization of the Philadelphia non-unionists. The council now demands that the work of organization shall be taken up, and that no effort shall be spared to thoroughly unionize Philadelphia in the book and job branch. If further time is wasted in opposing the executive council, so much less of value will be accomplished, and the continuance of present conditions will mean that the situation of every union book and job printer in Philadelphia will be jeopardized on January 1, 1906. If the eight-hour fight is lost in Philadelphia (and that is the prospect confronting us now), the result can not but disastrously affect the union newspaper printers and newspaper conditions. Also, the recruiting field represented by the 'thousands of non-unionists' in Philadelphia will affect sister unions—New York, Washington, Boston, and many others.

"The council again expresses itself as willing to aid in the work of organization under the conditions set forth in its letter of November 9, 1904. And for the protection of the members of No. 2, and for the protection of the members of the International Typographical Union in adjacent territory, the council demands that your union act at once. Fraternally yours,

"JAMES M. LYNCH,
"HUGO MILLER,
"J. W. BRAMWOOD,
"Executive Council of the International Typographical Union."

The only action taken on the "open letter," as far as the council is aware, is represented in this reply:

"PHILADELPHIA, February 9, 1905.

"To the Executive Council of the International Typographical Union:

"DEAR SIRS—Your communication of February 7, entitled 'An Open Letter,' signed by three members of the executive council, and addressed to me, was received this morning.

"I shall take great pleasure in answering this letter, on one condition, viz.: That the executive council assure me, over their signatures, that the answer will be published, precisely as written by me, in the next issue of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, or, that it be printed in the same form as has the 'open letter,' and a copy of the same sent in the same manner to the individual members of our beloved organization.

"Sincerely yours,
"ALFRED D. CALVERT,
"President Typographical Union No. 2."

The above answer, if it comes under that designation, was placed before the council, and its secretary was directed to send the following:

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 18, 1905.

"A. D. Calvert, President No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

"DEAR MR. CALVERT—The executive council, to which I submitted your letter of February 9, has instructed me to advise you as follows: 'That President Calvert be informed that the council awaits a reply to its letter of February 7, 1905, addressed to him as president of No. 2, and does not propose to agree to any stipulations under which a reply from him shall be made to a plain business proposition. The council desires to repeat that it will assist in organizing Philadelphia, and will furnish such money as in its opinion is necessary for this purpose, when No. 2 accepts the conditions set forth in the decision of the council, dated November 4, 1904, and reaffirmed December 14, 1904.' Fraternally,

"J. W. BRAMWOOD."

FURTHER ACTION BY EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

Philadelphia Union No. 2 later petitioned the council to approve an appeal to subordinate unions for financial aid. The council's action is given herewith:

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 18, 1905.

"Alfred D. Calvert, President No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

"DEAR SIR—At a meeting of the executive council held this morning due consideration was given your letter of February 8, in which you state that 'At the last regular meeting of the organization committee of Typographical Union No. 2, acting for the union, the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "Resolved, That in compliance with section xviii, International Typographical Union general laws, we petition the executive council of the International Typographical Union to grant us the privilege of appealing to subordinate unions for financial assistance in our fight against the unfair Philadelphia Inquirer."'

"The executive council declines to approve an appeal by No. 2 for financial aid from subordinate unions, for the following reasons:

"1. It has been the invariable custom of executive councils of the International Typographical Union to decline to endorse appeals for aid to subordinate unions when the International funds at the disposal of the executive council were, in its opinion, sufficient to meet all necessary expenditures in the case at issue.

"2. The executive council has not declined to grant Philadelphia Union such financial assistance as in its opinion is necessary to carry on the fight mentioned in the resolution passed by the organization committee of No. 2. On the contrary, reference to the decision of the executive council, dated November 9, 1904, and reaffirmed December 14, 1904, will demonstrate that the council at time expressed its willingness 'to continue financial aid to the extent of $100 per week, until further notice, Philadelphia Typographical Union to contribute a like amount.'

"3. Your union declined to accept the conditions imposed by the executive council relative to the supervision of the work, reduction of expenses, etc., as covered in its decision of November 9, 1904, and has so far persisted in its refusal to accept the ruling of the executive council in this case. In other words, the organization committee, acting for Philadelphia Union No. 2, declines to abide by that portion of the International law relative to the disbursement of funds by the executive council, and in effect maintains that the committee alone has the right to determine the amount of International money that shall be expended in Philadelphia, and the manner and necessity of its use. Furthermore, your organization committee now endeavors to assume that the work in Philadelphia must be conducted in accordance with its wishes alone, or not at all; that the executive council has no right to determine the manner in which the work of organization in your city shall be carried on, even though International funds are expended in the work in question. This is a radical departure from the position taken by your committee in its letter of July 28, 1904, addressed to the executive council, which contains the following statement, to which the attention of your committee is now most respectfully directed: 'First: The committee accepts as a statement of fact, nor has it ever denied, your first proposition that the executive council "IS IN CHARGE OF THE PHILADELPHIA REORGANIZATION WORK, AND THAT ANY ORDER IT ISSUES TO THE INTERNATIONAL REPRESENTATIVE IN CHARGE, OR TO THE REORGANIZATION COMMITTEE, OR TO PHILADELPHIA TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION NO. 2, MUST BE OBEYED."' If the organization committee of Philadelphia Typographical Union, acting for the union, will follow the lines laid down in the portion of the committee's letter of July 28, 1904, quoted above, the executive council stands ready to furnish 'financial aid to the extent of $100 per week until further notice,' as set forth in its decision of November 9, 1904. Furthermore, no controversy would have arisen between the executive council of the International Typographical Union and the organization committee of Philadelphia Union No. 2 had such a course been pursued when the council's decision of November 9, 1904, was received by your committee. The council in its decision at that time briefly expressed itself regarding the conduc of the Philadelphia fight, and made its continuance of financial support conditional upon the acceptance by Philadelphia Union No. 2 of the requirements relative to the supervision of the work, reduction of expenses, etc., that were made a part of that decision. Your organization committee, acting for the union, has so far refused to comply with this decision and accept the appropriation proffered by the council, notwithstanding the fact that in its letter to the council, dated July 28, 1904, it acknowledged that the executive council was 'IN CHARGE OF THE PHILADELPHIA REORGANIZATION WORK, AND THAT ANY ORDER IT ISSUES TO THE INTERNATIONAL REPRESENTATIVE IN CHARGE, OR TO THE REORGANIZATION COMMITTEE, OR TO PHILADELPHIA UNION NO. 2, MUST BE OBEYED.'

"4. The executive council desires to also direct the attention of the organization committee to the contents of its open letter of February 7, 1905, addressed to President Calvert, of your union. Said letter contains the following concluding paragraph: 'The council again expresses itself as willing to aid in the work of organization, under the conditions set forth in its letter of November 9, 1904. And for the protection of the members of No. 2, and for the protection of the members of the International Typographical Union in adjacent territory, the council demands that your union act at once.'

"5. The position taken by your organization committee in that portion of its letter of July 28, 1904, quoted above, was in accord with International law. The effort made by your organization committee to nullify the decision of the council of November 9, 1904, reaffirmed December 14, 1904, is in defiance of International law and constituted authority.

"6. The council further desires to call the attention of your organization committee to the following excerpt from a letter addressed to President Calvert, of your union, dated February 18, 1905: 'The council desires to repeat that it will assist in organizing Philadelphia, and will furnish such money as in its opinion is necessary for this purpose, when No. 2 accepts the conditions set forth in the decision of the council dated November 9, 1904, and reaffirmed December 14, 1904.'

"Fraternally yours,
"JAMES M. LYNCH,
"HUGO MILLER,
"J. W. BRAMWOOD,
"Executive Council,
"International Typographical Union."

THE COUNCIL DECLINES TO ACT AS A CONVENIENCE

The following correspondence explains itself:

"PHILADELPHIA, March 10, 1905.

"To the Executive Council of the International Typographical Union, Indianapolis, Indiana:

"GENTLEMEN—It is the desire of Typographical Union No. 2 to have the Philadelphia Inquirer placed upon the unfair list of the American Federation of Labor. We understand that this can only be done on application from the International Union interested, and we hereby request that you make this application to the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor.

"It is our belief that the placing of this paper on the American Federation of Labor unfair list will be of material assistance to us in our fight, and inasmuch as it is the custom of the American Federation of Labor officials to endeavor to settle difficulties before taking this action, it might bring about negotiations leading to a settlement, the Inquirer, in our opinion, not being averse to a conclusion of hostilities at this time if it could be brought about without an apparent surrender to the local union.

"Trusting you will give this matter your earliest attention and awaiting your reply, I am,

"Fraternally,
"ALFRED D. CALVERT,
"President Typographical Union No. 2.

"Attest C. S. CLAYTON, Secretary."

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 23, 1905.

"C. S. Clayton, Secretary No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

"DEAR MR. CLAYTON—Referring to your letter of March 10, in which No. 2 asked to have The Inquirer placed upon the unfair list of the American Federation of Labor, I have to say that the communication in question was laid before the executive council. The decision of the council is as follows:

" 'Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2 has declined to recognize or accept prior decisions, opinions and desires of the executive council in the Philadelphia Inquirer matter, this attitude on the part of No. 2 dating from November 19, 1904. Therefore, the executive council can not consistently ally itself with the Inquirer boycott in any way, and it declines to accede to the request contained in the communication from Philadelphia, bearing date of March 10, and requesting the executive council to petition the American Federation of Labor to place The Inquirer upon the American Federation of Labor unfair list. It is presumptuous, to say the least, for Typographical Union No. 2, its officers or committees, to demand or expect that the executive council shall do as it wishes in the Philadelphia case, while the union and its officers and committees persistently decline to be guided by the laws of the International Typographical Union, or governed by the decisions and desires of the executive council, made in accordance with International law.'

"By order of the executive council.

"Fraternally yours,

"J. W. BRAMWOOD,

"Secretary Executive Council."

This terminated the Philadelphia incident for the time being. The above correspondence is given for the information of the delegates, and to aid them in reaching a conclusion at the Toronto convention, where the case will be taken by the executive council, if not by the local union directly interested. The charge made by a member of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2 that it was "the deliberate intention of the executive council to destroy Typographical Union No. 2," and "that the executive council is in league with the rat employers and rat printers of Philadelphia," the reference of this charge to No. 2, under Section 81 of the general laws, the consideration given the charge by No. 2, and all the documents in the possession of the council relating to the incident, have been made the subject of a pamphlet now in the hands of the delegates, and this report will not be burdened with the reproduction of the contents of that document.

ARBITRATION.

As indicated in another portion of this report, our relations with the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and especially those newspapers having arbitration contracts, have been pleasant and profitable during the past year. We have had several scales arbitrated, and numerous minor matters have been adjusted between the commissioner of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association and the president of the International Typographical Union. As a matter of fact, to my mind the chief value of the arbitration arrangement is the opportunity it affords for the settlement of these minor contentions which formerly caused infinite trouble, often leading to costly and useless strikes.

In conversation with several of the officers of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association it has been asserted that the newspaper publishers do not object so much to wages as they do to the numerous exactions which our constantly changing laws impose on their composing rooms. The complaint is, that there is no stability and that a rule effective this year, and requiring certain action, may be radically different next year and require reverse action. These annoyances, as they are termed by the publishers, reach the business office and gradually undermine, and sometimes entirely destroy, the friendly feeling that exists for our organization.

As a remedy for this situation it has been suggested by your president to the newspaper officials that at the expiration of the present arbitration agreement, an entirely different contract shall be entered into. This contract to include the International law affecting newspaper composing rooms in effect at the time the contract is made, and agreed interpretations of these laws. The contract may also include general rules relative to shop practice and such other arrangements as can be mutually agreed to. The arbitration arrangement as applied to hours and wages can also be made a part of the contract and can be determined in the light of our experience under our present agreement. Immediately on the ratification of the contract outlined herein, it is my idea it should become operative, and applicable to every union newspaper holding membership in the Newspaper Publishers' Association and to every typographical union in whose jurisdiction such a newspaper may be located. This will obviate the complaint so often made that under the present arrangement the publisher has the determination of the application of the arbitration agreement to his newspaper mechanical departments, and that he can accept or reject the agreement as he sees fit, but that if he does accept it the local union is bound, regardless of its wishes.

It is true that our code of procedure, including the requirement that a certificate shall be signed by the officers of the local union and the local publisher, setting forth that the mechanical department affected under its jurisdiction in the newspaper plant desiring the arbitration agreement is entirely union, that there is no change, or contemplated change of scale under consideration by either party, etc., does away with the cause for the complaint referred to, to a very large extent, but it remains that the application of the arbitration agreement in the first instance is entirely at the will of the publisher.

I am convinced that the new contract outlined, if it can be formulated on the plan proposed, will for a period of either three or five years mean that industrial peace will reign in more than two hundred large newspaper establishments, and that the idea will also be an attraction to newspapers that do not hold membership in the great central body. The present arbitration agreement expires on May 1, 1907, and it is not too early for our membership to consider the advisability of making a new contract, and the provisions of that contract.

I am submitting the list of newspapers holding arbitration agreements. This list was published in my report of last year, and it is now revised and up to date. The list is appended to this report, appearing as "Exhibit B."

KANSAS CITY MAILERS' CASE.

There was an arbitration of a contention between the Kansas City Journal and Kansas City Mailers' Union No. 7. The Kansas City Star agreeing to abide by the result. The case was considered by the national arbitration board, consisting in this instance of Frederick Driscoll, commissioner of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association; James J. Mulcahy, third vice-president of the International Typographical Union and the mailers' representative, and B. C. Christopher, a Kansas City grain broker, who was chairman of the board. After the verdict was rendered, the union mailers resigned their positions, as "individuals," despite contrary advice and instructions from the International president. The mailers were informed that if there were any errors or illegality in the board's award these matters could be adjusted, provided the men would return to work. But this the mailers again declined to do. The International president was requested to visit Kansas City in behalf of the mailers, and wired that he would do so, providing that the mailers first returned to their positions. This the mailers once more declined, and there the matter rested for several days. Then a committee from Mailers' Union No. 7 visited International headquarters, acknowledged that the union members had made a grievous error, and again asked for assistance in straightening out the unfortunate tangle. The committee was informed that the union should first place itself in the proper attitude, and express regret for the clear violation of a contract. This was later acceded to, in the union adopting these resolutions:

"The members of Mailers' Union No. 7 desire to express their regrets for the action taken by the members in not accepting the decision of the board of arbitration and not following the instructions of the president of the International Typographical Union. And further agree to abide by said decision and carry out the provisions of the verdict faithfully for the time that it applies."

Effort was made to free the union from the consequences of its hasty and unwise action. The International president, as our representative on the National board of arbitration, maintained that the mailing departments of the papers affected must be unionized in accordance with the requirements of the arbitration contract. The contract, it was held, had been fulfilled by the International Typographical Union, in that the rebellious mailers had been ordered to return to work, and every request made by the Journal and Star to the International president had been complied with. The case was considered at a meeting in New York, participated in by your president and representatives of the A. N. P. A., but as an understanding could not be reached, an adjournment was taken to Kansas City. The executive council of the International Typographical Union, accompanied by Vice-President Mulcahy, met in Kansas City on June 7 with the special standing committee, the commissioner and the president of the A. N. P. A. After fully considering all the phases of the mailers' difficulty and the claim made by your president, the following decision was arrived at:

"Decision of the joint conference consisting of the executive council of the International Typographical Union, and the special standing committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, concerning the situation of the mailing departments of the Star and Journal, of Kansas City, Mo.: The contract which the Journal had with the mailers' union of Kansas City, which contract was underwritten by the International Typographical Union, and the terms of which were taken advantage of by the Kansas City Star, as hereinafter set forth, provided that in case of a dispute or misunderstanding between the publisher of the Journal and the employes of its mailing department, such dispute or disagreement should be decided under the provisions of the arbitration agreement. In pursuance of this contract, a disagreement as to wages and hours between the publisher of the Journal and its mailing-room employes was submitted to the national arbitration board, as provided for in the contract, the Star becoming a party to this arbitration.

"A decision was rendered in due course by this board. The arbitration decision was not accepted by the employes of the mailing departments of the Kansas City Journal and Kansas City Star, all of them members of the local mailers' union, and these employes jointly left the employ of the two papers at midnight on Saturday, September 24, 1904.

"In violation of the arbitration award, this action of the mailers was also in disobedience to the orders of the executive council of the International Typographical Union, which organization expressed, through its president, its entire disapproval of the action and disavowal of its responsibility therefor.

"It is therefore decided by this joint conference that the arbitration agreement existing between the Journal and the International Typographical Union shall be void on and after July 1, 1905, so far as that agreement applies to the mailing departments of the Kansas City Star and Journal, but shall remain in force in its application to the other departments of the Journal. If before the date mentioned the publishers of the two papers, or either of them, shall unionize their mailing departments under the terms of the arbitration contract between the Journal and the International Typographical Union, then the present contract and award made under it shall continue in force for the term originally set."

NATIONAL BOARD OF ARBITRATION AWARDS.

Akron (Ohio) Beacon Journal. The issue arose on August 3, 1901, and was finally settled on July 31, 1902. The decision of the board sustained the contentions of the union for shortening the hours of the "ad" men. Back pay to the date the issue was raised was ordered to be paid by the publisher. This was the only case which arose under the first arbitration agreement covering the period of one year from May 1, 1901.

The Toronto Typographical Union demanded an increase of scale in March, 1902, which the publishers declined to grant. Although the publishers had no arbitration rights, nevertheless President Lynch and Commissioner Driscoll visited that city and by conciliation a new scale was established, which granted an increase of wages for which not only were the publishers satisfied, but the union by formal resolution thanked the commissioner.

At Saratoga Springs (N. Y.) on May 30, 1902, a demand of the union was settled by conciliation granting an increase of about 10 per cent above the previous scale.

At St. Louis by national arbitration in June, 1902, the stereotypers' scale was substantially increased.

At New York Organizer McLoughlin, as proxy for President Lynch, and Commissioner Driscoll granted an increase of scale to the mailers' union of that city.

At Springfield, Ill., August, 1902, arbitration was had, and resulted in an increase of scale for the typographical union of that city.

At Boston the mailers' union demands were adjusted by national arbitration in November, 1902, resulting in an increase of the scale.

At Boston, Mass., in December, 1902, the national board, without calling upon a third member agreed upon an increase of scale for the typographical union of that city.

At Zanesville, Ohio, in January, 1903, the national board reviewed the award of the local arbitration board, which latter had granted no increase of the scale. After a full hearing the award of the local board was sustained.

At New York, in February, 1903, the national board granted an increase of wages to the German union of that city.

At Grand Rapids, Mich., in March, 1903, the national board adjusted finally by conciliation a change of scale, which increased the wage of all floor hands with a very small reduction of machine scale for purposes of equalization.

At Houston, Texas, in April, 1903, the national board, fully organized with three members, granted an increase of wages to the floor hands in the composing rooms of that city.

At Minneapolis, Minn., in May, 1903, the national board considered an application of the typographical union for increase of scale. An award was signed by a majority of the board granting no increase, as the minimum standard was too low. Since then the standard has been raised and by conciliation the wages were raised for all $2 per week above the old scale.

At Detroit, Mich., in May, 1903, the demands of the union were settled by conciliation by Vice-President Hawkes and Commissioner Driscoll. This settlement allowed a satisfactory increase of wages over the old scale.

At New York, in June, 1903, the national board, after the fullest hearing, decided to grant no increase over the existing scale. It was, however, stipulated in the award that no member of the union receiving above the scale could be reduced.

At Spokane, Wash., in July, 1903, the national board met to consider an appeal from the local award. The president of the International Typographical Union declining to vote for a third arbitrator, no agreement was reached.

At Indianapolis, Ind., in October, 1903, by conciliation in joint conference of the executive council of the International Typographical Union and the special standing committee with the commissioner of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association settled the Spokane difficulty by granting an increase of wages over the old scale.

At the same place and by the same parties in the same week the wage scale of Seattle, Wash., was adjusted by granting an increase over the old scale.

At New Orleans, in November, 1903, the national board settled by conciliation a new scale for the typographical union, which secured an increase for floor hands.

Denver, December 5-7—Arbitration board finally constituted with Sidney Eastwood as chairman. Demand of union, reduction of hours from eight to seven for newspaper work. Decision of arbitration board, dictated by chairman, eight-hour day to obtain with twenty minutes out for lunch.

Salt Lake City, December 10 and 11—Secured proposition from publishers for time scale, $5, and $4.50 for operators, and $4.75 and $4.25 for floormen and proofreaders, which union meeting held at 5 P. M. on the 10th, rejected. Meeting with publishers in the evening secured proposition for both piece and time scale, piece scale for machines being 10 cents and 11 cents, time scale for floormen to be $4.25 and $4.75. This proposition accepted by union at meeting held 5 P. M., December 11.

The national arbitration board met in Syracuse on January 6, 1904, and on January 9, 1904, rendered the following verdict: That the present wage scale shall continue, except that the wages shall be $19 and $22; overtime at the rate of 60 cents and 65 cents per hour, day and night, respectively. The same to continue in force for two years from February 1. The union asked $21 and $24.

The board met in Utica, N. Y., on Thursday, May 26, 1904. Dr. James H. Glass was selected as the third member. Decision, previous wages, $18 and $21, eight hours, to continue for two years from April 2, 1904. Union asked $21 and $24.

Louisville, Ky.—Wage scale settled by conciliation. Eight hours, and advance in wages of 2 cents per hour. Employers presented demand for decrease; union presented demand for increase.

Kansas City, Mo.—Arbitration of the scale presented by the Kansas City Mailers' Union. Decision, $14 per week of fifty-two hours for both day and night work, 30 cents per hour overtime. Scale to be in effect for one year, commencing September 13, 1904. This was a reduction from the old scale. The arbitrators were Commissioner Driscoll, J. J. Mulcahy, president mailers' trade district union, and B. C. Christopher, of Kansas City.

The national board of arbitration, composed of William Warner (chairman), Frederick Driscoll, commissioner of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and J. W. Hays, first vice-president of the International Typographical Union, rendered a decision in the controversy existing between Typographical Union No. 80 and the Kansas City (Mo.) Journal. According to the board's award, the following changes are made in the agreement heretofore existing between the union and that newspaper: Beginners on machines, first four weeks, $2 per day; fifth to eighth week, $2.25; ninth and tenth weeks, $2.50; eleventh and twelfth weeks, $3. The number of apprentices not to exceed one for five journeymen regularly employed, two for ten, three for fifteen, and one for each additional ten regularly employed. The wage rate for machinists to be the same as that for linotype operators. The decision in this case was rendered on January 13, 1905, the entire proceeding having consumed about two weeks' time.

At Detroit, Mich., January 23, 1905, the national arbitration board, consisting of Commissioner Driscoll and Vice-President Hays, rendered a decision confirming the claims of the union on the construction of certain clauses of the contract and scale of prices, and reducing the hours for machine tenders from fifty-four to fifty per week.

Zanesville, Ohio—Arbitration board composed of Commissioner Driscoll, Michael Colbert and Rev. J. H. Hutchman rendered the following decisions: On demand of the union for a piece scale for linotype machine operators: "That the linotype machine operators on the Zanesville Signal and the Zanesville Times-Recorder shall be paid on a time basis." On demand of the union for increase in scale and counter proposition of the publishers for a decrease in scale: "That the scale for evening papers be, time hands, $16.80 per week; foremen, $18.30 per week; machinist-operators, $16.80 per week plus $3 for caring for machines. That the morning scale for time hands be $18 per week; foremen, $20 per week; machinist-operators, $18 per week plus $3 for caring for machines." By this decision the scale for foremen on evening papers is increased $1.50 and on morning papers $2 per week. The balance of the scale was not changed. This arbitration was held March 7 to 10, 1905.

The national arbitration board, consisting of Commissioner Driscoll and Vice-President Hays, met in Cincinnati on June 29, 1905, and on July 3 rendered a decision which provides that when the head of a department lays off, the man filling his place during such absence shall be paid the scale provided for that position; that the priority law of the International Typographical Union applies to all people in the composing room, and when men are laid off for the purpose of reducing the force, those so displaced shall become the priority subs in regular order. The scale of prices was left unchanged. This case was inaugurated by the publishers demanding a decrease in the scale.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

In its report the American Federation of Labor executive council made reference to the New Orleans case, brought to the council's attention by the president of the International Typographical Union, who complained that a member, proprietor and editor of a labor paper in New Orleans, all the work in connection with which was performed by union labor, had been unjustly treated by the New Orleans central body, the latter declaring the paper unfair; that the reason for declaring this publication unfair was due to nothing more or less than the expression of opinion by the editor. The council declared that: "While we all reserve to ourselves the right of patronizing or refusing to patronize any publication, because of the views and judgment expressed in its columns, yet, as trade unionists, we have not the moral right to 'boycott' any publication because of the expression of opinion through its columns." The council expressly stated that it did not undertake to say that the published statements complained of were justified or otherwise; "we are not in a position to know, but whatever the expressions may have been, the untrammeled freedom of the press is so important to the well being, not only of organized labor, but to human, civilized life, that no conceivable circumstance could arise that would warrant trade unionists, in their organized capacity, in placing a publication upon a 'boycott' list for the expression of opinion." The council recommended that unless the offending central body removed the paper from its unfair list within thirty days after the close of the convention its charter should be withdrawn. The committee to which the matter was referred endorsed the recommendation, which was adopted by the convention, and we have been notified that the New Orleans central body has removed the paper from its unfair list.

CONDITION THAT REQUIRES ATTENTION.

Section 135 of our general laws "relegates the use of plates and plate supplement matter" to subordinate unions, with power to act. Section 136 applies to the "practice of interchanging, exchanging, borrowing, lending or buying of matter previously used, either in the form of type or matrices, between newspapers or job offices, not owned by the same individual, firm or corporation, and published in the same establishment," and makes such practice unlawful, but it is provided that the reproduction of such type or matrices shall be deemed a compliance with the law. While it may be held that the principle enunciated should be generally applied, it must be admitted that the law itself covers, mainly, local conditions. The comic supplement and colored supplement, replete with both illustrations and text, and supplied from the larger cities in matrix or printed form, are being more generally used. Recently, the information was given your president that one well-known newspaper has some three hundred customers for its comic and colored or feature supplements. Under the law of several local unions, it is required that the typed portion of these supplements shall be reset; still other, and the greater number, of our local unions are silent on the subject; the type is not reset and the use of the supplements is permitted, free from union penalty. As has been pointed out, the condition has changed from a local to a general one, and there should be some pronouncement of policy by the convention. It may be maintained that the use of the supplements should be prohibited, or at least penalized to such an extent as to make their appearance as a part of a daily or Sunday newspaper unprofitable, unless they are produced in the office of the publication with which they appear. Before reaching this conclusion the membership should carefully study the problem. It is admitted that the use of "boiler plate" did not injure, but on the contrary most emphatically helped our trade. Because of this plate hundreds of papers, with the addition of local and telegraph news, type set in the office of publication, not only were enabled to enter unexploited fields, but prospered, incidentally giving employment to hundreds of compositors. Is it not reasonable then to assume that the unrestricted use of the comic and feature supplement will permit weak and struggling newspapers to continue in the field and gradually gain strength and standing. The more newspapers, the more opportunity for employment for our members, and we should pause and consider well before taking any action that will harass or throttle publications that might otherwise be a source of livelihood for an important proportion of our membership. It may be that the supplements will curtail opportunity for employment in isolated instances, but it is the general good that should be considered.

THE LOS ANGELES TIMES.

We are still prosecuting, as vigorously as the monetary allowance will permit, the effort to unionize the Los Angeles Times. Early in the year, the executive council, following the policy of subordinating all enterprises to the eight-hour movement, reduced to $600 per month the appropriation for financing the Times contest. It was believed that amount would permit as effective a campaign as it was desirable to conduct until the eight-hour problem was determined. We have more than held our own, and the Times has continued to lose in both advertising and subscriptions. The Los Angeles Examiner is now firmly established, and its managers assert that it has more advertising and a greater circulation than the Times. While we have expended a large amount of money in the Times affair, the Examiner has paid in wages to union men more than three times the amount we have put into Los Angeles. And the Examiner is one of the results of our movement against the Times.

Some of our members appear to have the impression that the International Typographical Union per capita tax of 40 cents per month—embracing THE JOURNAL subscription—includes a special assessment for Los Angeles Typographical Union No. 174. This is an error. There is no special assessment running at the present time, other than the eight-hour assessment of one-half of one per cent. The Cincinnati convention (pages 148-150 proceedings) submitted to the referendum a proposition for a special assessment of 5 cents per capita to finance the Los Angeles Times contest. This proposition was adopted by the membership. The Washington convention submitted to the membership a proposition which in effect would make the per capita tax 40 cents (35 cents per capita tax and 5 cents for THE JOURNAL), and at the same time submitted a new apportionment of the International dues, as follows: "Five cents to the general fund; 5 cents to the special defense fund; 7½ cents to the defense fund; 7½ cents to the burial fund, and 10 cents to the endowment fund of the Union Printers' Home." There was also submitted to the convention a new section to be added to article ix of the constitution: "The special defense fund shall be used for the purpose of advancing the principles of unionism as applied to our own trade, whenever and however the executive council may decide." It was further provided that, in the event of the defeat of the special defense fund proposition by the membership, the council should submit a proposition for the continuance of the 5-cent assessment for the Los Angeles contest. All of the propositions referred to were adopted, however, and on December 31, 1903, the Los Angeles assessment ceased. But as it was the evident intention of the convention that the council should continue the contest in Los Angeles, as was indicated in its adoption of the report of the committee on the Los Angeles Times contest (pages 148 and 149, Washington proceedings), the council acted in harmony with the desire of the convention. There was a balance in the Los Angeles assessment fund when the new law became effective on January 1, 1904, and in April, 1904, the council decided to reduce the expenses at that point to $900 per month, this amount being paid from the defense fund after the assessment fund was exhausted. At the St. Louis convention (page 180, proceedings) the executive council was "instructed to furnish such finances from the defense fund as in its wisdom may be necessary for the continuance of the contest." In accordance with the convention instructions, the executive council, in September, 1904, further reduced the amount allowed Los Angeles Typographical Union to $600 per month.

Your president recommends that the effort to unionize the Los Angeles Times shall be continued. Success will be cheap at any expenditure.

SCALE STATISTICS.

The data appearing in this section of my report is taken from the scale compilation, arranged and published in March, in pursuance of International law, by the secretary-treasurer.

HOURS OF LABOR.

To understandingly show the hours worked by the members of local unions, two tables were compiled, and are made a part of this synopsis. The first contains the hours reported for offices employing hand composition, while the second comprises those governing offices using machines In each table the first column contains the number of hours constituting a week's work. The remaining columns show the number of unions reporting those hours for each particular class of work—morning, evening and weekly newspapers, and book and job rooms. A study of these tables demonstrates that longer hours of labor are provided by our local unions for hand compositors, and the proofreaders, floormen and admen who work with them, than are required of those employed in machine offices. The hours of labor in hand offices range from thirty-six to fifty-four per week. In machine offices they vary from eighteen to fifty-four. A gratifying increase is noted in the number of unions reporting forty-eight hours as constituting a week's work in hand offices. The comparison is shown in the following tables:

REDUCTION IN HOURS.

In the next table appears the number of decreases in the hours of labor since January 1, 1904:

Scales.	Hand.	Machine.
Morning newspaper	40	15
Evening newspaper	55	29
Weekly newspaper	51	17
Book and job	71	15
Totals	217	76

The reductions in the hours of labor at hand composition number 217; machine composition, 76; a total of 293. These reductions vary from one-half hour to six hours per week. The following schedule contains the aggregate weekly reductions in hours:

Scales.	Hand.	Machine.
Morning newspaper	147	53½
Evening newspaper	184½	103
Weekly newspaper	175½	50½
Book and job	241½	39
Total weekly decrease	748½	246

An average weekly decrease of about three hours for both hand and machine composition is the meaning of these figures. It will be observed that in the number of reductions in hours and the aggregate of such decreases the hand compositors fared better than the machine operators. This is due to the eight-hour movement and the continued effort on the part of local unions to reduce the hours of floormen and admen to the number enjoyed by machine operators.

MACHINES, OPERATORS, ETC.

An increase of more than 10 per cent is shown in the number of machines in use. This method of composition promises to invade even the smallest cities. It is sufficient to direct attention to the figures below, showing the number of the various machines in union and non-union offices. They demonstrate in unmistakable terms the superior skill of our members, and the results of a strong organization.

With the continued introduction of machines, and the almost universal practice in the larger cities of working two or three shifts, the number of machines, operators, tenders, etc., has grown proportionately. That these statistics are creditable to our, International Union none will deny:

WAGE SCALES INCREASED.

It is impossible to present a résumé of the increases in the scales of our locals so as to show clearly the gain by each one. Suffice it to say that they vary from one-half cent per 1,000 ems to $8 per week, or, conservatively estimated, from 2 to 75 per cent. Several newly-formed unions have not only greatly increased the wages of their members, but have at the same time reduced their working hours six per week. The older locals have made smaller gains, but their progress is substantial and encouraging.

The instances in which the wages of jobmen, hand compositors, proofreaders, floormen, admen and machine operators have been increased since January 1, 1904, are given below:

ORGANIZATION.

Through constantly urging organization in anticipation of eight-hour friction, it is expected that, on January 1, 1906, we will so thoroughly control the trade it will be impossible for the few employers who may prefer a strike to the eight-hour day to fill the places of our members. No better illustration of the value of thorough organization can be cited than the result of the recent movement in New York city, initiated by the stereotypers' union, for the eight-hour day in the electrotype, column and job stereotype establishments. It is estimated that the stereotypers and electrotypers control at least 95 per cent of the craftsmen throughout the United States and Canada. In New York the percentage is even higher. As a result of this thorough organization, the employing stereotypers and electrotypers, with very little opposition, granted the eight-hour day, and it became effective on January 1, 1905. Here is an object lesson. The employers recognize the futility of any attempt to prevent the introduction of the eight-hour day when the workers demanding it are in the union. In four years the International Typographical Union has increased its membership more than 40 per cent. Per capita to the American Federation for 1900 was paid on 32,900 members per month, that being the average number for the year; in 1901, on 36,500 members; in 1902, on 39,300 members; in 1903, on 43,500 members, and in 1904, on 46,700 members. The advantageous and satisfactory settlement of a scale or other difficulty is a great organizing and strengthening factor, both in the locality affected and the surrounding territory.

INSTRUCTIONS TO ORGANIZERS.

A letter, copy of which is herewith reproduced, was early in 1905 sent to all the organizers:

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., January 19, 1905.

"Dear Mr. ———.—In the 'President's Page,' in the current issue of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, I quote from a letter written by me to an officer of a local union, as follows:

" 'I desire to say that we are making an especial effort to organize the printers throughout the United States and Canada. We are doing this in order that we may, to even a better degree, control the followers of the trade on January 1, 1906, and thus enhance our prospect for a peaceable eight-hour agreement with our employers. The task is a tremendous one, and to properly prosecute it is far beyond the monetary resources of the International Typographical Union. We must, therefore, depend on the local unions to organize, not alone their jurisdictions, but all of the country printers that can be reached by them. In my correspondence, and in the "President's Page," I am appealing, and will continue to appeal, to our local unions, and especially to their officers and eight-hour committees, to give this subject of organization particular attention during the coming year. I know that this will impose an additional burden on our local unions, but the expenditure of money now for organization purposes may make unnecessary the expenditure of money for strike purposes on January 1, 1906.'

"Since the appearance of the above, some of our local union officers and members have written me, asking if the organizers were not to do any of the work outlined in the quotation from the 'President's Page.' In each case, I have answered that the organizers are expected to do what they can, but that we have not the money at our disposal to permit of the International Union doing all of the work.

"I call the matter to your atention at this time in order that you may understand my position as regards organization. Also, it is my wish that you accept every opportunity that offers to establish a new union, or to add members to unions now in existence, or to the International roll through and under the provisions of section 32 of the general laws.

"We have on file at this office a list of towns and cities, with data as to number of printing establishments in each, etc., obtained from the newspaper directory, but this data is not always reliable for our purposes, and I suggest that you furnish me with a list of the towns in your section in which you believe results can be obtained.

"If you have in mind at this time any trip that promises results, or any other work that you believe should be undertaken for the purpose of better organization, correspond with us, and directions will be issued.

"It is my intention to leave nothing undone in order that our jurisdiction—the United States and Canada—may be thoroughly organized on January 1, 1906. In this work I want the co-operation of every International officer and member.

"Fraternally,

"JAMES M. LYNCH."

GAINING STRENGTH UNDER FIRE.

It is a fact that, despite the increased International per capita tax, the eight-hour assessment, supplemented in many instances by local assessments, and the feeling of uneasiness natural to a campaign for shorter hours, we have not only retained our membership, but have made a gain, small though it is. There is now under way an organizing effort initiated by local unions acting on suggestions from headquarters, and the fruits of this work do not appear in the membership total for 1904-1905. It took time to get this great movement started, and we know from the reports received that it is more than justifying itself in the results thus far apparent.

During the twelve months ending May 31, 1905, there were organized 43 unions, with an aggregate charter membership of 471. Thirty-three unions with a membership of 266 have surrendered charters. Twelve unions, with a membership of 154, have been suspended.

The average paying membership for the twelve months ending May 31, 1905, has been 46,724, and for the previous year it was 46,165, a net gain of 569. Were the average to be made for the year 1904 alone, it would be much larger. It will approximate at the present time 50,000 members. For the fifth time it is my privilege to say in a report that we have more unions and more members than at any previous period in the history of the International Typographical Union.

During the eleven months ending May 31, 1901, there were organized seventy-five unions with an aggregate charter membership of 1,006; twelve unions, with a membership of 238, surrendered charters; eight unions, with a membership of 84, were suspended, and the charter of one union, with a membership of 14, was revoked. The average paying membership for the eleven months ending May 31, 1901, was 34,948, and for the previous year it was 32,105, a net gain of 2,843.

During the twelve months ending May 31, 1902, there were organized 113 unions, with an aggregate charter membership of 1,653; twenty unions, with a membership of 202, surrendered charters; nine unions, with a membership of 98, were suspended, and the charter of one union, with a membership of 10, was revoked. One union, with a membership of 8, was reinstated. The average paying membership for the twelve months ending May 31, 1902, was 38,364, and for the previous year it was 34,948, a gain of 3,416.

During the twelve months ending May 31, 1903, there were organized 159 unions, with an aggregate charter membership of 2,281. Eighteen unions, with a membership of 235, surrendered charters. Two unions, with a membership of 25, were suspended. One union, with a membership of 10, was reinstated.

During the twelve months ending May 31, 1904, there were organized 60 unions, with an aggregate charter membership of 766. Forty-one unions with a membership of 640, surrendered charters. Twenty-five unions, with a membership of 298, were suspended. One union, with a membership of 36, had its charter revoked, but was immediately reorganized.

These comparative paragraphs make clear that during the last four years we have gained 11,217 members. During the last year the gain was about 9 per cent.

WE WIN AN IMPORTANT LAW CASE.

The famous Wunch case, in litigation in the state of New York for some years, was decided in our favor. The effect of the decision will be to establish the legal right in New York state of union men to refuse to work with non-union, and a decision by the New York court will have great influence on the courts of other states. Our Buffalo representative writes: "It has been a long, wearisome fight, but I think the principle is worth more than can be measured in dollars and cents. The Wunch case was a clean-cut question of law. Our lawyer says it shows that the judges are clearly in sympathy with the aims and objects of trade unions, so long as they abstain from violence, but just as sure as there is a sign of violence the unions will get the worst of it."

ANOTHER INTERESTING DECISION.

A New York court has handed down a decision in which it holds that labor unions may, within lawful limits, boycott, strike and picket. The decision is the outcome of the case of two former employes against the United States Printing Company, of Brooklyn. In August, 1903, after a fight of a year to unionize the electrotype department of the printing company, the union sent letters to the company's customers informing them that the company would not employ union workmen. The union also adopted a system of boycott and picketing which the company asserted interfered with their business. As a result of the troubles a compromise was effected and a contract entered into between the company and the unions of stereotypers and electrotypers by which the company agreed to employ only union men. Two employes refused to join the union, and alleged that the company threatened to discharge them unless they did so. They obtained an injunction from the supreme court preventing the company and the union from interfering with their employment. The attorneys who represented the stereotypers' union appealed from the decision granting the injunction, contending that the agreement to employ only union men was clearly valid, as the result of a voluntary understanding resulting from arbitration, and that there were neither duress nor threats used by the unions in securing the execution of the agreement with the printing company. The prevailing opinion says: "An injunction against organizing a strike can not stand. Neither can a union be enjoined from picketing or boycotting. This injunction is too broad and sweeping. An employe who has not bound himself to his master by a contract can not be bound by law to work for him, and may quit his employment if conditions are not to his (the employe's) liking. A strike per se is not unlawful. What man may do individually he may do collectively. Picketing for purposes of observation is not illegal, and only becomes illegal when they adopt violence. But where persuasion or argument is used, no injunction can apply."

THIS KNOWLEDGE MAY AVERT TROUBLE.

The court, in the decision, made the following close distinction, which will be of interest to officers and members of local unions, and it may be well for them to bear the principle enunciated in mind: "There is a manifest discrimination, well recognized, between a combination of workmen to secure the exclusive employment of its members by a refusal to work with none other, and a combination whose primary object is to procure the discharge of an outsider and his deprivation of all employment. In the first case, the action of the combination is primarily for the betterment of its fellow members. In the second case such action is primarily 'to impoverish and crush another' by making it impossible for him to work there, or, so far as may be possible, anywhere. The difference is between combination for welfare of self and that for the persecution of another. The primary purpose of one may necessarily but incidentally require a discharge of an outsider; the primary purpose of the other is such discharge, and, so far as possible, an exclusion from all labor in his calling. Self-protection may cause incidental injury to another. Self-protection does not aim at malevolent injury to another. The law views an injury arising from competition differently from an injury done in persecution."

WHY THE CASE COULD BE WON FOR THE UNION.

It appears that the decision was in favor of the stereotypers, because the union did not insist on the discharge of the non-union employes, agreeing, on the other hand, to accept these employes into membership. On this point the decision says: "That the aim of the union was not the discharge of the plaintiffs as individuals is clear from the clause in the agreement that they, and all other present employes, would be admitted to the union. Thus, it was willing to avert in the only way possible the injury to the present employes which might arise from the agreement that henceforth only union men should be employed. It would seem that the purpose was not to drive out non-union men that places might be made for union men, but to assure that there should be no employes in this branch who were not members of the union. It may well be that the union deemed it essential to the interests of its members who were employed that all of the employes should be allied, so as to act henceforth in concert on questions of wages, work hours, privileges, or of the employment of only those, to work with them, who were approved by them as skillful or competent. This is a fair inference, because the union did not need to afford this privilege of admission. If it be said that the employer insisted on this provision, nevertheless it appears that the union was willing to insert it. Presumably it would not have done so if the object of the strike was to cause the discharge of the plaintiffs and their fellows, unless, of course, the strike had failed in that respect." The decision in favor of the union was agreed to by all the judges, both as to law and fact, and can not be appealed.

THE LABEL AND ITS ENEMIES.

Reference is made in this report to the conventions of employing printers, recently held. At all of these gatherings the label was an attractive target, and the more radical element among the employers, with great joy took a shot at the label bullseye. It is a fair inference that the label agitation that has thus far been manifested, spasmodic and lacking volume it must be admitted, has nevertheless been effective, when the union-opposing employer is constrained to cry out against the union trademark. It is to be deplored that the unions of printing trade artisans have not yet united on a systematic and well-financed label campaign. The success that has attended the joint agreement, alluded to in this report, may and it is believed will lead to closer affiliation, and a plan for label advertisement that will result in great benefit to the wage-earner. Had such an agitation been under way to what extent our eight-hour interests would now be strengthened may be conceived, but, lacking it, may not now be enjoyed. In view of present ventures the time is peculiarly appropriate for repeating the label observation appearing in four prior reports: "Every local union should have a special fund for label agitation, and a special committee in charge of the work. Those unions which have wisely inaugurated such a movement should give to it renewed force and vigor, and subordinate unions so unfortunate as to have failed in this respect are earnestly recommended to give it immediate attention. This brings me to the consideration of a somewhat remarkable feature of our polity. The International Union has no especial fund for the furtherance of label advertisement. It is true that we manage in many ways to give our trademark prominence and publicity, but there should be provision for the more general promulgation of popular knowledge concerning and demand for it. Five to ten thousand dollars spent in this direction would, I am sure, bring manifold return, both to the present membership and in the way of accretion to its numbers." The practice of going to the printing office patron with the request that the label be a part of the specification for printed matter is often persisted in by our unions after rebuff and refusal have been repeatedly manifested. Where the customer is deaf to the union's request, the customer's customers will, if appealed to, bring about the desired result. It is to these customers that the label advertisement should be directed. They, in the main, are wage-earners, and entirely susceptible to a campaign of education.

THE UNION PRINTERS' HOME.

The annual meeting of the board of trustees of the Union Printers' Home was held in Colorado Springs during September. The board found the Home in good condition, with the exception of modern fire-fighting facilities and appliances. This important feature has been added, together with approved means of escape in case of fire. The money for the proposed addition is gradually forthcoming, although the eight-hour agitation and assessment have interfered somewhat. Attention is directed to the reports of the board of trustees of the Home, and of the Cummings' Memorial committee.

A condition that causes much perplexity frequently confronts the board of trustees, and especially the admission committee. Many applications are received from members whose physical condition does not warrant favorable action for the reason that the applicants are either helpless or liable to become so. The affliction is generally locomotor ataxia, but in some instances it is another disease of a progressive nature. If such applicants are to be admitted, then there will eventually be a large increase in the Home's service staff. Personal attendants for helpless cases will have to be provided. This condition has been before the board of trustees at each of its sessions for the past four years, and each year the admission committee has in effect been instructed to reject applications from members liable to become helpless or already in that condition. Almost without exception, applicants in the inhibited class have been members of many years' standing, and the local union submitting their applications can not be convinced that these applicants should not be admitted to the privileges of the Home, notwithstanding their physical condition. There should be some pronouncement of policy by the convention. The inclination and personal desire of all of the members of the board tend toward admission, but there is a condition that must be faced. If this class of applicants referred to is to be admitted, and if the only requirements for admission are to be the necessary five years continuous membership and freedom from loathsome disease, then in a short time the expense of the Home will outrun its revenue. It may be asserted that the membership will meet this condition when it arises, but previous experience does not lead to optimism as to this outcome. It is believed that the International per capita is as high now as it can well be for several years, and together with local dues, constitutes an important expenditure each month. It must also be remembered that after the proposed addition to the Home is in service, the monthly cost of maintenance will be materially increased.

Then there is the growing tendency to send to the Home members far advanced in the second stage of tuberculosis, and also in the third stage of that dread disease. Our experience demonstrates that the Colorado climate, while efficacious if taken advantage of in time, is not only not conducive to recovery in second and third stage tuberculosis, but, on the contrary, it generally hastens death. An excerpt from the Superintendent's report for the month of April gives force to the foregoing observations. That officer says: "It will be noted that the burial account is unusually heavy. It is a noteworthy fact that the deaths (4) were all from tuberculosis, three of the deceased having been residents of the Home but a very short time. To be exact, one had been a resident for eight months, one two and one-half months, and one but one month. All were in the advanced stages of the disease."

ADVERTISING PAYS.

As a result of the publication in the November issue of the Inland Printer of the story descriptive of the Union Printers' Home, scores of papers have reprinted the article, and many of these journals have supplemented the reproduction with complimentary editorial notices. The Cummings memorial committee printed the article in pamphlet form, and several thousand copies have been circulated. The Home and the International Typographical Union, by reason of the publicity obtained, are favorably known today by thousands of persons previously having no knowledge of the institutions. Public estimation is a valuable asset.

OUR AFFILIATED UNIONS AND THE JOINT AGREEMENT.

The mailers, typefounders and newspaper writers have their progress set forth in the reports of their officers, and made a part of this volume. Effort has been made to reorganize the typefounders, and it is progressing nicely. An unwise, illegal and ineffective strike of the Kansas City mailers, against the verdict of an arbitration board, has retarded somewhat the further growth of mailers' unions. This strike was entered into despite International law and contract obligations, and in defiance of orders from the International officers. The less said of it the better for the parties participating in it.

The amended joint agreement is reprinted and made a part of this report, in the form of Exhibit C. During the time that it has been in effect the agreement has given satisfaction. Allied trades councils are conducted without friction, and all differences are adjusted under the provisions of the agreement. The annual meeting of the joint board, provided for in the agreement, took place at International Typographical Union headquarters last January. Several appeal cases were fully considered, and unanimous decisions reached in each instance. These decisions are reprinted with the agreement. The agreement was amended in several important particulars, and this action was also unanimous. Conditions in several important printing trade centers were discussed, and effort toward improvement has been made. The agreement has worked out splendidly during the first period of its existence, and all of the attendants at the Indianapolis meeting expressed the opinion that even better results will be forthcoming this year. Two years ago, even the most enthusiastic co-operator would have hesitated to predict the success that has attended this honest and sensible effort to get together on the part of the various printing craftsmen, whose interests, after all, are largely identical. The agreement naturally tends toward an industrialism founded on workable and mutually satisfactory stipulations.

SOME OF THE OFFICE WORK.

During the year just ended there was issued from the president's department 23,010 official, typewritten letters. The following eight-hour circulars were distributed throughout the jurisdiction: 10,000 No. 8, 10,000 No. 9, 35,000 No. 10, 20,000 No. 11, 3,000 No. 12, and 18,000 circulars under the following titles, "Golden Nuggets," "Boost," "Organize." Attached to the latter were blanks showing the plan used by Chicago Typographical Union to obtain the names and addresses of non-union printers in the jurisdiction of No. 16 and adjacent territory. The plan referred to has been adopted by many locals. Total number of circulars distributed, 96,000; making 23,375 packages. One thousand nine hundred and sixty-seven boxes of buttons, containing from 15 to 1,000 buttons, a total of 50,000, were mailed to secretaries and presidents of locals, eight-hour committeemen and chairmen of chapels. Ten thousand eight-hour buttons, of special design, were furnished our Canadian unions.

Every effort has been made to answer all correspondence promptly and furnish information requested. Here I desire to repeat the statement made in my report to the St. Louis convention, i. e., that in many cases members of local unions present to the International officers for advice local situations and questions that should first be passed upon by local unions. In all such instances correspondents are directed to bring these matters before their unions, and if then dissatisfied the privilege of appeal is suggested. The International president will not interfere with the rights and prerogatives of local unions. Correspondents must bear this in mind.

THE COPYRIGHT BILL.

Our amendment to the copyright law was acted on favorably by the popular branch of the Congress. In the effort to advance this measure, your president visited the national capital, and finally a favorable report was secured from the Senate committee. But when the amendment came up for concurrence it was killed, one objection sufficing for the deathblow. A conference of representatives of interests affected by the copyright statutes was held in New York in May, and its deliberations were participated in by delegates from the I. T. U. The conclusions arrived at are made a part of the report of our standing committee on copyright, and for this review the attention of the delegates is asked.

FINANCES.

In the following is set forth the revenue of the International Typographical Union and its disposition. The detailed statement is:

On June 1, 1904, there was in the treasury to the credit of the defense fund $2,501.38, the receipts to May 31, 1905, were $44,607.65, a total of $47,109.03. Expenditures amounted to $39,603.16, leaving a balance on May 31, of $7,505.87. Of the amount expended, $19,360.16 went directly to local unions, $16,995.41 was in payment for services and expenses of officers, organizers, $3,247.59 comprises committee and other expenses. Of the sum paid organizers $1,655.80 represents actual organizing work.

The burial fund shows receipts to May 31, 1905, of $42,060.85, and disbursements of $39,690, an excess of receipts over expenditures of $2,370.85. There was in this fund on May 31, 1905, $19,927.78.

The general fund receipts were $35,418.74, the expenditures were $37,868.88, leaving a balance in the fund of $1,891.04. The expenditures from this fund represent convention expenses and grants, officers' salaries, per capita tax and assessments to the American Federation of Labor, and the maintenance of headquarters.

There is in the Cummings Memorial fund, $11,312.85.

There has been transferred to Los Angeles Typographical Union No. 174, to aid in the contest against the Los Angeles Times, $33,650.11. Of this sum the union received $6,964.80 during the fiscal year ending May 31, 1905.

The balance on hand May 31, 1905, representing the defense, burial, general, JOURNAL and special defense funds was $69,052.09, as compared with $34,192.82 on May 31, 1904.

The condition of the Home fund will be found minutely set forth in the report of the board of trustees of that institution.

In 1900 the total receipts were $177,484.79, the total expenditures $185,033.57. In 1901 the total receipts were $138,631.67, and the expenditures $118,347.54. For the year ending May 31, 1902, the receipts were $151,141.23, and the expenditures $145,760.31. For 1903 the receipts were $185,183.08, and the expenditures $174,085.33. For 1904, receipts, $240,005; expenses, $252,817.38. For 1905, receipts, $244,689.24; expenses, $205,822.41.

REMOVAL OF HEADQUARTERS.

The latter part of October, 1904, the headquarters of the International Typographical Union were moved from the De Soto building to 640-650 Newton Claypool building. We now have commodious offices, with facilities adequate for the volume of business, in one of the finest office buildings in Indianapolis. In arrangement, furnishings and facilities the offices are in keeping with the dignity, importance and business standing and reputation of the International Typographical Union. Indianapolis is the headquarters of several international unions, all of them located in offices equipped with modern appliances for the transaction of business, but none more up-to-date than the offices wherein are located the headquarters of our organization.

NOTES.

The provision creating the special defense fund went into effect January 1, 1904, and the fund has remained intact during the period elapsing. It is the intention of the executive council to husband the fund thus accruing as far as possible, so that, on January 1, 1906, the International Typographical Union may have a special fund with which to finance, from an International standpoint, eight-hour requirements. It is felt by the council that there should be an International fund, separate and distinct from the local eight-hour funds that are now being accumulated, and the council is proceeding accordingly.

The portrait of William Aimison, a gift from Nashville Typographical Union No. 20 to the Union Printers' Home, at Colorado Springs, Colo., has been received at that institution. It is an oil painting, life size, framed in gold, and is said to be a splendid likeness of the late Trustee Aimison.

The International Photo-Engravers' Union accepted the terms and became a party to the joint agreement between the International Typographical Union, the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, and the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union. Subordinate bodies of the International Photo-Engravers' Union are entitled to representation in allied trades councils. Delegates applying from such locals should be accorded the same privileges as those extended to unions subordinate to the other international organizations which are a party to this agreement.

The Brooklyn Eagle conducted a non-union and open composing room for about fifteen years. On Tuesday, April 11, Commissioner Driscoll, of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and your president were in New York city on official business. On the previous Sunday Typographical Union No. 6 adopted a resolution directing its officers to enforce the union's scale in the Brooklyn Eagle office, and also provided for an assessment to put into effect the purpose of the resolution if it was not complied with by the Eagle. Your president interested Commissioner Driscoll in the matter, and the commissioner arranged for an interview between the Brooklyn Eagle management, which he attended, the International president and President McCormick and Organizers Jackson and Cunnion, of Typographical Union No. 6. At this interview the proposition for an agreement between No. 6 and the Eagle was thoroughly discussed, and resulted in a tentative agreement to be submitted to a meeting of No. 6, which was held on Sunday, April 16, at which time the agreement was accepted by a vote of 760 to 10.

In accordance with the instructions of the St. Louis convention, effort was made to secure the passage of a measure by the Wisconsin legislature, establishing a state printing plant. The measure was, however, declared to be in conflict with the state constitution. The vice-president, who had charge of the work, will cover the case fully in his report.

A leading economist says: "The man who stays away from the meetings of his union is responsible for everything that is done wrong, and is nothing where he should be something."

The letter sheets of the Granite Cutters' National Union bear the line: "Eight hours constitute a working day in our trade." Unity, organization and intelligent aggressiveness will bring us the right to make the same assertion after January 1, 1906. It is also both instructive and interesting to note that the union granite cutters, under the eight-hour system, are among the highest paid mechanics in the United States and Canada. Good wages go hand in hand with an eight-hour day.

TO THE COLORS.

This is the eight-hour convention. Let eight hours be its rallying cry.

JAMES M. LYNCH,
President.

(Memphis Union No. 11.)

To Officers and Members St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8:

GENTLEMEN—It is beyond the comprehension of the members of Memphis No. 11 that you should take such action as to sign up a contract for nine hours in violation of the edict of the International Typographical Union and the referendum. This union has two contracts to make (book and job and morning newspaper) within next thirty days, and your unseemly action will have a most deterring effect on any success we hope to achieve.

The Memphis Typothetæ had immediate notice of your action.

Let us urge you to correct the mistake we are informed that you made. Think what is at stake, and what you owe to your thousands of brother members. Fraternally,

DEAR SIR—No. 444 sent communication to St. Louis protesting against No. 8's action in signing a nine-hour agreement in face of the resolution adopted at the St. Louis convention, and while I do not remember the communication verbatim, I do remember that I said No. 444 wished to enter its solemn protest against the action of No. 8, and asked them if they did not think it would make it appear bad for the rest of us to have it thrown up to us that St. Louis, the city where the eight-hour resolution was adopted, was the first to sign up a nine-hour contract in violation of that resolution. I said some more things, but nothing disrespectful, making the letter as strong as possible in emphasizing our protest over their action. Very respectfully,

DEAR MR. LYNCH—At a special meeting held this day by No. 17, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, This union has been officially notified that the executive council of the International Typographical Union has suspended St. Louis Typographical Union until such time as said union complies with law and repudiates its illegal nine-hour contract; therefore,

"Resolved, By New Orleans Typographical Union No. 17, that, while deeply deploring the necessity for such a drastic measure, we heartily endorse the action of the executive council, and,

"Resolved, That No. 8 is hereby earnestly urged, in the interest of the whole International Typographical Union jurisdiction, to comply with the demands of the parent body and join forces with the united country in their effort to secure the eight-hour workday;

"Resolved, That New Orleans Typographical Union No. 17 reaffirms its decision on the eight-hour question;

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the executive council and St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8."

Copies of these resolutions will be printed and mailed to every union under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union at the earliest practical moment.

With kind regards, and an earnest prayer for the success of the eight-hour day in the face of such an unlooked and uncalled for action, I am,

DEAR SIR—This union learns with regret of the action taken by St. Louis Union in regard to the eight-hour law. We feel that this action not only weakens your own union, but is a blow to every union in the jurisdiction. The employers in this city are elated at your action, believing that it is the entering wedge in the disruption of our International body. The members of our union feel greatly disappointed and grieved at the action of St. Louis, and sincerely hope that you will reconsider it at once, that we may present a united front in our demand for the eight-hour day. J. H. WALKER, Secretary No. 18.

(Edwardsville Union No. 354.)

J. J. Early, Esq., Secretary International Typographical Union No. 8, St. Louis, Mo.:

DEAR SIR—Edwardsville Typographical Union No. 354 learns with regret of the action recently taken by No. 8 in contracting with the typothetæ for a nine-hour day for a period of three years. The action is surprising, both as to time and place. After St. Louis has had the last International convention, at which the move for eight hours was discussed at length, it is surprising that that local should be one of the first, and undoubtedly the foremost, to swing away from the wishes of the entire organization, as expressed by the referendum vote.

It is furthermore untimely, as being on the eve of the date set long ago for the inauguration of the eight-hour day. As to the inadvisability of such a move there can be no question. Actions of the kind threaten the stability of the cause of organized labor, which is powerful only in the unity of many.

While No. 8 is under the cloud which this action has thrown upon it, No. 354 will be compelled to fail to recognize any and all cards issued by No. 8 which may come within our jurisdiction. These views were set forth in a resolution adopted by unanimous vote at a regular meeting of No. 354. Trusting that a reconsideration of the matter will bring about a better result, we are,

Respectfully yours,

JAMES J. BURNS, President.
C. H. SPILMAN, Secretary.

(Topeka Union No. 121.)

J. J. Early, St. Louis:

Acknowledging receipt of a telegram signed by President Lynch, Secretary Bramwood, and Vice-President Miller, announcing the suspension of the charter of Typographical Union No. 8, at St. Louis, because of its apparently deliberate repudiation of the edicts and laws of the International Union, expressed unanimously in the acts of the fiftieth convention to which said No. 8 was a voluntary party, the executive committee of Typographical Union No. 121, at Topeka, Kan., after careful consideration, beg leave to endorse the action of the International Typographical Union executive council.

We also beg leave to say further, that, on the evidence so far presented, we are compelled to view the act of Typographical Union No. 8 as an act of repudiation and a sacrifice of principle for additional pay, deserving punishment and the condemnation of all loyal unions.

By order of the executive committee,

CHARLES E. SUTHERLAND, President.
R. I. PALMER, Corresponding Secretary.

(Multnomah Union No. 58.)

PORTLAND, ORE., June 15, 1905.

To the Officers and Members of St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8:

GENTLEMEN—This union is in receipt of a telegram from President Lynch to the effect that St. Louis Union No. 8 has signed a nine-hour contract with the employers of your city, extending over a period of three years. This we consider not only bad faith with the International and all local unions, but to us, out here on the Pacific, it creates the impression that there has been developed a yellow streak in the makeup of the once glorious old No. 8.

While we do not know the condition of the craft in St. Louis, we can hardly conceive of any conditions that would impel a union to take such action as has been credited to your body, in the face of the stand taken by the International on the eight-hour-day matter. No advance in scale can possibly justify your organization in dealing this blow to the sister unions of the country.

The eight-hour law has been submitted to the referendum and carried overwhelmingly. All unions under the jurisdiction of the International Union understood that no contracts were to be made with employers extending beyond January 1, 1906, in excess of an eight-hour basis. Then what motive could induce No. 8 to take advantage of the intervening time to break faith with the International and sister unions in this compact is beyond our understanding.

To appreciate the disadvantages which we will have to contend against in our coming struggle with the typothetæ, you have only to consider the fact that, while the typothetæ is united in its opposition to the eight-hour day, the unions of the country will be weakened by your disaffection, should you pursue the course you have chosen. What force could win under such conditions? United, victory will be easy; divided, it will require months and possibly years to obtain the desired result.

"Eight-Hour Day" has been the slogan of all labor organizations for years; now, when we are on the eve of realizing our dream, is it right—is it just—for your powerful organization, by the action just taken, to dash the fondest hopes of unionism to the ground? Brethren, we implore you to consider deeply on the result which your action will lead to. Is not the welfare of your brother union men of some weight with you? This is the first time on record that No. 8 has refused to accept the challenge of the employers, and we feel sure you will reconsider your action and join us in this grand cause.

Can it be that, after all these years, old No. 8, the bulwark of unionism in the Middle West, has developed a streak of cowardice before the battle is on, or can it be that our friend, the typothetæ, has succeeded in influencing her members in order to secure this contract, and thus break the solid front which they anticipate on the first of the year?

We hope that this is not the case, and that when No. 8 soberly considers the step she has taken she will repudiate a contract born in infamy, and rally to the old banner, proud in her strength to do great things for the cause which is uppermost in the hearts of all true union men.

Let us plead with you to reconsider your action. Be men—be union men, and share with us the glorious victory which is sure to crown our efforts on the 1st day of January, 1906, with an eight-hour day for all union printers under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union. Trusting you will give this appeal favorable consideration, we remain,

Fraternally yours,

MULTNOMAH TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION No. 58.
By Executive Committee.

(Resolutions Adopted by Milwaukee Union No. 23.)

Whereas, It has come to the notice of this union that St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8 signed a contract for a nine-hour day in the face of the action of the International Typographical Union at its last convention, and adopted later by referendum vote; and

Whereas, Milwaukee Typographical Union No. 23 regards this action as unbecoming a local union affiliated with the International Typographical Union, illegal (section 131, p. 71, General Laws) and detrimental to the interests of sister unions; therefore, be it

Resolved, That Milwaukee Typographical Union most heartily endorses the action of the executive council of the International Typographical Union in declaring the nine-hour agreement between the St. Louis Typothetæ and St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8 null and void; and we further recommend that the treasonable and illegal action of the St. Louis Union be made the subject of thorough investigation by the Toronto convention of the International Typographical Union.

Resolved, further, That Milwaukee Typographical Union No. 23 trusts that St. Louis Union No. 8 will reconsider the action so far taken and stand forth, as in the past, fighting in the ranks of the eight-hour movement.

Resolved, further, That the secretary have these resolutions published in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

(Copy of Resolutions Adopted by Columbia Typographical Union, Sunday, June 18, 1905.)

Whereas, St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8 has concluded a contract with book and job employers in contravention of the eight-hour provisions of the International Typographical Union, thereby compelling the executive council to suspend said union from the fellowship and protection of the International body; therefore,

Resolved, By Columbia Typographical Union No. 101, that the action of the St. Louis Union is regarded as destructive of that discipline necessary to our well-being; inimical to that perfect unity, mutual confidence, and complete concord so long the rule and practice of the craft, and tending to jeopardize the opportunity of St. Louis Union to share in the eight-hour day so soon to be secured to every member on the continent;

Resolved, That we respectfully, yet firmly, protest to St. Louis Union against this action, and urge a speedy revocation of the contract, to the end that there may be no rift in the ranks of the International Typographical Union in our advance to a long-deferred, though justly earned, condition of greater prosperity and position of wider opportunity;

Resolved, That we endorse the action of the executive council and pledge our earnest support of all efforts to carry out the eight-hour program submitted by the 1904 convention and adopted by the referendum.

EXHIBIT C.

AGREEMENT

Between the International Typographical Union, the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union, and the International Photo-Engravers' Union.

Adopted January 29, 1904.
Amended January 14, 1905.

The duly authorized representatives of the International Typographical Union, the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union, and the International Photo-Engravers' Union, for the purpose of more clearly defining their obligations to each other, the powers of local allied printing trades councils, and for the further purpose of avoiding disputes and securing the harmonious co-operation of all local unions in joint defensive action and label agitation, do hereby agree:

JOINT CONFERENCE BOARD.

1. For the purpose of this agreement, a joint conference board shall be created, as follows: Four representatives from the International Typographical Union, one representative from the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, one representative from the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, one representative from the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union, and one representative from the International Photo-Engravers' Union.

2. The joint conference board may adopt such rules of procedure in the hearing of appeals and the conduct of other business that may properly come before it, as do not conflict with this agreement or the laws of any of the organizations parties hereto.

3. The officers of the joint conference board shall be a president, a vice-president, a secretary-treasurer, and such other officers as the board may determine, but no two executive officers shall be chosen from one organization.

4. The annual meeting of the joint conference board shall be held on the first Monday in December of each year, at the place decided upon by a majority vote of the board. At this meeting officers shall be nominated, elected and installed for the ensuing year. Any vacancies occurring during the intervals between such meetings shall be filled by majority vote of the joint conference board.

5. On demand of a majority of the organizations that constitute this joint conference board, the president shall call a meeting at a convenient time and place.

6. In the event of any member of the joint conference board being unable to attend a meeting, such member shall be privileged to delegate his power and authority to a proxy, who, upon the filing of properly attested credentials to the joint conference board, shall be accorded all rights and privileges due the organization he represents, under the terms of the joint agreement.

7. In voting on matters coming before the joint conference board, the representatives of the various international unions shall vote for and bind their unions, and such vote shall be so understood and accepted by the joint board and shall not be reconsidered without the unanimous consent of the membership of the board.

8. The representatives of all organizations named in this agreement must file an opinion in the case with the secretary-treasurer of the joint conference board within thirty days after his submission of the documents in each appeal case, and must register their votes on the appeal within thirty days after said opinions have been compiled by the secretary-treasurer and submitted to the board for final action. The opinion and vote in each case shall be filed separately.

9. When a tie vote results on any question submitted to the joint conference board under the terms of this agreement, the president may call a meeting of the board for further consideration of the matter. If the case can not be satisfactorily adjusted at such meeting a disinterested party shall be unanimously selected to act as arbitrator, and his decision shall be final.

10. In appeals to the joint conference board from the decision or action of any local allied council, as permitted by this agreement, the representatives of the protesting local union must file notice of intention to appeal within ten days with the officers of the local allied council. Appellant must prepare and forward to the secretary-treasurer of the joint conference board, within thirty days after action complained of is taken, ten typewritten copies of the appeal papers, serving one copy on the president of the interested allied council. The allied council shall have an additional thirty days in which to file ten typewritten copies of its answer. The secretary-treasurer of the joint conference board shall, when the papers are complete in each case, forward one copy of the papers to each member of the joint conference board, and further procedure shall be in accordance with the provisions of sections 8 and 9. When a decision is reached the secretary-treasurer shall furnish the appellant and appellee with a copy thereof. Members of the joint board shall also be notified by the secretary-treasurer of the result of the vote on each appeal.

11. Each organization shall pay the incidental expenses of the joint conference board in proportion to its representation.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES COUNCILS.

12. In localities where there are unions chartered by two or more of the organizations parties to this agreement, a local allied printing trades council shall be formed. Should any such chartered union decline to form an allied printing trades council, the aggrieved union or unions shall be allowed an appeal on this question to the joint conference board.

13. Allied printing trades councils shall be composed of three delegates from each local union holding a charter from one of the parties to this agreement. No local union, regardless of the jurisdiction claimed, shall have both voice and vote in more than one allied council. Unions having jurisdiction over more than one city or town in which allied trades councils exist shall have voice and vote in one allied council only, but may be represented, and shall have a voice, in the rest.

14. Each delegate present at any meeting of the allied printing trades council shall be entitled to one vote; provided that a roll call may be demanded by the representatives of any union on a question of the raising of revenue or the election of officers, and on such roll call each union shall be entitled to additional votes, as follows: For fifty (50) members of the local union represented, one vote; for each additional fifty (50) members or major fraction thereof, up to three hundred (300) members, one vote; for the next two hundred (200) members or major fraction thereof, one vote; for each additional five hundred (500) members or major fraction thereof, one vote; the membership to be computed in accordance with the last per capita tax paid by each local union.

15. Allied printing trades councils may elect such officers and adopt such provisions and rules for their own government as are not in conflict with this agreement, or the laws of the organizations parties hereto, but no more than one officer may be chosen from the representatives of one local union, except by unanimous consent.

16. The powers of allied printing trades councils shall not exceed those specified in this agreement, and such councils shall not take hostile action of any character, except by unanimous consent of the unions represented therein.

17. Any local union may request the assistance of the allied printing trades council in the adjustment of any difficulty that may arise. Upon failure of the council to effect a settlement, and should a joint or sympathetic strike be desired, the question shall be referred to the local unions for action, in accordance with the laws of their respective international unions.

18. Should an allied printing trades council refuse to abide by the decision of the joint conference board, it shall be dissolved, and the unions affiliated therewith instructed by their International officers to form a new council, on the basis of the decision of the joint conference board.

ALLIED PRINTING TRADES COUNCIL UNION LABEL.

19. The International Typographical Union shall procure and hold all allied printing trades council union labels, and shall loan same to local allied printing trades councils as its agents, in accordance with the terms of this agreement, upon receipt of a sum of money from the local council not exceeding 10 per cent above the cost of production and distribution of said labels.

20. No allied printing trades council shall issue any label not procured from the International Typographical Union, nor any label differing in design from the label now known and registered as the allied printing trades council union label, nor duplicate nor allow the duplication of said label, except in the case of stereotyped or electrotyped forms, in which case the label appearing in the plate or plates shall be destroyed immediately on completion of the work on which it is used.

21. No other body than the local allied printing trades council shall be allowed to grant the use of the allied printing trades council union label in any jurisdiction.

22. All labels must be procured by local councils from the secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union. Any infraction of this rule shall be deemed sufficient cause for the dissolution of the local council so offending.

23. Labels shall be loaned only with the unanimous consent of unions represented in the allied printing trades council. Unions objecting to the issuance of the label in any instance must produce a valid reason for such objection, the council to be the judge of the validity of such reason, subject to appeal to the joint conference board; provided, an active member in good standing of any branch represented in an allied printing trades council, who runs an office of not more than two platen presses, and in the operation of such office complies with the laws of his union, shall be permitted to use the label, provided the entire work of the office be done by the proprietor thereof, and that when employment is given to any additional help members of affiliated unions must be employed. Violation of the foregoing shall be deemed sufficient reason for the immediate surrender of the label. The above provisos shall not apply in cities of 500,000 population or over.

24. In regard to label issuance, should any union chartered by a party to this agreement feel that an injustice had been done it, or should any local allied printing trades council feel that the action of any such union is detrimental to the best interests of the council, an appeal may be taken to the joint conference board, under such provisions as may be adopted by said board.

25. Wherever an allied printing trades council is in existence, the local unions affiliated therewith shall withdraw the label of their respective unions, unless otherwise decided by the joint conference board.

MISCELLANEOUS.

26. When a sympathetic strike shall have been inaugurated by the parties to this agreement, the initiating union shall pay those involved, as follows: The sum of seven ($7) dollars per week to each married man involved, and five ($5) dollars per week to each single man or woman involved, for the period of eight weeks, unless settlement is sooner effected.

27. When a joint demand is made, involving either a question of wages or hours, all conferences and business with the proprietors relative thereto shall be conducted by joint committees of parties to this agreement, and in case a strike or lockout shall result, each union shall provide strike benefits for its own members, and shall have no financial recourse on any of the allied unions.

28. This agreement may be altered or amended on motion of any one organization party to this agreement, and if said motion receives the unanimous consent of the other parties hereto.

UNANIMOUS DECISIONS OF THE JOINT CONFERENCE BOARD.

DECISION No. 1.

The allied trades label shall not be primarily used for organization purposes nor for the enforcement of an initial wage scale.

DECISION No. 2.

No local union, regardless of the jurisdiction claimed, shall have both voice and vote in more than one allied trades council. Unions having jurisdiction over more than one city or town in which allied councils exist shall have voice and vote in one allied council only, but may be represented, and shall have a voice only, in the rest.

DECISION No. 3.

An allied printing trades council must be formed, in accordance with the joint agreement, and the allied label issued, where it can be conclusively shown that all interested unions have an established wage scale and control 70 per cent of the employes at their branch of the trade.

DECISION No. 4.

The provisions of a contract entered into prior to the effective date of the joint agreement must be observed until the expiration of the contract, unless said contract is mutually abrogated at an earlier date.

DECISION No. 5.

In offices having more than two platen presses, members of the typographical union shall not do press work; but said offices shall not be compelled to employ a pressman except when there is press work to do.

DECISION No. 6.

Where the typographical union has verbal or written contracts with employers guaranteeing the use of the typographical label for a stipulated time, said contracts antedating the formation of the allied trades council, the best interests of all concerned will be conserved by allowing the use of the allied label to such offices until the expiration of the contracts, and that then the provisions of the joint agreement shall apply.

DECISION No. 7.

The allied printing trades label shall not be placed on work sub-contracted by label offices from non-label offices.

REPORTS OF VICE-PRESIDENTS.

FIRST VICE-PRESIDENT.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—Following is the report of my work as first vice-president from November 1, 1904, to the close of the fiscal year, May 31, 1905.

Went to Milwaukee the first part of November, the open office agitation still making itself felt in that city. One office in particular had become open by reason of one of the employes being rejected by No. 23. He had afterward taken an appeal to the International president, which appeal had been sustained, and the union had then reversed its former action and voted to admit him to membership. After this action was taken the man mentioned had refused to accept membership and continued to work in the same office. I was in favor of closing this office at the time, but the executive board of No. 23 believed that such action would be inadvisable, and all efforts were concentrated on the work of pushing the label, and this work was becoming very effective.

While in Milwaukee this trip I received from Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood the information that the executive council had taken up the instructions of the St. Louis convention regarding the making of efforts to secure the passage of a bill providing for the establishment of a state printing plant in Wisconsin, that it had been decided to have the bill drawn by a Wisconsin attorney, and the whole matter had been placed in my hands with power to act. As soon as possible thereafter I went to Madison, the state capital, and made arrangements to have the bill drawn.

About this time a strike occurred in the office of the Moore Printing Company, of Winnipeg, Man., and our members believed that some of the men who went to that city to work during the strike had been induced to do so by Mr. Moore in violation of the alien labor laws of Canada, an advertisement for men having been published in a number of papers in the states. As a result an action was brought against Mr. Moore in the courts and I was sent for to give evidence as to the publishing of the advertisement in one of the Minneapolis papers. The trial of the case consumed considerable time, and at its conclusion the judge dismissed the defendant because the prosecution had failed to prove that the particular men mentioned in the charge had been contracted for outside of Canada in violation of the laws. Another action was brought later against the same proprietor, but in this also the prosecution failed to convict. The officers of Winnipeg Union desired at this time to have the Winnipeg Typothetæ held responsible for the strike in the Moore office, but as the typothetæ had taken action, disclaiming any such responsibility and refusing to assist Moore in any way, it was not possible to establish any such claim, and especially so because the trouble had not been called to the attention of the typothetæ until after the strike was on.

Returning to Minneapolis I assisted the officers of No. 42 in a little difficulty with an open office in that city and also, on request of the president of No. 30, went to St. Paul to consult with the executive board on the newspaper scale of prices then being negotiated.

I then returned to Madison and Milwaukee for the purpose of making arrangements to push the state printing plant bill before the coming legislature. In looking up the laws the attorney who drew the bill discovered a constitutional provision that might make the bill inoperative should it be passed, and consequently he had also drafted a constitutional amendment for presentation in the event of failure on the bill. I consulted several attorneys, all of whom were of the opinion that if the bill could be passed there was an even chance of the courts deciding it was constitutional in spite of the existing constitutional provision, but that this provision would probably be used in the legislature to defeat the bill. However, it was decided to go on and make efforts to have the bill passed, and I had it printed and sent a copy to each member-elect of the assembly and house, together with a letter asking that it be supported. An effort was made to see the governor of the state and enlist his support for the bill, but he was not at home.

I then received instructions to go to Kansas City to represent President Lynch on the national arbitration board in an arbitration with the Journal of that city. This arbitration consumed two weeks' time, over a week being spent in selecting the third member of the board.

Prom Kansas City I went to Zanesville, Ohio, to assist the officers of No. 199 in scale negotiations. These negotiations did not prove successful, and it was agreed the differences should be submitted to arbitration, and application was made to the national arbitration board to take the matter up. The scale committee of No. 199 also decided to ask President Lynch to send some one to handle the case before the board.

I then went to Detroit, Mich., as the representative of President Lynch on the national arbitration board. This case involved only the construction of certain clauses of an existing contract referring to "unskilled labor" in the newspaper composing rooms and was decided in favor of the union without the selection of the third man on the board. From Detroit I returned to headquarters and then went to St. Paul and Minneapolis.

At St. Paul both the executive board of No. 30 and the newspaper publishers had become convinced it would be necessary to submit the differences on scale to arbitration. Four papers were involved in the controversy but it was ascertained that only two of them had signed the national arbitration agreement, and in conference the publishers were informed that only these two would be entitled to arbitration under the agreement. It was then decided that one more effort should be made to arrive at an agreement with the executive board of No. 30 before applying to the arbitration board. This effort proved successful and the scale was signed up soon after.

I then returned to Milwaukee and Madison, Wis., and spent a few days attending to matters in connection with the state printing plant bill, when I proceeded to headquarters en route to Zanesville, Ohio, to represent President Lynch on the national arbitration board. While in Indianapolis it was decided that if the officers of Zanesville Union still desired an outsider to present their case to the board I should do so and send for Organizer Colbert to act as a member of the board. At the request of No. 199 this course was pursued and Mr. Colbert was sent for. Considerable difficulty was here experienced in selecting the third member of the board and after a man was selected who was satisfactory to both parties it was found he was absent from the city and would not return for nearly a week. As the committee believed it would be almost impossible to agree on another it was decided to ask that the case be postponed until the return of the man already selected. This was agreed to and the case taken up at a later date.

On instructions from President Lynch I went from Zanesville to Mansfield, Ohio. In this city I found our organization in a very weak condition and formulated plans for the strengthening of the organization which should put it in good shape if carried out.

I then returned to headquarters and was from there sent to Kansas City because of some difficulty over the machine scale in the auxiliary job offices. Because of failure to reach an agreement a strike was ordered in one office and immediately following this action four other offices locked their men out. The strike and lockout lasted for more than one week, when an arbitration was agreed to by three of the offices on terms proposed by the union, and the men returned to work at the scale that had been asked for by the union, this scale to continue in effect until the question was disposed of by the arbitration board provided for. Up to the present time I have no information that the arbitration board has ever been selected.

From Kansas City I went to Chicago, proceeding from the latter city to Zanesville, Ohio, where I represented the local union in its case before the national arbitration board. Our union in Zanesville has been working on an eight-hour basis for some time past.

I then again went to Milwaukee and Madison in the interest of the state printing plant bill in Wisconsin. On this trip it was ascertained that the constitutional provision was being used against the bill with considerable effect. However, with the assistance of Frank E. Newmann, of Milwaukee, considerable work was done to offset this argument and a hearing secured before the printing committee, to which the bill had been referred. At this hearing the committee refused to take action and postponed further consideration of the bill until April 6.

I was then instructed to go to Winnipeg, Man., because of a strike then on for the enforcement of a new job scale of prices. Arriving in Winnipeg several conferences were held, after which it was decided the men should return to work pending further negotiations which were to be taken up at once. In the meantime the Winnipeg Typothetæ had sent for Secretary MacIntyre, of the United Typothetæ of America. After his arrival the question of the eight-hour day came up, and on this issue he and I, of course, could not agree. After several days spent in fruitless conferences both the proprietors and the committee of No. 191 came to the conclusion that with their better understanding they might be able to arrive at an agreement if Mr. MacIntyre and myself were not present. In consequence we both left the city with the understanding that we were to return in the event of the failure of the local people to reach a conclusion. Have not heard as to the results.

I then returned to Madison and once more appeared before the printing committee of the Wisconsin legislature. Before this meeting of the committee some of the members had consulted the attorney-general and been informed that if passed the state printing plant bill would be unconstitutional, and this was accepted as sufficient excuse for an unfavorable report, and assured the defeat of the bill.

From Madison I went to headquarters and then to Canton, Ill., where the union was having some trouble with the proprietor of one office. This difficulty was satisfactorily adjusted, after which I went to Fort Madison, Iowa, to assist the union in scale negotiations. A contract was entered into for one year, the eight-hour day going into effect on January 1, next.

From Fort Madison I went to Bloomington, Ill., where the union was having some difficulty in settling a scale. The eight-hour day had been asked for, but it was finally decided to drop this for the present, and contracts were made running to January 1, next. I then returned to headquarters.

On May 3 I went from headquarters to Huntington, W. Va., to assist in negotiating a scale of prices. Here, also, the eight-hour day was asked for but the request finally withdrawn and contracts signed to January 1, 1906, other changes in the scale being granted.

I also visited Parkersburg and Hinton, W. Va., and put on foot plans for the strengthening of our organizations in those cities.

After this I went to Marion, Ohio, on a request made to President Lynch by the president of the union in that city. A new scale had been asked for and refused and the union was not in a position to enforce its demands. Plans were outlined looking to the upbuilding of the organization, and this union should be much stronger in the near future.

On the way from Marion to Indianapolis I stopped in Muncie, Ind. The union in this city is in first-class shape, with arrangements for the eight-hour day already consummated.

Remained at headquarters for a period of two weeks assisting on eight-hour work, leaving on May 28 for Atlanta, Ga., where I am at present making my headquarters while endeavoring to do organization and eight-hour work throughout the southeastern states.

In every section of the country I have visited I find our members very enthusiastic over the eight-hour day, and all other questions are being subordinated in efforts to secure agreements for its enforcement on or before January 1, 1906.

The total expense of my past year's work has been $3,019.94, disbursed as follows:

Railroad fares and sleeping cars	$670 39
Hotels and dining cars	946 25
Salary for time lost	1,309 50
Telegrams, telephone charges, typewriting, bus, baggage transfers, postage, etc.	71 90
Typewriting and addressing letters to members of legislature in Wisconsin, sending copies of state printing plant bill	11 90
Typewriting evidence in Winnipeg alien labor case	10 00
Total	$3,019 94

I again desire to return thanks to officers and members of unions visited for courteous treatment received and assistance given in all cases; also to the executive council and officers of the International Typographical Union for assistance at all times and the prompt manner in which all questions referred to them have been handled.

Hoping for a successful convention and continued success for the International Typographical Union, and also a successful inauguration of the eight-hour day, I remain fraternally yours,

J. W. Hays.

SECOND VICE-PRESIDENT.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

Ladies and Gentlemen—Nothing of any importance having occurred during the last year, I can be very brief in my report for the Typographia. As stated in former reports, the Typographia controls every German printing office of any consequence in this country, with the single exception of the Philadelphia Demokrat. Therefore, we can not make much gain, but must be satisfied in holding our own. In this we have been successful during the year. We have increased the amount in our general treasury from $22,790 to $25,095, or a little over $25 per capita. The scales of several typographias have been renewed during the past year without any trouble, and our youngest local, No. 25, at Wheeling, W. Va., has achieved the eight-hour workday. The boycott against the Philadelphia Demokrat is still in force and lively agitation is kept up by the Typographia, with good effect, so that, undoubtedly, before long, this only non-union German paper will again come under our jurisdiction.

It is now more than ten years, since we were amalgamated with the International Typographical Union, and during all this time our relations have been the very best and everything has worked in perfect harmony. But last year's convention at St. Louis—evidently by mistake—adopted a change in the law covering the scale for German work, which has proved a hardship on some of our members, and apparently is unjust to the Typographia. The old law, governing German work, reads: "In cities, where German Unions exist, no member of the International Typographical Union shall work at German work longer hours nor for less wages than the scale of the local Typographia demands." To this law the executive council at the St. Louis convention offered the following addition: "Nor shall members of the Typographia work at English work at a less rate than the scale of the local typographical union."

This was perfectly satisfactory to our membership inasmuch as it protected both, the English and the German scale. But last year's laws committee, for reasons unknown to me, and without consulting any of the German delegates or officers, recommended the following substitute for the proposition of the executive council. "Work in foreign languages shall be at the scale rates of the particular union having jurisdiction; provided that in no case shall English composition be at a lesser rate than that of the typographical union." This recommendation of the law committee was adopted without any discussion, and took the German delegates by surprise, as they never expected that the time would come when, under the new law, in cities with both German and English typographical unions, the members of the latter would have to work on German composition in English offices for a much lower scale than that of the local Typographia. But, as the law stands now, this is permitted, as it provides only that English composition shall not be at a lesser rate than the scale of the typographical union, and gives no protection to German composition and the scale of the Typographia.

And this has created a very unfortunate situation in Greater New York. The scale of Typographical Union No. 6, of New York, for many years contained the provision that all German work done in shops under the jurisdiction of No. 6 shall be paid according to the scale of the local German union. But last fall, when No. 6 revised its scale, this section was left out, and no provision was made for German work, although all other foreign languages are mentioned in the scale with much higher figures as for English work. By this omission in the scale of No. 6 German work in English offices is now paid at the English scale and is therefore much lower than if charged according to the German scale. Not only the members, who must work under such conditions, but also the proprietors of German offices at New York are complaining about this unjust competition, and clamoring for a change in this law.

A proposition remitting this evidently one-sided legislation will be offered to your law committee by Typographia No. 7, of New York, or your humble servant, and I trust the same will be adopted.

Wishing you the best success in your deliberations, I remain Fraternally yours,

HUGO MILLER.

THIRD VICE-PRESIDENT.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—In presenting my annual report it is a pleasure for me to announce that the mailer unions have made wonderful improvement during the past year. In that length of time we have organized unions in Pittsburg, Pa., Albany, N. Y., Butte, Mont., Portland, Ore., and Winnipeg, Man., and have two other unions in view who will be fully organized in the near future. I have been successful in obtaining a renewal of the contract of the Indianapolis Mailers' Union with the publishers of their city, which gives them a very nice increase of $2.50 to $3.00 per week, and eight hours work (they formerly worked nine). In Louisville I was successful in obtaining a three-year agreement for Union No. 16 with the publishers of that city, with a good increase of salary and eight hours (they had been working ten). In Cincinnati, after three years' hard work, we have succeeded in getting a satisfactory agreement with the publishers.

In Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Toronto, New York, Denver and San Francisco we have had a steady increase in membership, and it is a pleasure to state that there are very few non-union men in the above cities, owing to the untiring efforts of the officers of our unions. I would recommend that each delegate to the convention and the members of the union in general would assist the officers and organizers of the Mailers' Trades District to put forth their best efforts to awaken the non-union mailers to a realization of the importance of unionism, and the onward march to shorter hours and higher pay will band together in one solid brotherhood mailers everywhere, thereby adding greatly to the strength and prestige of the International Typographical Union.

In conclusion, I wish to return thanks to the several organizers who have aided us during the past year. Thanks to President Lynch for the interest he has taken in my craft and the able advice he has furnished me in a time of need. Thanks are also tendered to Secretary Bramwood for his uniform courtesy and the great interest he has shown in the craft of which I am the humble representative. Fraternally yours,

St. Louis, Mo. JAMES MULCAHY.

FOURTH VICE-PRESIDENT.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—The year just closed has passed into history without materially affecting the branch of the trade I have the honor to represent.

The present contest for securing the eight-hour day for the men in the print shops is justly absorbing the interest of all, and the writers, though few in number, will be found in the front ranks of the battle should the International Typographical Union and the United Typothetæ of America cross swords on the 1st day of January, 1906.

RECOMMENDATION.

In view of the tendency of the direct wage-paying class to resort to wholesale lockouts of union men and women and the organization and temporary hiring of strike-breakers, at great expense, while subduing the progressive elements of the trade by the withholding of employment except on "rat" conditions, makes it necessary, in my opinion, to seek other means than the strike to further the interest of the members of the International Typographical Union.

BUILD UP PRINTING INDUSTRY.

I would therefore recommend a closer alliance with all organizations of the printing trade in order that there should be a clear and distinct understanding of the fact that all branches of the craft have a common, mutual interest in building up the printing industry and bringing to it collectively the means from which the various branches must draw their share of compensation.

MINIMIZE LOAFING.

To assist in this work strike and lockout loafing should be minimized by the substitution of temporary co-operation when our brain power fails to reach an understanding on disputed questions between printer employe and employer.

The discommoding of the general public by industrial factions and the great financial loss to all should give way to constructive warfare rather than destructive. Take care of the customers of our trade, should be the motto, instead of the present plan of making the whole community suffer for the possible benefit of the few.

PRINT FOR PATRONS.

It is therefore recommended that the International Typographical Union formulate a general system of conducting business during strikes and lockouts in any branch of the trade, and acquire for that purpose a fund for the securing of machinery, material and stock by renting or owning plants for temporary use to assist in supplying the needs of the patrons of printing and confining the fight to the competitors for the trade.

Thus production would go on, wealth increase and no man's business be affected but those directly engaged in the wage and profit controversy.

OPERATE AND OWN PLANTS.

These printing plants could be owned jointly by the various organizations of the industry under an agreement such as now exists between the internationals in other trade matters.

The use of these tools of production could be an auxiliary to help the friendly employer who stays with us during the contests to take care of increased business while the fight is on, and packed up at the close for new fields when needed and leave the business in the old shop when the proprietor learns to be good.

LESS THAN LOSS IN WAGES.

The costs of plants and their transportation and installing I believe would be much less expensive than the loss of wages of the men and the strike benefits paid. There would be a good chance of the men involved having employment; winning a victory; accommodating the people; making friends and demonstrating that the printers know a better way than slaughtering the innocents in their efforts for improved conditions.

With best wishes for the delegates' personal comfort and wise convention actions, I remain

Fraternally yours,

Columbus, Ohio. E. J. BRACKEN.

FIFTH VICE-PRESIDENT.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—Nothing of importance has transpired among the typefounders during the past year, the condition of our trade having been quite dull, some of the employing typefounders admitting that they have not yet recovered from the strike.

It may interest members of the International Typographical Union to know that the cost of manufacturing type has been reduced somewhat, while the price of type has been increased, or the weight of fonts has been reduced, thus increasing the price per pound and giving the employing typefounders a greater profit than ever, and the printer pays the bill.

After the typefounders' strike ended, over a year ago, some of our members were blacklisted for taking too active a part in the strike. Most of these, including the writer, have found employment in other lines and are doing better than they formerly did while employed in typefoundries.

In Chicago most of those members who remained loyal to the union have paid a weekly assessment for the benefit of those who were out of work; in this way an out-of-work benefit has been paid for the past sixteen months, which has given those who were in need a sum amounting to from $6 to $8 dollars per week.

Regarding conditions of the typefounders' unions will say that they are not as bright as desired, yet we are not altogether discouraged, and I expect that the next report made will be more satisfactory to the membership than the present one.

Respectfully submitted,

P. G. NUERNBERGER.

OUR MEMBERSHIP.

The continued success of the International Typographical Union, and its steady increase in membership, despite the opposition of various employers' associations, citizens' alliances, etc., must be encouraging and gratifying to every member of the organization. Though our progress has not been startling or sensational, an increment in the membership is shown by the following statement, based upon the per capita tax payments for the twelve months ending May 31, 1905:

Typographical—English and German	45,435
Mailers	1,047
Typefounders	98
Newspaper Writers	154
Total	46,734

From the above table, it is apparent that the average paying membership for the fiscal year was 46,734, an increase of 569 over the average for the preceding year, and 4,298 greater than for the year 1903.

The following table shows how the increase in membership during the past year compares with former records:

Year.	Members.
1891	*25,165
1892	*28,187
1893	*30,454
1894	*31,379
1895	*29,295
1896	28,838
1897	28,096
1898	28,614
1899	30,646
1900	32,105
1901	34,948
1902	†38,364
1903	42,436
1904	‡46,165
1905	46,734

* Including pressmen and bookbinders.

† Including stereotypers and electrotypers, seven months.

Thus we find the International Union stronger numerically and financially than ever before in its history, notwithstanding that it has relinquished control over pressmen, pressfeeders, bookbinders, bindery girls, photo-engravers and stereotypers and electrotypers during the last fifteen years. The constant additions to the ranks of the organization and its financial gains are indicative of that substantiality which marks all progress.

In the next tables are recorded the issuance of 43 charters, the suspension of 12, and the surrender of 33.

THE SPECIAL DEFENSE FUND.

Under our present laws, every member now contributes 5 cents per month to the special defense fund, "for the purpose of advancing and defending the principles of unionism, as applied to our own trade, whenever and however the executive council may decide." There was no occasion for any expenditure from this fund during the fiscal year, the money in the defense fund proper being sufficient to meet all requests approved by the executive council. A large increase in the fund is the result. The following figures tell the story of eighteen months, the length of time the special defense fund had been in existence on May 31, 1905:

Balance in fund June 1, 1904	$9,622 85
Fund's portion per capita tax to May 31, 1905	28,036 82
Donation by Guthrie No. 587	11 31

THE HOME FUND.

As is evidenced by an occasional inquiry upon the subject, the impression still exists in the minds of some of our members that the Home fund is at the disposition of the International officers. It is therefore again stated that every member, in accordance with law, contributes 10 cents per month for the maintenance of the Home. The sums so collected are transferred monthly to the Home treasurer. In another portion of this book appears the report of the Home trustees, which contains a statement of the financial transactions of that institution. The following is a summary of the money belonging to this fund, which passed through the secretary-treasurer's office during the year ended May 31, 1905:

Fund's portion per capita tax to May 31, 1905	$56,081 15
Transportation of inmates returned	154 80
Total	$56,235 95

THE GENERAL FUND.

In my last report the opinion was expressed that the revenue of the general fund was not sufficient to warrant any increase in the expenditures chargeable to it. The correctness of this view is demonstrated by the business of the past year, as will be seen by the following summary of the receipts and expenditures of the general fund for that period:

Balance in fund June 1, 1904	$4.341 18
Receipts to May 31, 1905	35.418 74
Total	$39,759 92
Expenditures	37.868 88
Balance in fund May 31, 1905	$1,891 04

Expenditures in excess of the receipts in the sum of $2,450.14 are shown by this calculation.

Some of the expenses borne by the general fund during the fiscal year were out of the usual order, to wit:

Federation assessment	$1.408 74
Removal of headquarters, new office furniture, desks, fixtures, etc.	1.488 70
Addressograph and supplies	285 16
Three new typewriters, desks and copyholders	384 00
Total	$3,566 60

With the exception of the assessment levied by the American Federation of Labor, the foregoing expenses are not likely to be duplicated for several years. Aside from this, the revenue accruing was slightly more than the demand on the general fund. There is no probability of a marked increase in the balance to the credit of the general fund on the present apportionment of per capita tax, but it should be able to bear its proportion of expense.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OR JOINT DEFENSE FUND.

The third table presented in connection with this report contains an itemized exhibit of the receipts and expenditures of this fund. A summary will, therefore, be sufficient at this point:

RECEIPTS.

Balance to credit of fund June 1, 1904.	$2,501 38
Per capita tax	42,060 88
International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union—Special per capita tax	2,439 22
Cash returned	107 55
Total		$47,109 03

EXPENDITURES.

Paid to local unions	$19.360 16
Expenses of officers and organizers	16.995 41
Expenses of committees	2,664 72
Wisconsin state printing plant bill	58 50
Telegrams	524 37
Total	$39.603 16
Balance in fund May 31, 1905	7.505 87
Total		$47,109 03

By special agreement the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union pays 7½ cents per member per month for defense purposes. It drew from this fund during the year for the use of its locals the sum of $1,137.50, and $980.20 was expended for the traveling expenses of its officers or designated representatives in handling matters in which this craft was solely concerned.

In this connection, a summary of the toal amount paid since the establishment of the defense fund will not be amiss:

Year.	Amount Expended.
1891	$19.039 78

*Includes sum transferred to general fund for expenses of shorter workday committee, and this fund's portion of the loss in the Indianapolis National Bank.

BURIAL FUND AND MORTUARY TABLE.

A slight decrease in the number of burial claims is a noticeable feature of the past fiscal year. In the twelve months ending May 31, 1904, benefits to the number of 578 were paid, as against 567 for the fiscal year closing May 31, 1905. Here is the result:

Receipts to May 31, 1905	$42,060 85
Expenditures	39,690 00
Excess of receipts over expenditures	$2.370 85
Balance in fund June 1, 1904	17.556 93
Balance in fund May 31, 1905	$19,927 78

The death rate for the year was 1.213 per cent of the average membership, or a little more than 12 per 1,000. The average death rate since the establishment of the fund has been 1.219 per cent—about 12 per 1,000.

A summary of the number of benefits and the total amount paid since the establishment of the burial fund is as follows:

Year.	Benefits.	Amount.
1892	228	$11.500 00
1893	439	21,950 00
1894	507	25,500 00

1903	476	30,940 00
1904	578	38.925 00
1905	567	39,690 00
Total	6,116	$367,995 00

Though the revenue of this fund was again in excess of the demands upon it, the amount accruing is not sufficient to permit of an increase in the death benefit. Judging from the record of the last two fiscal years, the fund will increase about $2,500 yearly.

THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

How gratifying to those who advocated the sending of THE JOURNAL to all members must be the progress of the paper since the adoption of that plan. THE JOURNAL was never more popular than at present, and the method by which it is distributed has proven so successful that other organizations are adopting it. Notwithstanding the increase in the size of the magazine during the year, there was an increase in the balance to the credit of the fund. As long as our laws regarding the official paper remain as at present, the subscription rate of 5 cents per member per month guarantees that THE JOURNAL will pay its own way. The figures for the twelve months comprised in the fiscal year ending May 31, 1905, follow:

RECEIPTS—JUNE 1, 1904, TO MAY 31, 1905.

RECAPITULATION.

Expenditures June 1, 1904, to May 31, 1905	29,426 77
Excess of receipts over expenditures	$1,885 93
Balance in fund June 1, 1904	170 38
Balance in fund May 31, 1905	$2,056 31

This calculation does not take into consideration $677.84 due from advertisers on May 31, 1905. It deals only with actual money received and expended.

In my last two reports I had occasion to comment upon the advertising patronage of THE JOURNAL. It was noted that general advertisers and those placing their business complain of the unfruitfulness of space in trade papers. There has been no change in this respect, though no effort has been spared to convince advertisers that the excellent constituency of THE JOURNAL is a guarantee of its value as an advertising medium. THE JOURNAL'S patrons comprise concerns of unquestionable standing. They are getting satisfactory results, and it is hoped that through them other advertisers of equal reputation may be induced to give us their business. Every member can aid in this feature of our work by patronizing, whenever and wherever possible, the firms now using space in THE JOURNAL. If this is done, the desired results are sure to follow.

THE CUMMINGS MEMORIAL FUND.

This fund has now been in progress of collection for three years. The contributions to it are received by your secretary-treasurer, as the chosen custodian of the fund until it shall properly pass to the Home trustees, to be used as designated by the International Union. A summary of the receipts of and expenditures from the fund follows:

Donations, June 1, 1902 to May 31, 1903	$410 21
Donations, June 1, 1903 to May 31, 1904	4,730 28
Donations, June 1, 1904 to May 31, 1905	6,833 53
Interest, June 1, 1904, to May 31, 1905	171 68
Total	$12,145 70
Expenses of committee	832 85
Balance in fund May 31, 1905	$11,312 85

It is the desire of the committee having in charge this worthy cause, to show as plainly as possible just what locals have contributed their pro rata share to the memorial fund. THE LOS ANGELES CONTEST.

An assessment of 5 cents per member per month was levied by a referendum vote for the benefit of Los Angeles No. 174, in its fight against the notoriously unfair Times, in December, 1902. The collections began with the month of January, and continued up to and including December, 1903. It amounted in all to $26,350.11. Of this sum, $24,185.31 had been transferred to Los Angeles Union up to May 31, 1904, and a balance of $2,164.80 remained in the hands of the secretary-treasurer on that date. During this year the balance named was forwarded to No. 174, and the assessment account closed.

At this time it is but proper to mention the assistance received by Los Angeles Union from the defense fund, for use in the Times fight. Before the collection of the special assessment began No. 174 received $2,500 from the executive council. Since the special assessment was exhausted, $4,800 has been drawn from the defense fund—the appropriation being fixed at $600 per month in September, 1904. This union has therefore received a total of $33,650.11 from the International Union during the last three fiscal years.

STRIKES.

Nineteen strikes, involving sixteen local unions, took place during this fiscal year. The name of the interested union involved in each instance, that of the office in which the difficulty occurred, and the result of each dispute, appears in the table below:

THE ANNUAL SCALE REPORT.

An item of $770.73 for the printing and distribution of the annual scale report appears among the expenditures of this year. This report, which had been issued as a supplement to THE JOURNAL for several years, was on this occasion printed in pamphlet form, as is provided by law, and mailed to the officers of local unions and to such members as requested a copy.

This is the fifth occasion on which your secretary-treasurer has been privileged, with the assistance of local secretaries, to gather data relative to the wages received and hours worked by members of our organization, together with statistics regarding the machines in use, the number of operators, etc., under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union. The information thus obtained was compiled and published in five reports, the first appearing February 15, 1898, the second June 1, 1901, the third May 1, 1902, the fourth in February, 1904, and the last one in March, 1905. Each report has been more complete than its predecessors, the last one comprising returns from 630 cities and 637 unions. These reports are valuable not merely because they show the increases in local scales and the reductions in hours of labor. They awaken apathetic unions to the opportunities before them, and lead to additional progress in this direction. They have become an important feature of our work, and are eagerly sought by students of economics and our employers.

Further mention of this feature is unnecessary at this time, as President Lynch has incorporated in his report the summary of the scale report issued by the secretary-treasurer in March, 1905.

THE EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT.

In the report of the executive council will be found an item of $2,539.37, representing the expenses of the International Eight-Hour Committee. This amount includes the following items:

Circulars and cards	$453 50
Buttons and boxes	470 44
Clerical work	565 25
Stamped envelopes	560 95
Postage stamps	165 00
Traveling expenses of committee	186 00
Secret work	138 14
Total	$2,539 37

As a result of the support accorded the committee in its labors, the eight-hour movement is now in full sway. Additions are constantly being made to the list of locals having the shorter day, or completing arrangements for it on January 1, 1906. The enthusiasm prevailing in every section promises success. President Lynch, as Chairman of the International Committee, will present to the convention a detailed report of the work of the committee during this year.

RECEIPTS FROM AND BENEFITS DRAWN BY LOCAL UNIONS.

The series of tables presented on the following pages set forth the payments of each union to the International and Home funds, the burial benefits drawn by each union, and the moneys received by them from the defense fund in strike benefits or special assistance.

MEMBERSHIP OF SUBORDINATE UNIONS.

It is important that each local should know the numerical strength of those about it. This is made possible by the following table, in which is set forth the membership in good standing and in arrears, and the total membership of each union. The data presented was compiled from the quarterly reports for the three months ended April 30, 1905. In instances where unions failed to report, the membership given is based upon the last remittances for per capita tax, such unions being designated by a star (*). Recently formed locals have also been added to the list, the membership being based upon the number of charter members or receipts for per capita tax. Such unions are indicated by a dagger (†).

THE BOND INVESTMENT.

Among the assets of the International on June 1, 1904, were thirty one-thousand-dollar two per cent United States bonds, valued at $32,106.25. During the year ending May 31, 1905, interest on these bonds in the sum of $600 was received. Of this amount, $450 was credited as interest to the general fund, and the remaining $150 against the investment, reducing it to $31,956.25. The bonds will be at par when they mature, hence a portion of the interest received is charged against the investment, in order to reduce the investment to the exact face of the bonds by the date of their maturity.

COST OF TRANSACTING BUSINESS.

The expenses incurred in transacting the general business of the organization during the past fiscal year (exclusive of THE JOURNAL and the eight-hour committee) were:

Officers' salaries	$4,800 00
Office rent, light, insurance, telephones, new furniture, etc.	4,578 11
Clerk hire, auditors' services	7,956 90
Stationery for headquarters and vice-presidents	431 13
Miscellaneous printing	865 95
Postage (exclusive of eight-hour circulars)	882 00
Stamped envelopes and postal cards	934 05
Expressage	297 10
Exchange	92 60
Telegrams (prior to November 1, 1904)	370 18
Supplies purchased for resale	2,900 89
Total cost	$23,608 91
Less receipts from supplies, interest and desk-room	6,187 19
Net cost	$17,421 72

Average cost per member, 37 cents.
Cost per member for officers' salaries, 9.2 cents.

TO CONCLUDE.

It requires but a cursory examination of this report to demonstrate that the International Typographical Union is in better condition—both numerically and financially—than ever before. This in itself reflects great credit upon the members of the organization, through whose efforts such a result has been made possible.

The Toronto convention will be an important one, as it will deal with questions of vital interest to the future welfare of the organization. There can be no question that the delegates to the fifty-first session will endeavor to solve the problems presented in such manner as will redound to the credit of the International Typographical Union.

I desire to thank the officers and members of subordinate unions for the spirit of co-operation manifested by them during the year.

Respectfully submitted,
J. W. BRAMWOOD,
Secretary-Treasurer.

REPORTS OF ORGANIZERS.

ORGANIZER BIRDSALL.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—In submitting my report as organizer for this section I can only give in a general way a synopsis of what has been done during the past year, as my duties as organizer date only from March, 1905.

In the troublesome days of the administration of Governor Peabody, with which you are all familiar, it was thought by many of the opponents of trade unions that the death knell of unionism had been sounded in this section. On the contrary there has been a steady and persistent growth in all lines of organized labor, and particularly is this true of the International Typographical Union. In all the small towns of this state there are many of our members employed, and there is but one city with printers enough to form a union that is not organized. I refer to Boulder, and even there it will be found that some six or eight out of the dozen hold membership in Denver Union.

Recently a local was organized in Fort Collins with all the eligible printers signing the application for a charter, and from last reports things were running along nicely.

In Colorado Springs the eight-hour day went into effect on the 1st of April, and this without loss of time or serious objection. Of the thirteen unions in the state six have the eight-hour day, and others have arrangements which will see it in effect by the 1st of January, 1906.

Under the jurisdiction of No. 49 constant efforts are being put forth to unionize the small offices, and the progress made is not discouraging by any means. Recently an eight-hour agreement was signed up with the Queen City Printing Company, whose business is beginning to assume important proportions.

So far as I know conditions throughout the state are satisfactory to employers, and there is no prospect of a demand for lower scales or longer hours.

On January 1 an agreement was signed with the Evening Post for a continuance of the present scale and hours during the life of the International arbitration agreement. This was done at the solicitation of the Post management, that paper not being a member of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and consequently not a party to the International Typographical Union agreement.

While the work of organizing has been steadily carried on, there is still field for renewed effort until every printer in the state is numbered among our members, where they may have the benefits enjoyed by those who have already espoused the cause of unionism.

In closing this brief report I predict for the International Union a magnificent victory on the first day of January, 1906, and feel that the delegates to the coming Toronto convention will sound with renewed vigor the slogan for a universal eight-hour day.

With the best of wishes for the officers and delegates, and with thanks to President Lynch and Secretary Bramwood for words of encouragement and courtesies extended, I am, Fraternally yours, F. C. BIRDSALL.

ORGANIZER BONNINGTON.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—Since my reappointment as organizer in December last, there have been few instances of a specific character requiring my attention in this jurisdiction, and my efforts in the main have been in the interest of the eight-hour agitation.

On February 17 was called to Fresno, where our union was about to put into effect a new scale involving slight increases in the newspaper and book and job branches (the eight-hour day having been granted at the first of the year). The employers were not willing to sign the new scale, but after two conferences they offered to do so if the union would agree to have it go into effect October 1. This proposition was submitted to the union's officers, without recommendation, by me, and as a result the matter was finally compromised by an agreement that the new scale should be in force from and after June 1.

With the assistance of secretaries of our unions throughout the state I have endeavored to reach non-member printers working in unorganized towns, and in all cases where names have been obtained, literature has been forwarded.

San Francisco No. 21, the largest typographical union in the state, attained the eight-hour day in the job branch on January 1, as the result of an agreement entered into with the local typothetæ two and a half years ago, by the terms of which the hours of labor were reduced fifteen minutes a day each six months from July 1, 1903, accompanied by an increase in the wage scale of 50 cents per week each six months. At the date of writing this report (June 8) the union is confronted with a demand from the employers for a return to the nine-hour day. The agitation in this direction was inaugurated before the eight-hour day had been in operation eight weeks, a fact which demonstrates the insincerity of the employers' claim that the shorter workday had proved a failure. The members of No. 21 are unanimous in their determination to maintain the eight-hour day, and that public sentiment is wholly in the union's favor is evidenced by the fact that each of the six daily newspapers of San Francisco has editorially espoused our cause and deprecated the attitude of the employers. Whether the typothetæ will insist upon its demand and bring about a general lockout in the job branch in San Francisco is at this writing uncertain, but everything possible is being done to conserve the interests of No. 21.

The fight against the Los Angeles Times will, of course, be dealt with in the reports of the officers having the contest directly in charge. Persistent efforts are being made to withdraw advertisements from the paper, and it has been my pleasant duty, as secretary of the state federation of labor, to address each month a circular letter to the 300 unions affiliated with the federation, urging them to aid the typographical union in its contest with the common enemy. In this connection, I would earnestly recommend that the Toronto convention make provision for continuing the fight in Los Angeles until it is brought to a successful conclusion.

Thanking the International and subordinate union officers for courtesies extended, I am

Fraternally,

San Francisco, Cal. F. J. Bonnington.

ORGANIZER BRADY.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

Ladies and Gentlemen—It is with pleasure I submit my annual report to you. I am able to say that the work which has been assigned me has resulted in much good to the organization.

Many locals in Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and Kentucky were assisted in the negotiation of new wage contracts, and substantial increases secured. My work during the past year has been confined almost wholly to assisting local unions in their organization movement and the furtherance of the eight-hour workday. Indiana has thirty-one locals, and a personal visit was paid to each, where a plan was inaugurated to secure as members the printers in surrounding towns where not enough were employed to form a union. Many of these country printers were reached and affiliated with the organization, and I feel safe in saying that there is scarcely a town in Indiana where printers are employed that does not contain union printers. The same can be said of Illinois and Ohio.

The time has come when we must have the country printers in our ranks, and we are getting them. They secure better results for themselves, and it creates a higher standard of workmanship, fitting them to hold positions in the city offices, and it is from the country that the large offices in the city are securing printers. Of late years, and especially since the introduction of machines, few printers are being made. Good, bright boys do not take to the trade as in the past, and it seems the employers have not the use for them. Even when a good boy is secured he is not given the opportunity to fit himself as an all-round printer, either in the book and job shops or newspaper composing rooms. This scarcity of printers is a big factor in securing the eight-hour workday in our smaller unions, and the principal reason is this: In the past few years especial attention has been given to the organization of the country printer, and in every instance their wages have been increased and hours of labor reduced. They are beginning to know their worth as mechanics, and refuse longer to work at the printing trade at wages that will hardly equal those paid unskilled laborers.

The employers in these localities are equipping their shops with up-to-date machinery, making it possible for them to do first-class work—to come in competition with the larger offices in the city, and keep their commercial printing at home. They are aware their brother employer in the city is bidding for the services of the country printer, and they are willing to concede the increase in wages and grant the eight-hour day in order to keep their printers at home.

In Indiana Muncie, Marion, Wabash, Peru, Terre Haute and Vincennes have the eight-hour day provided for. Ohio has Columbus, Zanesville, Youngstown, East Liverpool, Salem, Newark, Findlay, Marietta; and Kentucky has Paducah and Henderson. Eight-hour contracts are coming into headquarters every day, and many more locals in these states will be on the list before January 1, 1906.

In my opinion it will be only possible for the typothetæ to center a fight in one or two of the larger cities of our jurisdiction, and while they are combating us there we will win in the other localities, and it would then result in a question of individuality with the printers in the cities the employers had chosen to fight us. Our members would refuse as individuals to work nine hours a day when they could go to a neighboring city and work eight.

The resources of the employers will only permit of them making a fight in the one or two cities, as they have not the non-union printers, and I want to say that the majority of the men in the country towns are going to stay there because their condition is being bettered by the campaign of organization now being conducted by the International Typographical Union.

In this work of organization it is possible for every member to accomplish something. Make it a point to see the non-union printers in your locality and secure their application for membership. I stated in my last report that there were 50,000 printers in the United States and Canada who are not members of our organization. Since that time many of these have become members and our membership is increasing rapidly each day.

After the inauguration of the eight-hour workday these printers will seek admission to the International Typographical Union, and I feel that the time is not far distant when employes and employers in the printing trade will have established such amicable relationship that trouble between them will be a thing of the past.

In all of my previous annual reports I have taken up separately each town visited during the year and told briefly what had been accomplished. Permit me to say that during the fiscal year just closed I have been fortunate in avoiding trouble, and the different locals have been benefited in every instance.

For the past month and at the present time I have been located in Louisville, Ky., where we are conducting a campaign of reorganization among the book and job printers. When I arrived here there were about 125 non-union printers in the city. To date we have secured as members something over thirty, and I feel quite sure that in a short time we will have them all in the fold and be in good shape for January 1.

In conclusion I desire to thank the officers of the International for the advice and support given me, which has been of great assistance in the fulfilment of my duties during the past year. I also desire to extend thanks to the officers and members of locals I have visited for their assistance in securing desired results. Fraternally yours,

Indianapolis, Ind. B. G. BRADY.

ORGANIZER BOYLE.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

GENTLEMEN—I beg leave to submit the following brief report of what has transpired since my appointment as organizer:

During the month of April I visited Chillicothe, Mo., for the purpose of endeavoring to have the union hold its charter, which I succeeded in doing. I also visited Nebraska City, Neb., on two occasions during the month of May, for the same purpose. I attended a regular meeting of their union and persuaded them to send a delegate to the eight-hour conference in Chicago in June. Think all the membership of Nebraska City Union needs is to come a little more in contact with other unions.

I visited Kearney, Hastings, Beatrice and Columbus and found the following conditions: At Kearney I found there were not enough members to hold a charter. Possibly secured three provisional cards. At Hastings there are sixteen printers employed, eight of whom are women. One linotype machine (two card men operating), with possibility of another machine in the near future, which would give the union in this town a high scale and male membership. At Beatrice I succeeded in holding one meeting of printers. There were four card men in town and five women. The card men thought it not advisable to organize at present. Will probably secure three or four provisional cards and will probably take out charter after the eight-hour day is settled in the larger cities. The conditions in the Telegram office in Columbus are good. They employ three girls and two printers. The proprietors are former card men. Expect at later date to place charter in this town by assistance of proprietors of office. Girls now below International age limit.

Thanking the officers at headquarters for courtesies, and hoping the Toronto convention will be productive of much good to the craft, I remain,

Yours fraternally, P. J. BOYLE,

Omaha, Neb. Special Organizer.

ORGANIZER COLBERT.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—My first assignment was received October 3, 1904, when I was requested by President Lynch to adjust a controversy that had arisen between Swedish Typographical Union No. 247 of Chicago and the proprietor of one of the offices under its jurisdiction. I notified the secretary of that union of my readiness to take the matter up, and in reply he stated that "the proprietor gave in when he heard we asked for assistance from the International."

On Sunday, October 16, 1904, I visited Battle Creek, Mich., to address a mass meeting of organized labor, held for the purpose of infusing new life into unionism in that city, and particularly into the central body. Representatives of the Michigan Federation of Labor were also present and addressed the meeting. The attendance was not large, and it was plainly to be seen that unionism has an uphill fight on its hands in Battle Creek, on account of the hostility of manufacturing interests and religious prejudice. The printers were out in force at this meeting, and the other printing trades were well represented. At the close of the general meeting I addressed the printing trades, and Monday evening attended a special meeting of Typographical Union No. 429, when the local situation was discussed at length. The condition of affairs was not at all good. No. 429 has been making a heroic struggle for existence since it was organized. The situation is peculiar and has some features not to be met with anywhere else in our jurisdiction. United and determined action on the part of all the international unions in the printing trades that are interested in that city is the only solution of the problem.

Arrived in Keokuk, Iowa, on October 20, a new scale being the question at issue. The union was asking for an increase of $2 a week for both job and news men. The employers refused to make any concession, and at the first conference after my arrival stated they did not believe a majority of the union was in favor of the new scale. A special meeting was called to test this question, and on a secret ballot only one vote was cast in favor of withdrawing the scale. Another conference was held after this meeting, but the proprietors still refused to make any concession. At a special meeting, Saturday evening, a strike was voted, and the whole matter placed in the hands of the officers and organizer. Monday morning a settlement was reached on the basis of $1 advance. It was not necessary to call the men out.

During a strike in 1901 in Waterloo, Iowa, the Reporter office became non-union. Numerous efforts were made to bring it back into the fold, but these efforts were fruitless until the latter part of 1904, when the proprietors showed a disposition to make a settlement, provided the union would admit to membership the men employed in the office, six in number. At a special meeting of Waterloo Union, held November 5, 1904, all of these men made application, the usual fee accompanying each application. Four were elected and two rejected. The Reporter people refused to settle on that basis. On my arrival November 11 I learned that a settlement could only be made on the terms proposed. At a special meeting that evening the union reconsidered its action on the rejected candidates and then suspended the by-laws, raised the initiation fee $25, and elected the two men. The next day the firm refused to settle on those terms. I returned to Chicago that night and made a report to the council. While in Cedar Rapids the following week I received instructions to return to Waterloo, and also a copy of a letter to the president of that union, in which the council held the action of the union illegal in raising the initiation fee, on the ground that it was retroactive legislation, as the candidates had already paid the regular fee. As neither had ever been a member of a typographical union, it was also ruled that a fine could not be imposed. It was also held by the council that the men had been legally elected, and the union was earnestly advised to concur in the findings and rescind its former action. After a heated discussion at another special meeting this was done, and on Saturday, November 19, a contract with the firm was signed and the Reporter made a union office.

I went to Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on November 14, Typographical Union No. 192 being unable to secure the acceptance by the proprietors of a new scale recently adopted by the union. The situation there was complicated by the fact that the agreement about to expire had been negotiated by the allied printing trades council, and the new scales of all the unions were being handled by a committee from that body. It was finally deemed best for each union to handle its own scale, as there were differences that could not be reconciled. A committee from No. 192 then took the matter up, and numerous fruitless conferences were held with the committee representing the employers. It was necessary for me to go back to Waterloo at this time, and on my return to Cedar Rapids the union, at a special meeting, voted to reject a compromise offered by the employers. The next day the union committee offered a counter proposition, which was rejected. Some signatures of employers not in the organization had already been obtained, and the next day we secured the signature of the largest job office to our last proposition, and the following day the typothetæ signed also. The job offices were principally affected. The old scale was $13.50. Fourteen dollars will be paid until October 1, 1905, and $15 until January 1, 1906. No agreement could be reached on the eight-hour day. The bookbinders and pressmen made a satisfactory settlement also.

Went to Des Moines, Iowa, on November 30, 1904. No. 118 had presented a new scale to the job proprietors, asking for a reduction in hours of fifteen minutes a day every three months between December 17, 1904, and December 17, 1905, the eight-hour day to be in effect on the latter date, and a raise of 75 cents a week to go into effect with the eight-hour day. This was also a case of an allied trade agreement, and the complications noted at Cedar Rapids were present in Des Moines. Persistent efforts were made to secure a favorable settlement, first on the eight-hour proposition and later on an immediate raise in the scale, but both were unsuccessful. No break could be made in the employers' ranks, and both the council and the local scale committee deemed a strike inadvisable. At a special meeting held Sunday, December 4, the union voted to accept the old scale and hours for one year.

Typographical Union No. 40, St. Joseph, Mo., presented a new scale to the job proprietors in December, 1904. This called for eight hours a day and $18 a week, a raise of $2. On my arrival, December 15, I learned that the reduction in hours had been refused and a raise in the scale of $1 offered by the proprietors. Several conferences were held and an effort made to get the $18 scale, but the attitude of the proprietors could not be changed, either as to the scale or hours. It was deemed inadvisable to force the issue, and the union accepted the $17 proposition December 19. The best of feeling prevails in St. Joseph between the union and employers, and it is hoped the eight-hour day will go into effect January 1, 1906, without trouble.

December 31, 1904, President Lynch wired me to investigate impending trouble between the electrotypers' union and the Rand-McNally firm in Chicago. In this case the issue was forced upon the electrotypers so quickly that there was no time for the intervention provided for in the agreement between the International Typographical Union and the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union. The Rand-McNally firm locked out the electrotypers, repudiating an agreement made by the electrotype employers with the union, and announced its determination to run an open shop. The experiment has been a costly one for Rand-McNally, and the fight is still on.

In March, 1904, a five-year agreement between Chicago Mailers' Union No. 2 and the Chicago Inter Ocean expired. The publisher and the union could not agree on a new scale, and the old scale and agreement were extended for a short period pending negotiations with the papers in the publishers' association. These negotiations were delayed from various causes, and the Inter Ocean agreement was extended from time to time until late in the year, when several conferences were held for the purpose of reaching a final settlement independent of the other papers. Finally, on January 11, 1905, a contract was signed with the Inter Ocean for three years. The hours worked per week were reduced from about forty-six to thirty-nine and the wages of most of the men were increased $1 a week. It was also stipulated that if a better contract was made by the mailers with the association papers the Inter Ocean would substitute it for the one agreed to.

On February 5 I went to Zanesville, Ohio, as President Lynch's representative on the national arbitration board, the parties to the case being Typographical Union No. 199 and the Signal and Times-Recorder of that city. Local arbitration had been waived. Nearly two days were spent in an effort to settle by conciliation, which failed, and two more were taken up in getting the third member of the board. It was then learned that the gentleman was out of the city. Both parties preferred to wait, and the hearing was postponed until March 7. Returned to Zanesville on that date, and the case was then taken up and a decision reached by the board on the 10th, about three days being taken up in testimony and argument, First Vice-President Hays acting as attorney for the union. The award left the scale as it was, with the exception of foremen, who were given a slight increase. The union had asked for a raise over the old scale on all employed, and the publishers had asked for a reduction.

I went to Quincy, Ill., on February 13, 1905. There had been a question raised as to the status of certain members who claimed that under local laws they were entitled to withdrawal cards as proprietors, although working actively at the trade. The officers were acting under a ruling from the council, and it appeared to me that the question would eventually be settled right. Then suddenly there came prospective trouble from another cause, the Cadogan-Hatcher firm notifying its compositors that the following week they would have to work on a fifty-six-hour basis. The manager left the city the same day, not to return until Saturday. I went to Dixon, Ill., Wednesday and returned to Quincy Friday night. The manager of the firm was stubborn in his purpose, and authority was given by the council to order a strike. Sunday the union voted unanimously to call the men out. Another effort was made Monday morning to settle, but it failed, and the men quit. Tuesday afternoon the firm agreed to resume work on the fifty-four-hour basis.

Arrived in Dixon, Ill., February 16. The trouble there was with the union itself. No meeting had been held for months, no dues had been paid, and the union was in arrears for several months' per capita tax. I made an effort to get the members together that evening, but only six responded. It was necessary for me to return to Quincy the next day, so I could only advise the six what to do, and they promised to secure enough members to hold the charter and to build up again. I agreed to make another visit later in the year.

From Quincy I went to Danville, Ill., arriving there February 22. The question was a new scale for newspaper and job offices, and an eight-hour day, beginning January 1, 1906. No increase was asked for in the job scale, but in the news scale a raise was demanded. The employers were organized, and negotiations had been fruitless, except that the day before I arrived the proprietors had offered to sign the old scale until March 1, 1906, and put the eight-hour day in effect January 1, 1906. The only result of two days' negotiations was to leave the length of time of the contract to the option of the union, the old scale to prevail, and eight hours January 1, 1906. The union rejected this Sunday, February 26. Monday one firm broke away and signed, but the rest stood firm, although worked with by the officers and organizer Monday and Tuesday. In view of the eight-hour day being conceded in the employers' last proposition the council deemed a strike inadvisable on the scale question, and the union was so informed at a special meeting Tuesday, the 29th. After considerable discussion the scale committee was given authority to sign an agreement for the old scale, with a few minor changes, eight hours beginning January 1, the contract to run for nineteen months.

From Danville I went to Waukegan, Ill., where the union was endeavoring to put a new scale in effect. An offer of a gradual reduction in hours, so that the eight-hour day would be in effect January 1, 1906, had been rejected by the union, and I could not get the employers to consider it again. An agreement was reached March 4 which puts the eight-hour day in effect January 1, 1906. A raise of $1 a week was secured for straight matter compositors to go into effect at once, and a raise of $1 a week for the rest of the employes at the end of the second year of the contract, which runs for three years.

On Monday evening, March 13, I attended the annual "smoker" of Freeport (Ill.) Typographical Union No. 524. Nearly all the employing printers of the city were present, and made addresses. Mr. Aspegren, of Rockford Union, and the organizer also addressed the gathering. An enjoyable evening was spent, and the employing printers seemed especially pleased at the courtesy shown in inviting them to be present.

Went to Carlinville, Ill., March 15. A new scale had been under consideration for over a year. After interviewing the proprietors and attending a meeting of the union it became evident that a settlement had been delayed too long, and as the union was not united in its advocacy of the new scale it finally was decided to drop the matter and continue the old scale until January 1, 1906.

On May 2 I left Chicago on a trip through Illinois, the purpose of which was to visit every typographical union in the state, at either a regular or special meeting, and to address the members on the eight-hour day and the work that is necessary to make a success of the most important question before the International Typographical Union today. The trip was finished June 26, and in the intervening time I visited forty-four union towns and six unorganized towns.

The work of organization, and the necessity for it, was the most important part of my address. In this respect I found that most of the Illinois unions were already aroused and were planning an active campaign. My suggestions were well received and, I believe, were useful in formulating a general plan of campaign throughout the state.

The importance of an active label campaign, particularly at this time, was also brought to the attention of the unions. In some towns our label is in evidence everywhere and in a few it is seldom used. The unions in the latter towns were urged to remedy this.

The necessity for the Typographical Union affiliating with and participating in the work of the central trade and labor body was also placed before the unions, although but few cases of laxness in this respect were found.

Prompt and regular attendance at union meetings, thereby encouraging and aiding the officers and committees charged with the routine work, was urged upon our members. Business rivalry and jealousy between proprietors sometimes finds its way into the union meetings in the smaller towns, and the members were cautioned against permitting this, as its almost inevitable result is the disruption of the union.

It is with great pleasure that I report the general conditions in Illinois to be good. The typographical unions are practically all in good condition. A few are weak through local causes. In most of the organized towns there are no non-union men, and I doubt if there are fifty non-union printers in the union towns of Illinois outside of Chicago.

In some of the unorganized towns visited unions may be formed later. Card men were found in all but one, and each was doing missionary work in behalf of the cause.

In the union towns I found our members united on the eight-hour question. In some of the smaller towns it is recognized that it will not be an easy matter to enforce an eight-hour day on account of the character of the work usually done in country offices. In some towns the label alone will settle the eight-hour day in favor of the union, as it is required on the papers and nearly all job work. There may be trouble in some towns, but that will depend on the general situation at the end of the year. Typothetæ officials have been sending appeals for the last six months to the employing printers in the smaller towns to resist the eight-hour demand, and promises of assistance are made. Most of these letters find a resting place in the waste basket, but a few employers are stiffened up by them for the present. Few of the employers I have talked with favor the eight-hour day, but they look on it as being inevitable, so they are preparing to accept it at the proper time. Another gratifying feature of the situation in this state at this time is there are few idle printers. In most of the towns visited in May and up to the middle of June there were none. In the towns where I found our unions weak I also found that union sentiment and work was also weak. The stimulus of united work for the union cause by a number of organizations, united in a strong central body, was lacking. Generally the unions were new and the members inexperienced and easily discouraged. Whenever a veteran card man was found things were different. The weak unions, however, as I stated before, are few. All the mining towns in this state are strong union towns in all lines of work.

Some years ago, especially after the 1887 strike for the nine-hour day, many of our far-seeing and thoughtful members preached in season and out for the organization of the country towns as something that was absolutely necessary if an eight-hour day was ever to prevail and scales of wages were to be maintained. My observation during the last two months has convinced me thoroughly of the wisdom of these men and the utility of the work. The non-union printer is becoming a rare bird, and the small unions are a very important part of the International Typographical Union today—more important than the members of the large ones who have not had an opportunity to study conditions realize—and they should be encouraged and aided in every way possible.

It is said many times these days that "the eight-hour fight is to be settled in the large cities." That may be true, but if so, it will be largely because the country town union takes care of the country printer and brings him into the union fold. And, then, look at the number of small unions that already have secured the eight-hour day.

In conclusion, I urge upon the membership the necessity of carrying on the work of organization.

Fraternally, MICHAEL COLBERT.

ORGANIZER DEVEREUX.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—During the latter part of the month of January last, this year, I received my appointment as organizer. On February 8, upon receiving instructions from President Lynch, I went to Lead, S. D., where a strike had been in progress for some few days on the Lead Daily Call. The union, No. 498, comprises the towns of Deadwood, Lead and Central City. The trouble was over the refusal of the Call to sign the scale adopted by No. 498, and the local union called the men out. The papers and job offices in Deadwood and Central City had signed the scale. Several conferences were had with the management of the Call which were of an unsuccessful character. I attended a meeting in Lead of the trades and labor assembly and at the meeting addressed the assembly with reference to our trouble on this paper. At the conclusion of this meeting a member of the miners' union, whose membership is counted in the thousands, said that the miners' union had appropriated $1,500, which was in the hands of their secretary, for the starting of a new daily and would turn this over to Mr. Benfer, a member of No. 498, for the establishing of a new paper, one in which they could express their views, which was denied in the Call. They would also guarantee 1,000 new subscribers to start with. The following month the Black Hills Daily Register was started and employed more men than were employed on the Call, thus increasing the membership of the union. A fight has been made on the Call, with the result that it is in a deplorable financial condition and will either have to unionize its office or go to the wall. James Ryan, secretary of the miners' union rendered much assistance to me during my visit to Lead, and also the members of the local union and their officers did much good work in visiting the different unions and urging them to support the new paper. The new daily paper was a success from the start and now does most of the advertising and more of the job work than is done by the non-union paper, whose force has been cut down to two and the proprietor. The executive council, on my recommendation, forwarded $100 to the local union to assist them during this trouble, as the union's treasury was entirely depleted.

My next visit was to Superior, Wis., where the union was having some trouble adjusting a scale with the Daily Telegram of that city. The scale committee of No. 163, accompanied me in a conference with the publisher of the Telegram and we were successful in signing a piece scale on machines and also the job scale, which provides for eight hours in both departments. The scale was signed for one year.

My next visit was to Ashland, Wis., to assist the local in making scales with the two dailies and job offices in that city. At the outset it looked as if the union was to have trouble, the local taking a unanimous strike vote. The eight-hour question seemed to bother one of the publishers and he tried to make the others stand out on this point. However, after several conferences, they finally agreed to accept our proposition and the scale, which provided for eight hours, January 1, 1906, was signed March 16 by all offices for one year.

On instructions from President Lynch I was ordered to go to Crookston, Minn., where the members of the union were on strike on the Daily Times caused by the employment of a non-unionist in that office. The union had no signed scale in this city with either paper. I was successful in signing a scale with the Daily Journal of Crookston, April 3, for one year, including an eight-hour clause, January 1, 1906, with the same pay. The Times office was opened to our members on condition that they would employ three of our members at once and in future employ more. Three out of seven were employed next day and we hope to get back in the fold this office soon.

On May 27 I went to Minot, N. D., and a new union was formed which promises to become a healthy acquisition to our ranks. They have fourteen charter members, two of them being old card men and they are already assisting in organizing the country printers in this locality.

During the last three months I have approved of twelve applications of members from unorganized towns which were forwarded to headquarters and International Typographical Union cards issued. Much correspondence has been done and in the near future I expect to be able to secure many members and establish a few new unions in several towns in this vicinity.

In closing this, my first report, I extend my heartfelt congratulations for the confidence and support I have received from President Lynch, Vice-President Hays, Secretary Bramwood and also the officers and members of local unions visited for their hearty co-operation in all matters appertaining to the success of the International Typographical Union.

With best wishes for the future welfare of the International Typographical Union, I remain

Very respectfully yours,

St. Paul, Minn. J. C. Devereux, jr.

ORGANIZER DOLAN.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

Ladies and Gentlemen—I herewith submit my report for fiscal year just ended. There were but two difficulties which could not be adjusted without resort to our last weapon—the strike—and they were but of short duration and the unions came out victorious.

I find the formation of new unions a difficult task, being met with opposition from proprietors and apathy from printers. The small-town printer can not be made to realize that the more firmly a proprietor is opposed to organization the more strenuous he should be to effect same.

In the conduct of the strikes mentioned above I found the use of plate matter, and that the product of union men, a serious menace to the success of a union in strike trouble. At Connellsville it was the only material the papers had. A few hand men would have wrecked our hopes. I believe the International Typographical Union has an agreement with a plate concern, whereby, in case of trouble, the struck establishment is unable to secure more matter than contract calls for. It is a very easy matter for the plate concern to ship an extra supply, and hard for the union to prove same. I would, therefore, recommend that at the expiration of this agreement a new one be formulated whereby a struck establishment should receive no plate matter set by union men on pain of having said plate establishment printers called out.

Operations for year were as follows:

July 6, at Cumberland, Md., the union had advanced the scale, and it had been rejected by the proprietors. Mr. C. Q. Lafferty was sent in my place to adjust the matter, owing to an injury to my leg, which kept me to the house for some time. After meeting the proprietors Mr. Lafferty was unable to settle the matter. The executive council gave authority for a strike, which was inaugurated July 9, and after four days the proprietors capitulated, granting an increase in wages of 10 per cent.

July 14, a proprietor at Alliance, Ohio, asked the local there the privilege of not signing the scale until the following September. The officers referred to the executive council, which in turn sent Mr. Lafferty to that town. The matter was satisfactorily adjusted.

July 27, Meadville, Pa., had advanced the scale. The proprietors refused to grant the advance. Several conferences were held with the proprietors, and nothing was accomplished. The executive council authorized a strike, but on taking vote of union it failed of legal majority.

August 2, settled trouble in union at Tarentum, Pa.

August 6, Waynesburg, Pa., attempted to form union; secured promises from fourteen to be present at meeting, but only four showed up.

September 7, formed union of mailers at Pittsburg, Pa.

October 25, Chambersburg, Pa., formed union of printers, but the following day the proprietors held a meeting and gave it out that all who joined new union would be discharged. This had the desired effect. They never sent for charter.

October 28, Carlisle, Pa., has too few printers to form union.

November 2, a proprietor of a French paper at Charleroi, Pa., wanted to use label, so I again attempted to form union there, but there were too few printers.

November 3, Greenville, Pa., formed union of ten printers.

November 18, Huntingdon, Pa., attempted to form union, but the inclination was not strong enough among the printers, though there are more than the requisite number in town.

January 23, 1905, Warren, Pa., had raised scale, which had been refused by proprietors. After working eight days an increase of 50 cents per week for journeymen and $1 per week for foremen was secured.

February 1, for violation of agreement by Independent of Niles, Ohio, Joseph Sullivan, president of local, had lifted labels. The Independent had appealed to President Lynch, who sent me to

Digitized by Google

Niles. I found the local president had assumed the right position. Also on this trip attempted to form union at Warren, Ohio, or secure members there for Niles, but failed.

April 4, Clarksburg (W. Va.) Union had formulated new scale, which proprietors refused to sign. The matter was adjusted satisfactorily. On same trip visited Grafton, W. Va., and Fairmont, W. Va., to form union or secure members for nearest local, but accomplished nothing.

April 13, Canonsburg, Pa., formed union of printers.

April 16, Connellsville, Pa., had presented revised and raised scale to proprietors, who refused it. I arranged meeting for April 23 with proprietors, as all were not in town at time of first visit.

April 19, Coshocton, Ohio, settled trouble over scale.

April 23, Connellsville, Pa., after working seven days in endeavoring to settle affairs executive council authorized me to call strike. The vote on this was unanimous. After four days the trouble was adjusted, the printers securing an advance ranging from 10 to 40 per cent. During this strike plate matter, set by union men, was used in getting out the papers. Had the proprietors been able to secure a few hand printers they would probably have beaten the union. This thing of allowing union men to remain at work to beat fellow union men on strike looks wrong to me, and I advise that an agreement with plate companies be made by International Typographical Union officials, whereby no matter be furnished an establishment that is struck by printers.

April 28, Uniontown, Pa., foreman on paper had refused to pay dues. I interviewed the gentleman, and he gave check for delinquency.

May 11, Salem, Ohio, was visted to help strengthen union.

May 12, Meadville, Pa., was visited to settle trouble in regard to foreman, which was accomplished.

ORGANIZER FENNESSY.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—With the exception of Los Angeles the craft is in good condition throughout southern California. A union exists in every town in this section of the state where there is a sufficient number of printers to secure a charter.

During the latter part of November I was called to Redlands, where trouble was threatened on account of the management of the Facts and Review paying less in the job department than the union scale. As a result of several conferences the management increased the wages of the job and floor men $1.50 a week.

I visited Pasadena in February and, in company with the officers of the local union, conferred with the proprietors of the job offices of that place, finally securing an increase in the job scale of $1.50 a week, the scale now being $16.50 instead of $15, and also a reduction of fifteen minutes in the workday, a contract being signed until January 1 next for a workday of eight hours and forty-five minutes, on which date an effort will be made to inaugurate the eight-hour day.

During the month of March I visited San Pedro and Long Beach and organized the printers of these two towns into the "Long Beach-San Pedro Typographical Union," there not being a sufficient number of printers in either town to form a separate organization. With one exception the proprietors of the printing offices in the towns mentioned at once recognized the new union.

I have visited Ocean Park and Santa Monica, and upon investigation found that were these two towns joined there would be only one or two more printers than is necessary to constitute a union, and deemed it unwise to organize a union with such a scant margin. The union men in these towns now hold membership in the Los Angeles Union.

I have devoted considerable time to recruiting material from the ranks of the country printers, having written personally to each one whose address could be obtained. A number have come to Los Angeles and applied for admission, at a recent meeting of the union ten applications being received. The application committee of the Los Angeles Union has been especially active, as a result of which new members are being initiated at every meeting.

The Los Angeles Union is thoroughly alive to the necessity of doing something before the first of next January, when the eight-hour day will be inaugurated throughout the country. The secretary-treasurer has been placed upon permanent salary, receiving the job scale, and devoting all his time to the union. Through the efforts of the typographical union the allied printing trades council also has placed a business agent in the field, through whose efforts three new label offices were added to the list in one week. Meetings are being held at which non-union printers are invited, and everything possible is being done to get every non-union printer in Los Angeles within the fold.

Taking everything into consideration, it can be said that southern California is in good condition, notwithstanding the rabid opposition of the Los Angeles Times. But there remains much work to be done, and the unions in this section will not idle away the time between now and the first of next year.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—On the first of March I was commissioned organizer with the understanding that I would serve in that capacity as the time at my disposal permitted. Shortly thereafter I visited Marion, Ohio, where the local union (No. 580) was in process of disintegration; called upon all non-union journeymen and attended meeting of union and advised action to inaugurate vigorous campaign of organization in Marion and surrounding towns, which suggestions were adopted. Visited Norwalk (No. 516), addressed union meeting and secured action calculated to increase the membership. In May I visited Elyria, held a meeting and secured the applications of all non-union printers in that place for a charter. While in Akron and Columbus (upon business other than that of International Typographical Union) I consulted with officials of No. 182 and No. 5 regarding the organization of printers in country towns, and I sent a substitute (Mr. Lee) to Painesville (No. 569) with such purpose in view. Also discussed the proposition with officers of No. 3 (Cincinnati) of holding a state eight-hour conference at some central point during August or September. With the co-operation of members of Cleveland Union No. 53 we are doing considerable corresponding with local unions to arrange organization meetings, and with non-union printers to secure their affiliation. Our plans include the arousing of interest among local unions and encourage them to proselyte among the unorganized printers in the small towns and villages for the purpose of securing their applications for the nearest local or the International Typographical Union at large.

In conclusion, I can report that almost without exception the printers with whom I came in contact favor the eight-hour movement that is to be inaugurated by the International Typographical Union on Januar. 1, 1906. Fraternally,

MAX S. HAYES.

ORGANIZER J. W. HAYS.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

GENTLEMEN—Following is my report for the period from June 1 to October 31, 1904:

On June 1, 1904, President Lynch wired me to come to headquarters, and on arriving he instructed me to proceed to Louisville, Ky., and represent him as a member of the National Board of Arbitration in the arbitration case then pending with the Courier-Journal and the Times of that city. The managers of two other papers, the Post and the Herald, had agreed to abide by the scale of prices agreed upon by the arbitration board. The arbitration board met on June 8, with the scale committee of the union and the representative of the publishers present, and the question of settling the differences by conciliation was taken up and finally proved successful. The union desired to have a piece scale adopted for machine composition, but the committee decided to withdraw this contention, and after negotiations lasting several days, an agreement was reached on the time scale, which provided for an increase of 2 cents per hour with price and one-half for overtime. The previous scale had provided for no extra price for overtime. After the termination of the negotiations before the arbitration board the president of No. 10 requested that I remain in the city for a time and assist the officers in handling the job office strike, which then had been in existence for some time. With the consent of the executive council I remained in Louisville until June 30. The result of this work was published in the president's report to the St. Louis convention, so it is unnecessary to repeat it here.

While in Louisville I was called to Jeffersonville, Ind., where a new scale had been adopted, but not enforced. Inquiry disclosed the fact that the previous scale had not been paid in all the offices that were supposed to be union, and that at least one proprietor had been paying the dues of his employes in order to retain the use of the label. The members of No. 609 did not believe that the new scale would be paid if agreed to, or that they would be able to enforce any scale, and at a meeting of the union it was decided the best thing to do was to surrender the charter and ask the executive council to place that town under the jurisdiction of the New Albany Union, and this procedure was decided upon. I am informed that the charter has since been taken up, but that no application has been made to have the jurisdiction transferred.

On July 4 I returned to Minneapolis and there received a request to visit La Crosse, Wis., and assist in negotiating a scale. I went to La Crosse on July 8 and found that a new scale of prices for job offices had been presented and the proprietors had not only refused to agree to same, but had decided to sign no more contracts at any scale. After they were informed the labels would be taken up the proprietors submitted a proposition to the union, asking that the old scale be allowed to remain in effect until January 1, 1905, in which event contracts would be signed. This was agreed to by the union on recommendation of the scale committee.

From La Crosse I went to Appleton, Neenah and Menasha, Wis., all under one jurisdiction. I found that the union there was well organized, all printers in the three cites being enrolled as members. They had asked for the services of an organizer for the reason that they had been unable to secure agreements with the proprietors to run union offices, although none employed any but union men. Investigation showed that the scale of the union was very low, and as a strike of the paper makers was then on it was deemed inadvisable to raise it at that time. I advised that the union work on without contracts, inaugurate a label campaign and await a favorable opportunity to raise the scale before insisting on the signing of contracts. This recommendation was agreed to by the officers of the union. From Appleton I returned to Minneapolis.

On August 17 I left for Ashland, Rhinelander, Wausau, Manitowoc and Fond du Lac, Wis. At Ashland I found our organization in good shape for a small union. Rhinelander had been reported as having printers enough to organize, but I found this to be untrue and did not stop there. At Wausau I succeeded in getting a good meeting of printers, and it was decided to organize. After I left the city, however, the proprietors succeeded in getting them to change their minds, and the charter application was not sent in. At Manitowoc our organization has always been in bad shape. The officers invariably agreed to carry out plans suggested for strengthening the union, and have as often failed to do so.

Arriving at Fond du Lac I learned the union had not held a meeting for five months. I succeeded in getting several well-attended meetings, getting delegates elected to the trades council, and a label committee appointed, which was to make an effort to have a label ordinance adopted by the city council and a label resolution by the county commissioners.

From Fond du Lac I went to Milwaukee, where an attempt was being made by some of the job office proprietors to force open offices on No. 23. Several complications arose, the handling of which required considerable time. Before leaving the city signatures of a number of proprietors were secured to contracts, thus assuring at least a curtailment of the number of open-office advocates. A label campaign was started, this line of work having been neglected for several years.

From Milwaukee I was called to Marinette, Wis., where the proprietor of the largest office in the city had refused to sign or agree to pay a new scale that had been presented, which provided for a raise of $2 per week. After negotiating with him for several days he changed his mind and signed a contract at the scale asked.

From Marinette I returned to Minneapolis, stopping at Wausau, where the printers had failed to send for a charter after agreeing to organize. I found two strikes on in the city, and it was decided it would not be advisable to try to organize at this time.

On October 3 I was instructed to go to Crookston, Minn. In this city a new scale had been adopted, providing for a considerable raise, and the union had not been able to put it in effect. I also ascertained that there was no strictly union office in the city and that a number of girls, members of the union, had been working for less than the amounts required by the previous scale. In addition to this there had been a boy employed on a machine in one office, under contract, and no protest had been made by the union till this time. After some negotiating the proprietor of the Times office agreed he would pay the new scale to union men employed and that he would employ no non-union men when members of the union could be obtained. The manager of the Journal made the same agreement. This did not cover the employment of the girls then working, but the officers of the union believed they could handle that part of the question so as to get the scale for the girls in a short time, and the proposition of the proprietors was accepted. From Crookston I returned to Minneapolis on October 7.

On October 8 I again visited Milwaukee, Wis., and took up with the executive board and label committee the question of a label campaign, and the work was pushed with much vigor from that time on. One or two proprietors were still imbued with the open-office idea, but up to the time I left the city on October 20 conditions had been such that no action was taken except that of pushing the label.

From Milwaukee I went to La Crosse, where the union was having some trouble with the newspapers regarding the transfer of matter. After a conference with the officers and members it was decided this evil could be avoided by the foremen, and they agreed to see that no more matter was transferred.

Returning to Minneapolis I received instructions to go to Superior, Wis., where I found my services had been asked for to assist in straightening out the books of the financial secretary. The books were found to be in a deplorable condition, and nearly a week was consumed in the work of determining the secretary's indebtedness. A considerable shortage was found but arrangements were made whereby the union was to be reimbursed.

This closed my term as organizer, as I became first vice-president of the International Typographical Union on November 1.

I desire to return thanks to the officers and members of all unions visited for their very courteous treatment and assistance given on all matters under consideration. Fraternally,

J. W. Hays.

ORGANIZER HILL.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

Ladies and Gentlemen—My field of labor, during the year ending June 1, 1905, has been in the southern territory. In that period I have visited ten states upon official business. By reason of the limited number of towns and cities supporting locals of our craft, and the great distances separating them, in the south, it has been necessary for me to travel many miles and spend much time upon the road in the execution of orders received from the president.

The south has always been regarded as a rather poor field for unionism. The cause is to be sought in the fact that it has been in the past so largely an agricultural region, with few towns, cities and industrial centers, and not in any difference in the character, habits or thought of the people.

I can bring you glad tidings; for the spirit of change, development and progress is rife in Dixie. It must be apparent to the most casual observer that a great industrial era is dawning upon the south. One of the sure indicia of that activity is the increasing output of the printing presses. No section of our country, population considered, now surpasses the south in that respect. It is an inviting land and one that we should possess entirely. It promises, in fact, owing to the few serious labor conflicts occurring here in the past, to become a better field for unionism during the next decade than the more populous areas of the nation.

During the fiscal year covered by this report, no strike has occurred among members of the International Typographical Union in the territory in which I have had the honor to serve as organizer. New scales have been amicably put in operation, increases in wages have been effected, and numerous concessions and advantages secured. Several charters have been placed, and applications to headquarters have been made. Much correspondence has also been had with country printers, in the effort to increase our membership in those towns that are too small to support locals. Great interest has been manifested everywhere in the movement for the eight-hour day, in the book and job offices, to be inaugurated January 1, 1906.

I have found the various locals that I have visited uniformly officered by competent and courteous members. Friendly feeling and pleasant relations exist between the employing printers' associations and our locals throughout the territory traveled. Membership in the International Typographical Union has increased here, during the year, and general conditions appear to be improved.

I have drawn this brief outline of the field in which I have had the pleasure to labor, and will now submit for your consideration a more detailed statement of my work:

Received telegram from President Lynch to proceed to Charlotte, N. C., at once. Arrived in Charlotte Monday, June 1, 1904. After several conferences with the Master Printers' Association of Charlotte secured a proposition from the association, agreeing to increase the hand scale $1.50 per week and the machine scale to remain unchanged, the members of the association to conduct strictly union shops. The proposition was accepted by the union; also settled a controversy between the machinists and the manager of the Morning Observer and the Afternoon Chronicle, by having Manager Caldwell, of the papers mentioned, agree to the proposition made by the union.

In response to a telegram from headquarters went to Clarksville, Tenn., Monday, June 20, 1904. The foreman of the newspaper department of the Star Publishing Company had given up his position. The manager, Mr. Moss, placed an apprentice at $8 per week in charge of the department. The scale provides that the newspaper and job departments shall have separate foremen at $13.50 per week. Settled the controversy by having the manager agree to comply with the scale and pay the foreman $13.50 per week. The apprentice having just finished his apprenticeship, five years, was taken into the union and made foreman of the newspaper department at $13.50 per week.

Went from Clarksville, Tenn., to Hopkinsville, Ky., and organized a union. A few days later returned to Hopkinsville and installed the union.

On July 1, 1904, received telegram from President Lynch instructing me to go to Charleston, S. C. Arrived in Charleston July 3. President Walsh, of No. 43, had been discharged by the machinist (a non-union man) on the News and Courier. Mr. Walsh was reinstated and the foreman of the News and Courier received notice from the business office, through Mr. Cooper, that he (the foreman) would have the exclusive right to employ and discharge, and that he wanted him to be "foreman," and the machinists would have nothing whatever to do with engaging or dismissing any employe of the composing room.

Visited Birmingham, Ala., July 17, 1904. Found contracts had just been signed providing for nine hours, $3, price and one-half overtime, book and job scale, with all the firms except the Dispatch Printing Company and the Leslie Printing Company. These two firms have been non-union for four years. The scale agreement contains a clause that if either party desires a modification sixty days' notice must be given. There had been a controversy on for months between the printers and pressmen relative to the allied trades label. Settled the question satisfactorily and secured label contracts with all the firms employing union printers and pressmen. This places the allied trades label in Birmingham instead of separate labels.

President Lynch instructed me to proceed to Richmond, Va. Arrived in Richmond September 14. The foreman of one of the largest book and job offices demanded his withdrawal card, claiming that he was superintendent and stockholder of the company, and at the next meeting of the stockholders would be elected member of the board of directors. The union refused to grant the request. The foreman then notified the union that he would refuse to pay dues and would consider himself a non-member of the Richmond Union. Held several conferences with the advisory board of No. 90 and the foreman. Later called on Mr. Waddey, president of the Everett Waddey Printing Company, and he made a proposition to the union that it was his intention to place a union foreman in charge of his plant at an early date. The proposition was referred to the union. The union accepted the proposition, with the proviso that the agreement become effective within ninety days from date.

October 3, 1904, visited Chattanooga, Tenn., as per instructions from President Lynch. On April 21, 1902, a contract was entered into between No. 89 and the News Publishing Company for a period of five years. Section 9, of the agreement, provides that proofreaders, when employed, should be active members of the Chattanooga Typographical Union. Manager Pound, of the News Publishing Company, claimed that he is conducting his proof department in the same identical manner as he was when the present scale was signed, and Organizer Phillips stated that the International Typographical Union would waive jurisdiction over the proofreader question as long as he continued to conduct his proofroom in the same manner as he had in the past. Mr. Martin, who signed the scale as president of No. 89, stated that he was present when Mr. Phillips made the statement to Mr. Pound. The members of the executive committee of No. 89 claim that Mr. Pound agreed to place a union proofreader in charge in a year or so. This Mr. Pound denied. At present Mr. Pound has a lady reading proof, who, he claims, is also exchange editor. Mr. Pound also claims that the proofroom is being conducted just like it has been for the past twelve or fifteen years. Mr. Pound made a proposition to the union that he would agree to employ a regular proofreader and pay the scale as provided for in the contract, $17 per week, on January 1, 1907, nearly four months before the present contract expires. This will make the News office strictly union before the contract expires, and when the new contract is presented the proofreader question will have been settled. The executive committee and myself submitted a statement of facts and Manager Pound's letter to President

Lynch for advice. Manager Pound's proposition reads:

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Oct. 4, 1904.

To the Members of the Chattanooga Typographical Union:

In view of the friction that has been caused since the establishment of the Chattanooga News in regard to employing a regular proofreader, and in view of the settlement of the present misunderstanding, or, in other words, construing the contract from April 21, 1902, for five years, as interpreted by Mr. Phillips, the organizer, in which he stated that the union would waive their jurisdiction over the proofreader of the News office, we will, on January 1, 1907, agree to employ a regular proofreader and pay the scale as provided in the present contract, which does not expire until April 21, 1907. At present we are conducting our proofreading and editorial rooms in the same identical manner as we were when the present scale was signed. If we should, however, put on a regular proofreader before January 1, 1907, we agree to employ and pay a regular union proofreader. Very truly, News Publishing Company. (Signed) J. B. POUND,
President and Manager.

President Lynch sent the following answer to the communication sent him by the executive committee of No. 89 and myself:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Oct. 8, 1904.

Mr. W. L. Gardner, Secretary No. 89, Chattanooga, Tenn.:

DEAR MR. GARDNER—Organizer Hill has forwarded me the communication signed by himself and the executive committee of No. 89, relative to the proposition made by Mr. J. B. Pound, president and manager of the News Publishing Company, concerning the employment of a union proofreader. There is also enclosed with your communication a copy of the agreement in effect between Chattanooga Typographical Union No. 89 and the News Publishing Company. In section 9 of said agreement after the word proofreader is inserted "when employed." This insertion was made at the time of the signing of the agreement by Organizer Phillips, and it may or may not have been his intention that so long as the conditions in the proofroom continued as they were at that time, that the union should not insist upon the payment of a union proofreader. Be that as it may, we can not afford to take any chance on violating an agreement, and inasmuch as the section referred to might easily be interpreted one way by the proprietor and another by the union, I advise that the proposition made by the News Publishing Company be accepted by No. 89. For, as stated in the communication from the executive committee, the acceptance of the proposition will make the News office strictly union before the present contract expires, and when the new contract is presented the proofreader question will have been settled. In compliance with your request the agreement, which accompanied the executive committee's communication, is returned to you herewith.

With best wishes, I am, yours fraternally,
(Signed) JAMES M. LYNCH.

Arrived in Montgomery, Ala., Tuesday, November 15, 1904. Attended special meeting of the union. Montgomery being in a deplorable condition, the members of the union decided to request President Lynch to send an organizer to Montgomery for a period of at least ten days after the Christmas holidays.

En route from Montgomery to Jackson, Miss., made a brief visit to Meridian, Miss. Found No. 153 in excellent condition. Every printer in Meridian carries a card. Held a conference with the officers of the union and discussed the eight-hour day.

Arrived in Jackson Thursday, November 17, 1904. No. 363 adopted a new scale August 20, 1904. The publishers refused to accept the new scale. The scale provided for an increase and eight hours. Secured a contract with the Daily News and the Clarion-Ledger for a period of two years from January 1, 1905, to January 1, 1907. The Clarion-Ledger had been non-union for several years, and the contract provides that only members of Jackson Typographical Union shall be employed. The new scale provides for a fair increase and an eight-hour day.

In compliance with instructions from President Lynch, went from Jackson, Miss., to Natchez, Miss. Arrived in Natchez November 20, 1904. In company with the officers of No. 558 called on Manager Dien, of the Bulletin. The Bulletin force is composed of four men, one card man. Two of the other three are sons of Manager Dien. The entire paper is set by hand. Manager Dien had heretofore refused to have a conference with an International representative. After conferring with Mr. Dien for a considerable length of time we ascertained that he had a son in Washington whom he expected to work for him. After January 1 this would give Mr. Dien three sons out of a force of four men. Mr. Dien refused to sign a contract, claiming that his paper is a family affair. I am confident that a contract can be secured when the Bulletin changes from hand to machine compositors. Held conference with J. W. Lambert, publisher of the Morning Democrat. The Democrat has scale contracts with the union. Paved the way for an increase in machine scale when the present contract expires.

On November 20 received telegram from President Lynch instructing me to proceed to Crowley, La., at once. Arrived at Crowley in the afternoon of November 22. Held conference with the officers of No. 570. Ascertained that the Evening News had consolidated with the Daily Signal. Manager B. S. Scott, of the Signal, had left on November 18 for California. Met with Mr. Nixon, who had charge of the Evening News before the consolidation, and who intended to be the director of the Signal and editor of the Weekly after December 1. Mr. Nixon agreed to arrange for a conference with the scale committee of the union and Manager Scott, when Mr. Scott returned to Crowley. Mr. Nixon also stated that he would do what he could to get Mr. Scott to sign the scale contract. As Mr. Scott was not expected to return to Crowley for at least two weeks, left for Mobile, Ala.

On my way home from Crowley, La., stopped off at Mobile, Ala. Met with President Amos and Secretary Russell of No. 27. The newspaper scale is good, while there is room for improvement in the book and job scale. Discussed the eight-hour day.

Arrived in Augusta, Ga., December 5, 1904, as per instructions from President Lynch. Secured contract with the Augusta Chronicle from January 1, 1905, to January 1, 1906, to pay the following scale: Time, $4 per day; piece, 9 cents; eight hours.

While in Augusta received instructions from President Lynch to proceed to Savannah, Ga. Arrived in Savannah December 6, 1904. Found that the vice-president of the union had filed charges with President Lynch, claiming that certain International Typographical Union laws were being violated. After an investigation the charges were dismissed. While in Savannah called on Colonel Estill, of the Morning News. Mr. Estill stated that he had no objections to members of the union working for him and that at a later date he might sign a contract with the local union. At present we have a number of card men on the paper. In company with the chairman of the executive committee, conferred with Messrs. Braid and Button, and made arrangements for the unionizing of that office.

Arrived in Montgomery, Ala., Wednesday, January 11, 1905. Found typographical affairs in a deplorable condition. The new scale provided for an increase of 20 per cent. Secured contracts with five book and job proprietors for the new scale from January 20, 1905, to January 1, 1906. The executive council of the International granted an amnesty for a period of thirty days. In company with President Barnes made a personal campaign among the non-union printers, and succeeded in securing a number of applications.

Visited Jackson, Tenn., Saturday, January 28, 1905. The union had a contract with the Daily Whig. Manager Beard, of the Whig, had refused to pay the foreman the scale. After a lengthy conference Mr. Beard agreed to pay the foreman the scale, which of course settled the matter satisfactorily.

Arrived in Decatur, Ala., Monday, February 13, 1905. Organized a union, composed of printers from Decatur and New Decatur, as New Decatur is only one mile from Decatur and connected by trolley. Ten days later, on my return to Nashville, spent a few hours in Decatur and installed a union. Population of both cities combined about 6,000.

Arrived in Selma, Ala., Thursday, February 16, 1905. Organized a union and applied for a charter. Previous charter surrendered in 1887. Population, 8,713. Morning and afternoon paper.

Arrived in Opelika, Ala., Saturday, February 18, 1905. Secured signatures from every competent printer in Opelika for charter. Population, 4,000. Afternoon and weekly paper. The secretary was instructed to communicate with the printers in neighboring towns and request applications. Previous charter surrendered July 20, 1903.

At the request of President Lynch and President Hill, of No. 104, visited Birmingham, Ala. Arrived in Birmingham March 6, 1905. Conferred with President Hill and the members of the executive committee. Several weeks previous the Age-Herald borrowed matrices, claiming that all the printers were employed and that all the "ads" had to be inserted in the paper the following day. The union agreed with President Barrett, of the Age-Herald, that all the surplus printers were employed and that the ads had to go in the issue the next morning, but the union claimed that according to section 136 of the general laws the Age-Herald should reproduce the borrowed matrices. President Barrett maintained that he had a right to use the borrowed matrices occasionally, and did not think it was fair to have him to reproduce them, as the law reads, "The practice of interchanging, exchanging, borrowing, lending, or buying matter previously used, either in the form of type, or matrices, between newspapers or job offices, not owned by the same individual, firm or corporation and published in the same establishment, is unlawful and shall not be allowed, provided that the reproduction of such type or matrices shall be deemed a compliance with the law." Mr. Barrett also stated that if he had been notified at the time the matrices were used he would no doubt have reproduced them. Mr. Holt, foreman of the Age-Herald, stated that about one-third of the matrices used had been reproduced. Mr. Barrett finally gave me a written proposition, agreeing in the future to reproduce all matrices used, and to notify his foreman to that effect. The proposition was presented to the union at a special meeting and was accepted.

Arrived in Fort Smith, Ark., Thursday, March 23. The Thrash-Lick Company had refused to sign the scale contract, claiming that it would be in violation of the Arkansas anti-trust law. Manager Ounst, of this company, however, gave me a letter stating that the scale would be paid, and they would employ only members of the Fort Smith Union. The Elevator office (Weldon, Williams & Lick) made the following demands: 1. Waive the right of contract. 2. Allow the foremen to withdraw from the union. 3. To allow spacer on Simplex machine to be a non-member of the union. 4. To agree not to try to force eight-hour day, January 1, 1906. Held lengthy conference with Manager Lick, and he positively refused to change a single one of the demands. As proposition No. 2, "to allow foreman to withdraw from the union," would be a direct violation of the International law, we informed Manager Lick unless he would concede this point we would be compelled to declare his office unfair. Mr. Lick declined to make the concession. We notified the International executive council, and they gave Fort Smith Union full power to act. The two afternoon papers published Sunday morning editions, and we could not hold special meetings until Sunday afternoon, and then, too, we wanted to give Manager Lick further time to consider the question. I went to Fayetteville, Ark., sixty-three miles from Fort Smith, and secured the signatures of nine printers for charter and supplies, and sent for charter. Returned to Fort Smith the following morning and again called on Manager Lick, and he said that his answer on Friday was final. We held a special meeting of union Sunday afternoon and passed a motion to declare the Elevator office "unfair" unless they would agree to comply with the laws of the International. Monday morning we called on Manager Lick, and he said he had not changed his mind and would not comply with our laws. We then asked to see the three members of the union working in the establishment. Our request was granted. The three refused to come out. One of them, the foreman, stated that he had decided to withdraw from the union, and, of course, would not come out. The others refused also to quit work. We were not surprised at their remaining at work, as they had not paid dues for several months and had previously notified the officers of the union that they would no longer pay dues. The union met Monday night and expelled the three men for "ratting." This company secured the contract for printing the baseball tickets for the Southern League last year, and in the contract they agreed to use the union label. The terms of the contract were carried out. This year the firm also secured the contract, but Manager Lick claims that the label clause was omitted. En route to Nashville called on President W. M. Kavanaugh, of the Southern League, who resides in Little Rock, Ark., and inquired about the contract made with this firm for baseball tickets. President Kavanaugh stated that he had received a proposition from Mr. Lick to renew the contract of 1904, with the exception that he would have to charge 5 cents advance per thousand on account of increase of cost of cardboard. President Kavanaugh sent the firm a telegram stating that he would not accept the tickets unless they had the union label on them. This company also prints the theater tickets for Jake Wells' circuit, comprising Richmond, Norfolk, Va., Nashville, Memphis, Tenn., Birmingham, Montgomery, Ala., Atlanta, Ga., and one or two other southern cities. The secretary was instructed to write to the typographical unions in these cities and request that a committee be appointed to protest against the use of the product of the firm.

April 6, 1905, attended mass-meeting at Knoxville, Tenn., representing the International Typographical Union. It was one of the most interesting labor meetings that have been held in Knoxville in recent years. The meeting was under the auspices of the central labor union. P. H. Cummings, of Amsterdam, N. Y., represented the American Federation of Labor.

Arrived in Huntsville, Ala., Tuesday, April 25. Called on every competent printer in Huntsville. Secretary Miller, of New Decatur (Ala.) Union, had been in Huntsville a few days prior to my arrival, and he secured four applications for the New Decatur Union. As New Decatur is only twenty-five miles from Huntsville, and the New Decatur Union was only organized several months ago, and since the afternoon Times suspended publication there are only about enough competent printers in Huntsville to hold a charter, we decided that it would be best for the present for the Huntsville printers to affiliate with New Decatur. Secured three applications for New Decatur, which were forwarded to Secretary Miller.

Arrived in Gadsden, Ala., Wednesday, April 27. Organized union and sent for charter and supplies. Secured the signature of J. W. Mills, of Attalla, Ala., to petition for charter. Attalla is a city of 2,000 population and is eight miles from Gadsden.

Held conference with President Sheppard and Manager Vaughn, of Birmingham club, Thursday, April 28, in Birmingham, Ala., in regard to the use of the unfair tickets of Weldon, Williams & Lick, of Fort Smith, Ark. Both gentlemen agreed not to use the unfair tickets, and will have tickets printed in Birmingham with the label. Manager Fisher, of the Nashville club, and President Walter Hill, of the Birmingham Typographical Union, assisted me very materially.

Visited Atlanta, Ga., Friday, May 19, 1905. The employing printers of the southern states met in Atlanta on that date. The convention was a frost. Just before adjournment they passed a resolution condemning the decree of the International Typographical Union for an eight-hour day. I earnestly request the membership to carefully read the report contained in the June issue of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL from an "Employer," who was present at the meeting.

Arrived in Charlotte, N. C., Saturday, May 20, 1905. Sunday addressed eight-hour convention of the typographical unions of the southeast, at which there were present delegates from Georgia, Tennessee, Virginia, North and South Carolina. The next convention will be held in Atlanta, Ga., on Monday, August 28. The following states are embraced in the southeastern association: North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Kentucky, Tennessee and Virginia. About May 1 P. A. Freybourg went to work as foreman of the Queen City Printing and Paper Company, and immediately made application to the union for membership and was granted a permit. The union proceeded to investigate, and on May 13 received a strong protest from New York Union against the admittance of Mr. Freybourg to membership. The union thereupon rejected the application. H. A. Murrell, president Queen City Printing and Paper Company, was notified of the action of the union. Mr. Murrell refused to dismiss Mr. Freybourg. Monday, May 22, called on Mr. Murrell and stated that Mr. Freybourg's application had been rejected, and if Mr. Freybourg remained in his employment our members would refuse to work with him. Mr. Murrell made a vigorous protest against the action of the union, and referred the entire matter to the Master Printers' Association. On Tuesday I met a committee of the association, and the committee agreed that the contention of the union was correct and Mr. Murrell had no right to employ Mr. Freybourg or any other printer who did not have a card. However, the committee asked the union to give Mr. Freybourg sixty days' time to make arrangements for himself and family to leave Charlotte. As the committee from the employing printers' association, and later the association itself, had agreed that the position of the union was correct—that Freybourg could not work for the Queen City Printing Company, and as Freybourg had brought his family from New York to Charlotte, did not have sufficient funds to leave Charlotte, and had made application to become a member, the union decided by a unanimous vote to give Mr. Freybourg till July 1 to leave the employment of the Queen City Printing and Paper Company, and instructed me to enter into a written agreement with the Master Printers' Association to that effect. The agreement was signed by President Caldwell, of the association, and provided that Freybourg can not work in Charlotte longer than July 1, 1905, and must be discharged on or before that date.

In conclusion, I beg to tender my sincere thanks to those members and officials that I met in the course of the year's work for the kindness and courtesy extended to me; to express my keen appreciation of the assistance and counsel of the president and the secretary of the International, and to assert my constant gratitude for the honor of membership in the International Typographical Union. Respectfully submitted,

Nashville, Tenn. ALBERT E. HILL.

ORGANIZER HOGAN.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—It affords me pleasure to report that conditions in the printing business throughout this district are good, from a union standpoint. Some trivial differences have arisen between some of our unions and employers during the past year, but such were amicably adjusted in most cases, and as a whole our unions are prosperous and progressive.

I was called to Idaho Falls, Idaho, on February 2. No controversy resulted from the trouble in that town, and I have recently received a letter from the secretary of that union in which he states he believes the eight-hour day will go into effect there without difficulty.

My visit to Helena, Mont., on March 2 was in consequence of the Independent management refusing to recognize the union mailer when he insisted on receiving the scale of his union. This matter could not be adjusted at the time for the reason that no mailers' union existed in Helena, the displaced mailer being a member of Butte Mailers' Union. Since then the latter organization has had its jurisdiction extended to include Helena, and it is to be hoped that a favorable settlement of the matter will be reached in the near future.

The manager of the Helena Independent has also requested a very considerable reduction in the scale of Helena Typographical Union. He has been advised by that union that the reduction and other changes asked for could not be agreed to by the union. As this matter is at present being handled by a regularly appointed committee from Helena Union, which is in communication with our International officers, it is to be hoped that it will be settled in a conciliatory and satisfactory manner, but present indications point to the contrary.

In Missoula, Mont., on May 8, an eight-hour day was granted in all departments of the Missoulian, the largest office in that city.

Several unions in this district have already secured the eight-hour day, and I believe the obtaining and enforcing of the shorter workday in this district will not meet with any serious opposition—with the possible exception of the Helena Independent.

Every town in this district that contains a sufficient number of printers to hold a charter is organizing. I have done considerable correspondence with the object of getting in non-union printers from towns where no union exists. Have received a few applications, and look for these efforts to bring further results in the near future.

Many of our most active members are deeply interested in the matter of a proposed working agreement between the Commercial Telegraphers and the International Typographical Union, believing that an alliance of this character would be of great mutual benefit, particularly in the cities, where the Associated Press operators' and printers' interests are identical.

Butte Newspaper Writers' Union is flourishing. It has elected a delegate and alternate to the International convention at Toronto.

Thanking President Lynch and Secretary Bramwood for prompt attention to matters of interest to this district, and congratulating them and the membership upon the excellent results accomplished in organizing work during the past year, I am,

Fraternally,

Butte, Mont. JAMES W. HOGAN.

ORGANIZER HUDSPETH.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—Having only recently been appointed an organizer of the International Typographical Union, there is nothing of special importance that I can call to your attention at this time. However, it may be well to note the fact that the spirit of organization is spreading among the isolated printers throughout this section, and were it possible to have delayed this report for a month or six weeks it is my belief that the report would have contained the information that at least five new unions had been formed in the southern jurisdiction. This belief is based upon the contents of letters now in my possession, that have been received from different cities and towns throughout the states of Louisiana and Mississippi.

Prospects for the inauguration of the eight-hour day continue to grow brighter as the time draws nearer for it to go into effect. Respectfully,

New Orleans, La. H. S. HUDSPETH.

ORGANIZER JAMES.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I herewith submit my first report as organizer. Having been appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Hugh Stevenson, my report will only cover three months.

Have visited all the unions between the Niagara and Detroit rivers (except Woodstock). I find most of them in fairly healthy condition. There are a couple, however, that need the injection of new blood to spur them to activity.

As regards the shorter workday: While most of our members are anxious for its introduction, there are exceptions who would prefer an increase in wages. The proprietors in nearly every instance are not in favor of eight hours at present, many of them claiming that Canada should not act until after the United States had it working. There are still others who would not object if the International Typographical Union had asked for the shorter workday in fifteen or thirty minutes at a time, bringing it about gradually; and many of our members are also inclined that way.

Digitized by Google

The wage scale through this district is low, and there is a scarcity of printers caused by men not caring to remain in those towns when they can do better elsewhere.

It would be well if the unions in the vicinity of Brantford, Guelph, London, Stratford, etc., were to form a district, and make an effort to increase wages in this locality. It is practically a competitive belt and it would place the proprietors on equal footing and create a livelier interest in union affairs.

In nearly every town the utmost harmony prevails between the employers and the unions, and in those places where the unions are not healthy the lack of interest is the fault of the members and does not arise from opposition by the employers.

Nearly every union has an eight-hour committee, that is getting in touch with the outsider; and in case it is necessary to strike to enforce the shorter workday we will have little to fear from that quarter.

Some time ago Peterborough Union submitted a new scale which asked for an increase and the eight-hour day in January. The proprietors refuse to discuss the scale unless the hours remain as at present. We are still negotiating.

Respectfully submitted,

Toronto. W. R. JAMES.

ORGANIZER LEACHE.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—Since my appointment as organizer in December, 1904, my work has chiefly consisted in visiting country towns and getting the printers therein interested in unionism; and following this up by sending literature to the parties whose names I secured, both those whose applications for provisional membership I received and those who for one reason or another would not join.

My first trip was in March last, to Navasota, Bryan, McGregor, Temple, Belton, Cameron and Taylor. I secured eight applications for provisional, and two applications for membership in local unions as a direct result of this trip; got several old members whose cards had expired to renew them.

My next trip was at the request of officers of San Antonio Union to towns surrounding San Antonio, from which it was thought the typothetæ of that city would draw for labor. I was accompanied by John R. McGee, of San Antonio, who was sent by that union, and whose acquaintanceship and influence in the towns visited was of great assistance. Our report to San Antonio was substantially that we believe it would be impossible for San Antonio Typothetæ to secure a half dozen printers in the country contiguous to San Antonio. I here want to thank San Antonio Union for its good judgment in the selection of Mr. McGee, and Mr. McGee for the services he rendered. From both these trips I am still receiving queries, and requests for application blanks. I wish to cite one instance of the good results which follow these visits to our country fellow craftsmen: Shortly after my return from the last trip a young man called on me from Yoakum with a letter of introduction. He said that he had come to Austin to accept a situation as an apprentice; that he wanted to see me before going to work; that he did not want to do anything wrong. I was happy to state to him that it was not possible for him to do wrong in this town.

I have had printed, at the expense of the local union (No. 138), a slip requesting members of the union who are acquainted with non-union members to send me their names. I send these out to card men whose names I can secure and give them to transients. I have only had these slips a week at this date (June 5) and am already receiving answers with blanks filled out. I secure from local members all the journals possible, and requested and received from President Lynch about thirty copies. These I send out to printers in the country towns.

Since my appointment as organizer, R. F. Radley has also been appointed organizer in Texas. We were instructed to divide the territory to suit ourselves. We did so on the thirty-second parallel of latitude, he taking all north and myself south.

It was my desire to see personally or communicate with every printer in my territory ere January 1, 1906. It has been almost impossible to secure a "sub," and the office where I am employed has been so rushed with work, that it has been very hard to get out and work, but I have done all I could by correspondence.

I made a trip to Marshall, Texas, the last of May, in an endeavor to get Marshall Union to admit a prominent printer in this state who ratted in Austin, Texas, several years ago. He now owns an office. After two special meetings of Marshall Union, and interviews with prominent citizens and labor men of that city, I decided that Marshall Union was the best judge of whom to admit. The attitude of said party had been so hostile to unionism in general, and Marshall Union in particular, that I could not see where good could come to the typographical union by his admission. I found a small but very intelligent and loyal set of men at Marshall.

Success to our eight-hour movement. Let us all remember the resolution passed at a convention of the International Typographical Union a good many years ago, which commenced, "Whereas, Our country brother in time of trouble is a constant menace," etc., and keep after him until he becomes our brother in very truth and our loyal and stanch friend. This can only be done by seeing him in person and by correspondence, sending him THE JOURNAL and other literature.

Fraternally, C. L. LEACHE.

ORGANIZER M'LOUGHLIN.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—The following report of my work as organizer covers a busy and successful year on the road for the International Typographical Union—probably equaling the number of increased scales in 1903-1904, and increasing the number of agreements for the eight-hour day. The unusual number of scales for increased wages and eight hours stated in last year's report as necessitating a tremendous amount of traveling did not appreciably decrease, the organizer being unusually successful in the months of September and October, when five unions—Nos. 103, 150, 522, 167 and 268—received an increase in money, and three of them—Nos. 150, 167, 268—a reduction in hours to eight and a half or eight on or before January 1, 1905. The only real trouble of the year was at Oneida, N. Y., in October, when Oneida Union No. 336 was compelled, after exhausting all efforts for peaceful outcome, to strike for an increase of scale and recognition. The strike lasted two weeks.

The new scale at Peekskill, N. Y., No. 269—mention of its probable successful negotiation was made in the 1903-04 report of the organizer—was put into effect on June 1, for one year, No. 269 taking the matter up at the May meeting after the practical reorganization of the union in April, 1904. The scale was increased $1.50, making it $13.50 for jobbers and $14 for operators on the linotype. The objection to an increase came from but two offices, which was speedily overcome by a notice to sign the agreement for one year or surrender the International Typographical Union label—the label being an important factor in Peekskill. The awakening to new life of Peekskill No. 269 was largely due to the co-operation of President Aulenbach, who placed his services at the organizer's disposal on my first visit in April, under instructions to insist that No. 269 become a real union. The scale committee consisted of Messrs. T. Cannon, H. Hepworth, C. Johnston, H. Foshay and Secretary W. K. Schwab.

On my return visit to Portland, Me., June 2, I resumed the negotiations interrupted by my hurried trip to Utica and Syracuse on May 11. I held conferences at the Falmouth hotel with the job printers, Mr. Frank N. Strout, of the Tucker Printing Company, representing the employers, as chairman, and President John H. Dooley, of No. 66, representing Portland Typographical Union, with Messrs. W. B. Bradford, W. H. Ohler, Jr., and E. E. Giles as conference committee. The result was a compromise on $15, although hardly satisfactory. It was at first understood that each jobber would receive $1 increase, irrespective of whether he was paid the scale or better. The redeeming feature of the negotiations, culminating on June 10, being an agreement to date the increase from May 2, 1904, for one year, thus permitting No. 66 to prepare for 1905 by perfecting its organization. The further negotiations for the newspaper scale were taken up on June 12, when a meeting of No. 66 decided to place the enforcement of the scale in the hands of the scale committee and the organizer, but the absence of Manager Dow of the Express from Portland necessitated another delay, which finally resulted in a conference and agreement on June 25 to pay $1 increase, night as well as day, with eight and one-half hours' work, the agreement to date from May 2, 1904, for one year, unless sooner opened by No. 66. Managers W. H. Dow, Express; Frank G. Morton, Advertiser; Oscar R. Wish, Eastern Argus, represented the newspapers. No. 66 was represented by President Dooley and Messrs. F. H. Hatch, A. E. Pollard, H. C. Crocker and E. F. Somers, of the newspaper conference committee, who backed up the organizer in his uphill work, he being met at the outset by obstacles and opposition which taxed patience and forbearance to the limit. The social side marked the visits as long to be remembered by one who was a comparative stranger.

The month of June found the organizer, during his spare hours, assisting Brockton (Mass.) Union No. 224 with the Tolman plant, visiting Mr. Tolman at his offices in Boston and Brockton en route to and from Portland; Jersey City No. 94, in concert with Secretary Kenneth M. Forbes, over friction with the American Typefounders' Company at Communipaw, N. J., which was finally settled by President Nelson, at a conference on July 6, agreeing to pay No. 94's scale of $18 for fifty-three hours' work; visiting Paterson and co-operating with President Herbert R. Kelt and Secretary James C. Sigler, No. 195, relative to a program for forcing the Paterson Chronicle into line and negotiations leading up to a successful enforcement of proposed new scale, including the eight-hour day, in all the offices under the jurisdiction of Paterson No. 195; conferring at Montpelier House, Montpelier, June 18-20, with President L'Heureux, No. 384, Mr. W. D. Jones, C. L. U., and Mr. F. J. McCuen, Business Men's Committee; and on June 21 at Lawyer Senter's office with Messrs. Atkins, the Argus, Jones and Darling, C. L. U., and President L'Heureux, in an unsuccessful effort to unionize the Montpelier Argus, the organizer refusing to accept an agreement covering an "open" office, the Business Men's Committee declining to advertise pending a settlement, which was later secured, the organizer covering Lawrence, Lowell, Boston and Brockton, Mass., on the return trip.

In the month of July, as per agreement at Paterson, N. J., in June, undertook to negotiate with President Kelt, No. 195, the proposed new scale, meeting opposition at the outset on the ground that the non-union newspaper and job plant should be made union before raising the scale on the union offices, to which the organizer assented, being a party to No. 195's promise, made in June, 1902, when the scale was increased from $12 to $15. The work proceeded along such good lines that President Kelt and the organizer were able to convince Manager George S. Chiswell, Paterson Press, that the proposition to unionize the plant was a business one and so fair that an agreement for one and one-half years, dating from July 1, 1904, was entered into, the job scale to be $16.50, an increase of $1.50, the office, newspaper as well as job department, to be unionized and pay increase from August 1, 1904, to January 1, 1905, when eight and one-half hours should constitute a day's work; the eight and one-half-hour day to continue to July 1, when the eight-hour day shall constitute a day's work. Signing the above agreement on July 14, had the scale and agreements reprinted next day, expecting to meet with a prompt and agreeable acceptance from the managers, who had practically demanded that something be accomplished before they signed, but to the organizer's surprise and indignation somebody had visited the various plants and agreed to postpone indefinitely the acceptance of the compromise, insisting on three years, hoping thereby to prevent the carrying out of contract with Manager Chiswell and incidentally enforcing No. 195's scale and the eight-hour day. The organizer, with a suspicion of the origin of the compact from former experiences, had conferred with the executive committee and officers of No. 195 and decided to break the combination, at least partially, on the 15th, by telegraphing the situation to the executive council and requesting permission to enforce scale in one morning and one evening newspaper plant, the two-year agreement plus thirty days' negotiations required for new contract having expired, when Managers Henry Berdan and James M. Holt, Paterson Guardian and Call, after considerable friction and unnecessary delay, finally decided to sign on the night of the 15th, followed by Manager E. B. Haines, Paterson Evening News and Volksfreund, on the afternoon of the 16th, the plant of Mr. Haines being one of the largest in Paterson and demanding an amount of "persuasion" out of the ordinary to convince that gentleman that President Kelt, Secretary Sigler and the organizer meant business. July 18 the Passaic Herald, Manager Robert G. Bremner, signed the agreement, completing the list, the smaller plants having already complied. The active co-operation of No. 195's executive officers made the work of the organizer an agreeable task —for the second time in Paterson—and prevented a possible combination, skilfully planned but clumsily executed by one or two managers, which demanded an exhibition of force rarely necessary on the part of the organizer—molasses in goodly quantity being the favored article.

The balance of the month was devoted to trouble with Manager Sarasohn, Jewish Daily News, and Manager Sapherstein, Jewish Morgen Journal, over a refusal to pay a night's pay for extra work in the stereotype department, caused by a breakdown on the Daily News, which was speedily adjusted; a trip to Slingerlands, N. Y., on July 22 and 23, and a conference with Mr. Slingerland relative to unionizing the plant under the jurisdiction of Albany No. 4, accompanied by President Wellington Clark; and the lockout of members of Hebrew-American No. 83, on the East Side of New York, by Mr. Auerbach—three men being involved—over the retention of a non-union printer relative.

August 14 found the organizer busy at Syracuse, by order of President Lynch, over the employment of non-union men on the Lanston monotype machine and caster in the office of Lyman Bros., the men not receiving the scale of Syracuse No. 55. Several conferences were held, a committee of No. 55 accompanying the organizer, arrangements by telegraph being made to supply union operator should the contingency arise, but Lyman Bros. finally offered to pay scale to men employed, which was agreed to by Syracuse No. 55 at a special meeting, the men making application in due form and being elected, thus avoiding trouble.

On August 18 I proceeded from Syracuse to Rome, N. Y., the officers of No. 44 being unable to negotiate the proposed new scale, including hours and wages to be paid on the three linotype machines about to be installed by the Rome Sentinel. Accompanied by President M. J. Seiler, met Manager A. C. Kessinger at the Sentinel office over a proposition to employ expert operators on the three machines, thereby displacing, practically, the entire hand force, most of whom had homes and families dependent on them. The organizer, with the consent of Mr. Seiler, made a proposition to Mr. Kessinger of a reasonable machine scale for one year, provided the members of the Sentinel chapel were given an opportunity to learn the machine, and returned to New York on August 23, promising to return to Rome about September 1.

Returning to Rome on September 6, found that matters had assumed an entirely new aspect, Mr. Kessinger not only objecting to the machine scale, but also the job scale and hours, the new scale fixing the hours at eight, the other employing printers being brought in to strengthen the refusal of the Sentinel. A number of conferences were held at the Stanwix Hall Hotel, Messrs. A. C. Kessinger, W. J. Guernsey, Clark Briggs and A. J. Knauer representing the employers, President Seiler and Frank Allison assisting the organizer. Manager Kessinger finally agreed to employ at least two of the old force on the machines, the learners to serve a ninety-day apprenticeship, thirty days at a two-thirds scale, thirty days at $12.50, and $15 at end of ninety-day period, operators employed on morning papers or a night trick to receive $18, eight hours to constitute a day's or night's work. The job scale and hours were then taken up, and on September 8 an agreement was concluded fixing the wages at $12 per week of fifty-four hours, beginning October 1, 1904, and continuing until April 1, 1905, when eight and one-half hours should constitute a day's work, the agreement expiring September 30, 1905, the organizer refusing to consider a longer-term contract without the eight-hour day being granted the book and job men, the overtime rate at price and one-half proving an almost insurmountable obstacle, but was finally agreed to; the former scale, framed by one of the proprietors, allowing the munificent amount of three cents an hour over the day rate, Sunday included.

The negotiations with the Jewish Daily News, Morgen Journal, Abendpost, Forward, Jewish World and Herald, on behalf of Stereotypers' Union No. 1, President Williams and Vice-President Duffy representing No. 1, were taken up late in August, the three-year agreement with the Eastside papers expiring early in September, No. 1 having decided to enforce full scale of $27. On September 22 a conference was held with Manager Leon Kamaiky and J. Sapherstein, the result of which was a proposition, acceptable to President Williams and the organizer, to pay the scale from October 2, a three-year agreement being presented and signed, Manager Joffey agreeing for the Forward on the installation of a stereotyping outfit later on. Managers Sarasohn and Mintz, Jewish World and Herald respectively, also signed similar agreements during early October, thus placing all the Jewish dailies on the same scale and hours as the English and German morning and evening papers in Greater New York—that is, the boroughs of Manhattan and Brooklyn.

September 1, by direction of President Lynch, the organizer accompanied Secretary Forbes, Jersey City No. 94, to Communipaw, visiting the American Type Founders' plant, relative to the employment of non-union compositors, the visits being continued several times, finally meeting president Nelson, the conference resulting in an agreement satisfactory to No. 94.

Early in September, at the request of President Lynch, the organizer made a trip to Oneida to assist the officers of Oneida No. 336 in enforcing the proposed new scale, being an increase from $10 to $12 for the printers of Oneida, the old agreement having expired, being in existence two years, the employing printers having refused to consider any increase. Arriving in Oneida on September 9, proceeded at once to open up negotiations looking to an amicable adjustment of the pending scale, accompanied by President Charles Carr, visiting the various offices to arrange for a conference on the subject, to be informed that the proprietors desired to settle the matter with the scale committee—composed of one from each office—which proposition was agreed to in order to permit of local committee successfully handling the negotiations and to test the sincerity of the employing printers. The scale committee of No. 336 being unable to do business with the publishers of the Post, Dispatch and Union, who declined to concede any advance in scale, the organizer returned to Oneida on September 27 and tried to reopen negotiations, but unsuccessfully, being compelled, after meeting of No. 336 had voted unanimously to enforce the scale, to report to President Lynch my failure and recommend that the executive council sanction a strike, if necessary, before starting for Newark and Elizabeth, N. J., in response to telegrams from President Edward H. Ashton, No. 103, and Vice-President George J. Reiss, No. 150, requesting my services, negotiations having reached the stage where International Typographical Union intervention was deemed necessary, being postponed temporarily to allow the organizer to close up the Oneida dispute satisfactorily, no trouble being apprehended. Executive council's sanction being granted, returned to Oneida on October 24, after closing negotiations at Newark, Elizabeth and Morristown, N. J., and Schenectady, N. Y., to find that not only were negotiations impossible, but the recognition of any scale, and Oneida Typographical Union No. 336 depended on prompt action, which was taken, three offices being called out on Monday afternoon, the fourth on Tuesday morning, action being deferred until the proprietor returned from Syracuse, every printer responding, the trouble continuing for two weeks, being settled on November 5 at midnight to enable the organizer to conclude his work at Gloversville and Johnstown for Fulton County No. 268 on Sunday and Monday, November 6 and 7, three of the four offices signing an agreement until December 31, 1905. The scale committee consisted of Messrs. Harvey, Thurlow, Schwarz, Bates and Secretary Wixson.

The preliminary work leading up to negotiations at Newark began on September 20, with a conference, the organizer meeting President Edward H. Ashton, No. 103, and Messrs. John H. Daley and F. C. Lampe of the eight-hour committee of No. 103, with a view to outlining a program for the successful enforcing of the new scale, $20 in job offices, fifty-three hours a week until January 1, 1906, when the eight-hour day should prevail, the employing printers, or some of them, objecting to the scale and protesting against the eight-hour day, a circular to that effect having obtained a number of signatures. A visit to some of the largest offices with President Ashton and Chairman Daley, for the purpose of ascertaining the real objections to the increase, showed that the nucleus of a typothetæ had been formed, the members thereof being desirous of perfecting an organization covering all the offices before taking up the question of scale and hours with No. 103, but without success, half the offices refusing to join. Returning to Newark on October 1 via Binghamton, proceeded to active negotiations at Newark, Elizabeth and Morristown, N. J., on October 3, it being necessary to make careful yet rapid moves, as the scales of New York No. 6, Schenectady No. 167 and Fulton County No. 268 were all pending. The conferences at Newark developed the fact that the employers objected to paying more than $19.50, the New York scale, for fifty-four hours, which Newark No. 103, having maintained a fifty-three-hour week since the inception of the nine-hour day, refused to consider, agreeing, however, to join with No. 6 in demanding the eight-hour day, the employing printers finally agreeing to a $19 scale for a fifty-three-hour week on October 17, Newark No. 103 being free to open the present scale at any time. The conference committee representing No. 103, consisting of President E. H. Ashton, J. H. Daley, F. C. Lampe, C. H. Halfinson, J. D. Heun, E. H. Vreeland, refused to recognize the objection made to the organizer's presence during the conference by the typothetæ committee represented by Messrs. Baker, Plum, Shurts, Grover and Hume.

In starting the negotiations at Elizabeth on October 2 by a conference with President W. A. Schultz and the executive committee of Elizabeth No. 150, the organizer was prepared for opposition from the Elizabeth Typothetæ to signing agreements for the eight-hour day, the two-year agreement entered into on Labor day, 1902, having expired, but was surprised to find the representative of the National Typothetæ on the ground at the conference, held in the Journal office on the night of October 10, the organizer having reason to expect a peaceful outcome, which was adjourned to October 11 without result, owing to Manager August S. Crane's illness. At the conference on the 11th, Mr. Crane offered $17.50 for a fifty-three-hour week, the new scale of No. 150 remaining at $17, but requesting that the hours be reduced from fifty-three to forty-eight per week. In refusing Mr. Crane's offer the organizer offered to compromise on an eight-and-one-half-hour day at $17.50 for one year, the eight-hour day to continue at $17.50 for two years—a three-year contract—which was declined and negotiations broken off. The necessary provisions of the general laws being carried out by No. 150, the organizer prepared for trouble by forwarding his report and recommendations to the executive council, also telegraphing to avoid delay in receiving instructions, prompt action being necessary to insure success beyond a shadow of doubt. Before action could ensue, President Schultz called on the organizer at Newark, with a request from the management to resume negotiations, which were taken up and carried to a successful conclusion on October 13, President Lynch being notified by telegraph of the favorable outlook, the contracts and scale being signed on the 14th and 15th by every office, a compromise being accepted for three years at $17.50 from October 17, the contracts to date from October 1. From January 1, 1905, to January 1, 1906, the working hours to be eight and a half for five days each week and eight on Saturday. After January 1, 1906, eight hours to constitute a day's work. A special meeting of No. 150, held on October 14, ratified the action of the officers, scale committee and the organizer, whose efforts for a successful program received hearty support. President Schultz and Vice-President Reiss and Messrs. Blakeny, Vogel, Coleman and McNamara, representing No. 150 in the conferences, Managers Crane and Barton, Elizabeth Journal and Times, and Messrs. Henry Cook and H. L. Staples, the employing printers.

Proceeding at once to Morristown, was able to arrange a conference for the same night, October 15, at the Mansion House, but without reaching a satisfactory conclusion, the representatives of the Jerseyman, Banner, Express and Daily Record objecting to the increase asked ($2) for job printers, although the scale on linotype machines of $18 for forty-eight hours' work was not seriously objected to by the manager of the Daily Record, the conference being adjourned to Monday, October 17. At the final conference on the 17th the organizer accepted an increase of $1.50 for the jobbers, the machine scale to remain at $18, the contract to continue in force for one year, being signed the same night by the proprietors of the Express, Jerseyman and Banner, Mr. Tomlinson, Daily Record, signing the next day. President Judson Davis and Secretary Benjamin Sayre represented Morristown No. 522 in the successful negotiations.

While handling the negotiations at Newark and Elizabeth, Secretary Lambruskin, of Somerville No. 628, called on the organizer at Newark relative to No. 628's new scale, which was successfully enforced, the agreements covering the period from October 1, 1904, to December 31, 1905, fifty-three hours constituting a week's work, between the hours of 7 A. M. and 6 P. M., being eight on Saturday, and forty-eight hours a week's work, between 5 P. M. and 3 A. M., the minimum scale to be $12, with 30 cents per thousand ems for piece work and $15 for linotype operators, the night scale to be an increase of 50 cents per night above day rate. The foremen also received an increase of $1.50. Somerville No. 628 has decided to organize Bound Brook as part of No. 628, in preparation for the eight-hour day, the organizer handling Flemington, N. J. The scale committee consisted of President Mulholland, Secretary Lambruskin and Chairman George Drobney and Frank Lauzon.

The organizer returned to New York on October 18, being notified by President Lynch that Schenectady No. 167 desired his services at once. On arriving at Schenectady the morning of October 20, proceeded to the Vendome Hotel, where President Mahar, No. 167, joined me. We at once went to Manager A. C. Liecty's office and arranged for a conference the same night at the Gazette office, Mr. Liecty kindly placing his room at the organizer's disposal. The conference proved useless, so far as reaching an agreement was concerned, Mr. Liecty refusing to concede No. 167's demand for an increase from $15 to $16 respectively, nine hours, to $18 and $21, eight hours, but agreeing that eight hours should be the basis of further negotiations, not only for the hand-side of the papers, but for book and job work, the meeting adjourning to the 21st. At the second and third conferences various propositions were submitted and discussed pro and con until on the 22d, late in the afternoon, the publishers' committee and the scale committee of No. 167 agreed to place before a special meeting of Schenectady Typographical Union, called for the purpose that night, an agreement for a term of two years from December 16, 1904, the scale for hand men and jobbers to be $16 for day work and $18 for night work, eight hours to constitute a day's or night's work, which was ratified, the agreement with the Gazette being signed the same night, the other offices later on, to enable the organizer to move on—Gloversville, Johnstown and Oneida demanding prompt attention. The agreement signed at Schenectady was admittedly a good one from every point of view, especially the eight-hour clause, placing No. 167 in the van of cities in the Mohawk Valley, and very materially assisting the organizer in his work, for which the officers and scale committee deserve to be congratulated. Managers A. N. Liecty, Gazette; James H. Callanan, Daily Union; B. H. Hatmaker, Star, represented the publishers and employing printers. No. 167's scale committee consisted of Frank E. King, Martin A. Sommers, Joseph Weider, E. J. H. Caldwell and Eugene Van Dyke.

The preliminary work at Gloversville and Johnstown began on October 23, the organizer stopping over that night at the Kingsborough en route to Oneida, hunting up former President James Eaton at his home, talking over the situation and agreeing to return, after notifying President Lynch of the outlook and necessity for speedy adjustment, about October 26, being compelled to postpone until the 31st, the trouble at Oneida having meantime occurred. Opening negotiations on the 31st, had barely arranged for a conference, when word of a possible settlement at Oneida, from President Carr, compelled a hurried trip on November 1. Returning on November 2, continued with success the interrupted work, the publishers and job printers treating the matter of an increase in scale by No. 268 with due consideration, the organizer holding a number of conferences with Managers Collins, Daily Leader, and Furness, Morning Herald, and Messrs. John B. Judson and J. W. Snyder at Gloversville and Manager Combes, Daily Republican, at Johnstown, before closing the negotiations on a proposition to increase everybody $1 from November 1 and decrease the hours to eight and a half from January 1, 1905, the agreements to remain in force for the period ending December 31, 1905. Consulting President Bennett, No. 268, before finally agreeing to sign contracts, a regular meeting of the union was held on Saturday, November 5, which ratified the organizer's work and adjourned to Sunday, when I returned from Oneida and presented the agreements to two of the publishers, who signed, the remaining agreements being signed on Monday at Gloversville and Johnstown, permitting of my return to New York on election day.

The renewal of the agreements at Tarrytown and Ossining by No. 523 on the eight-hour basis for one year from October 1, 1904, showed that friction existed in at least one office, the officers of No. 523 writing the organizer and requesting his good offices in adjusting the matter. On November 9 to 11 visited Tarrytown and Ossining, talking over the disputed points with interested parties and signing the contract at Ossining and delivering the same to Chairman A. J. Ford, scale committee, at Tarrytown, his colleagues being Howard Van Tassel and Secretary W. W. Lee.

During the months of November and December the organizer initiated the work at Plainfield, N. J., long deferred, which resulted in the adoption of a uniform scale by Plainfield No. 399, increasing the hand men and job printers $2 and the linotype operators $3, making the day scale $14 and $18 respectively, with a fifty-three-hour week; the night scale on the linotype being fixed at $21, eight hours' work. The new scale took effect on April 3 and expires December 31, 1905. The officers and members of No. 399 are pleased over the results obtained, Plainfield having heretofore failed to respond promptly to the organizer's appeal for an increased scale.

The work of the organizer at Stamford and Greenwich, Conn., and Port Chester, N. Y., during December and January, proved on the whole unsatisfactory and failed to produce results—Stamford No. 503 being the solitary exception the past year. On a visit there recently a program was mapped out with the officers, which promises in the near future to place No. 503 in a position to enforce its scale in every office and pave the way for January 1, 1906.

In connection with work at Elmira and Binghamton, for the stereotypers, and at Norwich, N. Y., during December, over the contracts for Norwich No. 453, began the work which resulted in signing the new scale of Norwich Typographical Union, dating back to September 15, when the agreements expired, the unique feature of the scale being that after No. 453 had increased its amount to $11, one proprietor had it reduced again to $10, then declined to sign agreement on the ground that the machine scale of $14 was too high, desiring it reduced to $12.50, which request was finally refused—the gentleman in question paying $15, the night scale of $16 being agreed to, and contracts signed on February 1 to expire September 15.

On January 2 President Lynch notified the organizer to proceed to Batavia and assist No. 511 in negotiations for the eight-hour day. Arrived at Batavia on January 5, and located at the Richmond, holding a conference with the executive committee the same night and arranging to take up the negotiations with Manager Griswold, Daily News, next day. The conference not proving satisfactory, was adjourned to the 7th, a regular meeting being held the night of the 6th, the organizer making a report and stating Manager Griswold's position on the eight-hour proposition, with a recommendation, which was unanimously adopted, the whole matter being placed in my hands for adjustment. Notifying Manager Griswold of the decision of the meeting and offering a tentative proposition for consideration by the firm, Griswold & McWain, proposed a final conference on Monday morning, January 9, which was agreed to, the organizer departing for Buffalo and attending No. 9's meeting on Sunday afternoon. Returning to Batavia on January 9, the proposition made on the 7th was discussed and finally accepted, after some modifications, the eight-and-one-half-hour day to take effect on April 3, hand as well as machine men to enjoy the reduction of hours, the eight-hour day to take effect on January 1, 1906, the contracts to remain in force for three years from January 1, 1905, being signed on January 9 and 10, every proprietor agreeing. The committee of No. 511 who assisted the organizer in handling the negotiations were: Wilson C. Parker, Frank C. Fix, Frank R. Mullen, William H. Rial and Herbert J. Donovan.

In the month of January the organizer visited Binghamton in connection with work at Norwich, N. Y., and with President John F. Freeman outlined the work that immediately preceded the negotiation and successful enforcing of the scale of Binghamton No. 232 in March that placed the Parlor City in line with most of the cities of central and western New York as regards scale, and a trifle ahead as to hours of work. On my second visit, in January, the negotiations for the book and job scale were postponed to enable the employing printers to form an organization to maintain prices on work in view of No. 232's increased scale and eight-hour proposition for the hand men, the linotype operators enjoying the shorter workday in book as well as newspaper offices, the hand men working nine hours in the newspaper offices. With President Freeman held a conference at the Bennett before interviewing the managers and requesting a conference on the newspaper scale, which was readily granted; Manager Dickinson, Binghamton Republican, kindly placing his office at our disposal, the first conference being held on January 30, but without result, being adjourned to February 3, when a proposition was submitted covering a period of three years from March 2, when the two-year contracts in existence expired, the publishers' committee insisting on a five-year agreement at figures submitted, or a three-year contract at 50 per cent of amount of increase asked, both counter-propositions, by request, going before No. 232's regular meeting on Sunday, February 5, to be rejected, and the committee's recommendation adopted by more than the necessary two-thirds vote, thereby becoming the scale of Binghamton No. 232. Notifying the publishers of the action of Sunday's meeting, returned to New York on February 7 with the idea that the newspaper scale was practically complete, barring some slight changes, and was preparing for notification to take up job scale, but was soon undeceived by a notice of special meeting called to consider the propriety of not ratifying any newspaper agreement until the book and job scale negotiations had been reported to a meeting of No. 232 and ratified. The whole business, luckily, being again referred to the scale committee and the organizer, for final negotiation and report to adjourned meeting of No. 232 held on February 26, I returned to Binghamton on the 23d, attending a conference at the Republican office that night, which, failing to reach an agreement, was adjourned to the 25th at my urgent request, the meeting on the 26th being sure to take action, when an agreement was reached late that night and ratified next day by No. 232's meeting, the vote standing 56 to 1. The contracts going into effect on March 4 were not signed pending the negotiation of the stereotypers' and electrotypers' scale, which was successfully concluded during the month of May by President James J. Freel. The scale and agreement being my first five-year contract, present the scale in full, as follows:

The following-named gentlemen represented the newspapers and job offices: Managers Salmon, Beardsley, Dickinson, Southworth, Reynolds. The sub-committee representing No. 232 was President Freeman, Treasurer Fahey and Messrs. Dickelman and Morrison.

On February 10 and 11 made a trip to the Oranges, there being a hitch in the negotiations relative to signing contracts for the year 1905, the scale of Orange No. 424 remaining at figures and hours prevailing during 1904.

Returning on the 14th, held a conference with President Frank W. Baldwin, president of the employing printers' association, which resulted in the contracts being signed on the 16th, President George Symons accompanying the organizer and signing for No. 424, William Hamler, of the executive committee, being taken ill during the negotiations.

On the return from Binghamton via Syracuse, stopped over at Poughkeepsie on March 13, conferring with President T. S. Capron and the scale committee of Poughkeepsie No. 315 as to program to be followed in successfully enforcing increased scale and signing contracts for eight-hour day on January 1, 1906, the agreements having expired on the 2d, with thirty days' time to negotiate new contracts, three offices declining to sign any agreement, the proprietor of one being at Bermuda, too ill to attend to any business but expected to return during the month. In company with President Capron, the organizer insisted that pending further negotiations all the offices not signing the contracts should agree to pay the increase, $1, from March 2.

On my return to Poughkeepsie, March 31, began active negotiations for the completion of the work of signing by the three offices, namely, the News-Press, the Eagle and the Enterprise, the continued illness of Manager Brown, of the Enterprise, on his return to Poughkeepsie naturally delaying the proceedings and necessitating a number of visits and conferences, Manager Doheny, News-Press, finally breaking away from the combination and signing the scale and agreement for one year from March 2, the eight-hour clause being appended, and fixing the date as of January 1, 1906. President Capron and myself then redoubled our efforts to close the matter without resorting to the tactics of two years ago, the publishers evidently being surprised at the organizer's peaceful declarations, that being part of the program agreed to by President

Capron at our conference in March and faithfully carried out, proving a winner with Messrs. Platt and Lansing, representing the Eagle and the Enterprise, who finally signed on April 18—including the eight-hour day, the bone of contention. The scale committee of No. 315 consisted of A. D. Albertson, William Ringwood, Charles Hansman, William F. Lange and Secretary D. M. Crombie.

The two-year agreement of Hebrew-American No. 83 having expired late in February, book and job as well as newspaper scale being involved, the organizer, accompanied by Presidents Rosenson, No. 83, and McCullough, Mailers No. 6, undertook to enforce No. 83's new scale and Mailers No. 6 old scale, the East Side dailies, or most of them, refusing to recognize or pay Mailers No. 6 scale, notwithstanding the English and German dailies have a three-year agreement expiring in September. On March 16 to 20 visited the various newspaper offices, conferring with Managers Kamaiky, Sapherstein, Joffey, Franklin, Mintz and Jannofsky in an effort to bring about a joint conference, without result, a combination of several of the papers being partly effected with a view of preventing any uniform agreement as to scale and hours being signed, but finally, on the 20th, Managers Kamaiky, Sapherstein, Joffey and Franklin agreed to a conference on the 21st at Clinton Hall at 3 P. M. The meeting on the 21st was attended by Managers Kamaiky, Sapherstein and Franklin, Manager Joffey backing out; President Rosenson and the scale committee of No. 83; President McCullough, Mailers No. 6; President Williams, Stereotypers No. 1 and the organizer. On behalf of the publishers present, Manager Kamaiky offered to make the operators' scale $20 for five hours' work instead of $18 for four hours, as laid down in No. 83's new scale, the floor men to receive $22 for eight hours' work as proposed by the new scale. In declining Mr. Kamaiky's offer, which was anticipated on behalf of the combination, the organizer offered to substitute $30 for seven hours' work on the machines, $27 for the floormen, the first year, and $32 and $30 respectively for the second year, the contracts to remain in force three years from date of signing agreements. Mr. Kamaiky declining to consider the above proposition, the conference finally agreed to accept $16 per week for the first year from March 26 and $17 from March 26, 1906, the contracts to continue for two years, four hours to constitute a day's work and three hours a night's work. The figures represent an increase of $1 each year. Floormen in machine offices to receive $22 per week of forty-six hours, eight hours to constitute a day's work for five consecutive days and six hours on the sixth day. The proceedings being agreed to by a unanimous vote, after discussion, two of the committee favoring the five-hour proposition, President Rosenson and the organizer proceeded to visit the book and job offices, meantime having the scale and agreements reprinted, and signing with Managers Kamaiky, Jewish Daily News, and Sapherstein, Abendpost and Morgen Journal, on the 24th, a meeting of No. 83 being called for that night to ratify the agreement with the publishers, when the five-hour proposition of the publishers was sprung and an attempt made to defeat the carrying out of agreements already signed, backed by two of the committee and a publisher who declined to sign pending result of the meeting, which, fortunately, ratified the action of President Rosenson and the organizer, saving No. 83 trouble and the organizer a disagreeable duty. Following up the work promptly, signed Manager Franklin, Jewish World, since suspended as a result of the combination; Manager Joffey, the Forward; Michael Mintz, Jewish Herald, and Manager Jannofsky, Freie Arbeiter-Stimme. The scale of Hebrew-American Typographical Union No. 83 is herewith presented in full as unique in hours and scale conditions, the floormen receiving an advance of $4 and the jobbers $3, besides a reduction of two hours in time:

Taking up the book and job scale negotiations with President Rosenson, was successful in signing at once all but three firms—Messrs. Friedman, Litwak and Schreiber—who not only refused to pay the $3 increase but, pending negotiations, locked out their six compositors on April 3, the trouble lasting about a week, the withdrawal of the labels bringing matters to a settlement, the men returning to work the week of April 10.

With President McCullough, Mailers No. 6, pushed the negotiations relative to recognition of the mailers' scale, organizing the Jewish Daily News and the Forward mail rooms on the scale basis, a fire in the Jewish Herald preventing that paper being brought into line, and later forcing Manager Sapherstein to reinstate a member of Mailers No. 6, formerly employed by the Jewish World and taken over after suspension, then discharged and place filled by boys; a good showing and in marked contrast to the pressmen, who have organized only one paper, the Forward, while the International Typographical Union has practically organized all the mechanical departments of the five dailies printed on the East Side.

While preparing to return to Poughkeepsie and close the work there, visited Mount Vernon on April 13 to assist Mount Vernon No. 387 in securing agreements for the eight-hour day, the contracts having expired on April 1; my previous visit, in February, being for the purpose of ascertaining what No. 387 proposed doing as regarded the shorter workday, already in operation at Yonkers, Tarrytown, etc. The organizer was pleased to ascertain that No. 387 had decided to enforce the eight-hour day on January 1, 1906, the old scale of wages to remain in force, signing three offices, the contracts dating from April 1 for one year. President Walter B. Rockett, Secretary Charles F. Moehring, Fred W. Graves, J. Geoghegan and P. O'Rourke constituted No. 387's scale committee.

The month of April saw the perfecting of an organization of newspaper men, charter being granted as Newspaper Writers No. 5.

On closing work at Poughkeepsie, April 18, proceeded to Troy, stopping at the Rensselaer, notifying President John E. Ranney of my arrival, holding a conference there the same night and arranging to attend No. 52's regular meeting the next night for instructions. The meeting, after hearing communication from the typothetæ read naming conference committee, voted to place the matter of negotiations for new scale and eight-hour day in the hands of the officers, eight-hour committee and the organizer, with full power. Accompanying President Ranney, the organizer called on E. H. Lisk, the chairman of the employers' committee although not a member of the local typothetæ, stating No. 52's readiness to confer with the employing printers named in the communication, but not as a typothetæ, the majority of the employers, including the largest office, having declined to take any part in or attend a meeting called by Mr. Blanchard, of New York Typothetæ, earlier in the month. Arranging a meeting with Mr. Lisk for Saturday, April 22, at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, President Ranney, his eight-hour committee and the organizer held several sessions before settling on a proposition, finally deciding on a contract for a term of three years from May 7 or 14, which was presented as a tentative proposition to the conference on the 22d, which adjourned without arriving at an agreement to April 26, Mr. Lisk's engagements preventing an earlier date for second conference, the organizer returning to New York and spending Easter Sunday at home. The second conference was also held at the Fifth Avenue Hotel on the 26th, as agreed, a representative of the national typothetæ appearing on the scene and objecting to the eight-hour clause being considered when the organizer, on behalf of Troy No. 52, requested that the tentative proposition for a three-year agreement be discussed and agreed to, President Ranney and his committee refusing to consider a one-year agreement without the incorporation of the eight-hour clause, the conference adjourning to the 27th at 3 P. M. for a final session. In the meantime President Ranney and the organizer determined to find out the sentiment of the other employing printers, representing over sixty per cent of the job printers of Troy, visiting every office, and in no case meeting with a refusal. The conference on the 27th was short and very unsatisfactory, one employer absenting himself and preventing a unanimous acceptance of the original proposition, which, however, was finally settled at the meeting on the 28th, the proposition being accepted and the signing of the agreements postponed pending the arrival from Europe of Hon. Charles S. Francis, Troy Times, whose agreement with the International Typographical Union did not expire until May 9—covering the Troy Times Art Department as well as the newspaper plant. On Mr. Francis's arrival in Troy, May 10, President Ranney and the organizer opened negotiations, a special meeting of No. 52 being called in order to report cause of delay in fixing definite date, which resulted in agreement being reached on the 11th and signed on the 12th, the date of taking effect being mutually fixed for the 20th, the figures being those contained in the original proposition, every office signing the agreements, as follows:

BOOK AND JOB SCALE OF PRICES.

In effect for three years from May 20, 1905.

Seventeen dollars per week, nine hours constituting a day's work from May 20, 1905, to December 31, 1905; $17 per week, eight hours constituting a day's work from January 1, 1906, to May 20, 1907; $18 per week and eight hours per day from May 20, 1907.

Machine Scale.—Compositors employed on machines on book and job work shall receive not less than $20 per week, day work, and $23 per week, night work. Where a compositor is employed part of a day at hand composition and part on machine, the machine scale of wages to govern.

The work at Troy was made comparatively easy by the unanimous support accorded the organizer through President Ranney, his committee and the membership of No. 52, and the fairness of the employers' committee, the negotiations proceeding along harmonious lines, the result being that No. 52's relations with the employing printers of Troy are very cordial and Troy No. 52 has succeeded in enforcing a first-class scale. The employers' committee consisted of Messrs. Lisk, Stowell, Snyder, Russell and Meekin, No. 52 being represented by President Ranney, Secretary Hartnett and Charles Rogers, Lewis Price and John Burgess of the eight-hour committee.

With President Ranney and Secretary Hartnett made two trips to Cohoes in the interest of a higher scale and the eight-hour day, attending No. 325's meeting on Monday, May 15, when the committee reported, the proposed scale coming up for consideration, adoption and possible enforcement before this report is printed and distributed.

In the work of organization, the organizer has paid visits to a large number of places and broken the ground for further work, both in New York state and New Jersey, and hopes to be successful in placing charters therein before many months.

The organizer again desires to thank the officers and members of the various unions visited for the uniform courtesy extended, the earnest and hearty co-operation and the invariable thanks expressed on successful conclusion of the work intrusted to his charge, the only regret being that my humble efforts were not always successful in carrying out the letter as well as the spirit of the scales enforced.

In conclusion, desire to tender my sincere thanks to President Lynch and Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood for their prompt and unqualified support at all times during the year, their courteous treatment, and to congratulate them on keeping the International Typographical Union in the front rank of progressive, conservative trade unions.

Fraternally submitted,

ORGANIZER RADLEY.

To the Officers and Members of the International Union:

Ladies and Gentlemen—The short period of four months since my appointment as organizer has been rather a busy one and has been productive of some good results. The full advantage and gain for our organization sought in each case has not always been achieved, but I feel some satisfaction in the thought that a good step forward has been taken. Conditions in north Texas, Indian Territory and Oklahoma are encouraging and not nearly so grave as had been feared.

I have to report the relinquishment of two charters, namely: Terrell, Texas, and Guthrie, Okla. The former was given up about the time of my appointment. I made a trip there, but it was not possible to revive the charter or reorganize. As our craft there is represented by so few men, and there are almost no other crafts organized there, the printers can do little. Guthrie (Okla.) Union surrendered its charter about May 16. I reorganized it on May 28, on what seems a better basis. The situation there is peculiar and difficult. But plans have been made and a program of work commenced that I hope and believe may enable me to report important progress before many months.

While two charters in this immediate section have, as recited above, been surrendered, I take pleasure in stating that within the past four months five new charters have been issued. This, of course, includes Guthrie, Okla., Ardmore, I. T., and Mineola, Texas, the latter two of which I did not organize. Denton, Texas, and Tulsa, I. T., each has a new union, and at last accounts their future looked bright.

There has been friction here and there. The most of it occurs over the making of new contracts in which the eight-hour day is provided for after January 1, next. All are eagerly watching the trend of events in the larger cities.

I find the literature of the typothetæ everywhere, but their leaven is not working well. Small employers in the outlying towns are discovering, and I am, in many instances, helping them to discover, that there is little in common between them and the big guns of the typothetæ—those who direct its destiny in an official way. The typothetæ sends them a circular desperately imploring, I can almost imagine, on their bended knees, the small employer to join them in their fight against us and to send them a contribution of ten ($10) dollars; and all the while the traveling representatives of the aforesaid "big guns" come into the town where the small employer lives, and do business and take away the business of the mercantile houses, county offices and banks, which rightly belongs to said small employer. And there are other things, but the above situation helps us most, perhaps.

My trip to Ennis, Texas, removed a very threatening factor in that union. Disruption was threatened, and this leads me to say this: That most of the trouble in this part of the country in small unions seems to arise from the fact that men not permanent citizens, with little common sense and worse judgment, get in control. This fact makes the life of small unions more or less precarious and uncertain.

My trip to Waco was not altogether satisfactory, but it clearly defined the trouble between an employer there and the union. Our membership there had dealt fairly and honorably, and had been long suffering with the employer mentioned, but had received insults and dishonorable treatment in return. Said employer chafed at last, as he was ignored by them, and his business suffered. But he is stubborn and wishes to make the terms. This I refused to allow. His office is still closed.

My trip to Indian Territory and Oklahoma took in the following cities and towns: Ardmore, Durant, South McAlester, Muskogee, Shawnee, Oklahoma City, El Reno, Guthrie, Chandler, Tulsa and Hartshorne. To Durant and South McAlester I had to return. In the former I had expected to organize a union, but at the last moment the men there lost their nerve on account of the attitude of one employer. At South McAlester I attended the session of the Twin Territorial Federation of L-bor as a fraternal delegate. I succeeded in getting adopted a good eight-hour resolution, in which they endorsed our efforts to establish it. Also I secured the adoption of resolutions from several of the territory unions, and one strong one by myself, declaring vigorously against the Guthrie State Capital of Guthrie, Okla. There were many co-operating farmer delegates from farmers' unions present, and several of the strong speakers among them got up and declared themselves as willing and anxious to take this matter back to their locals, and that they would help us materially in the contest. There are more than 60,000 organized farmers in the territories, and they are creating a greater demand for union labels of all kinds than any other element of the citizenship. They do not affiliate with the American Federation of Labor, but are seeking to co-operate with us in every way possible, to the end that some plan may be evolved so that we, as organized laborers, may purchase more directly from them without the intervention of middlemen; and that they, by demanding our labels and cards, may secure our friendship and co-operation. It is a happy reciprocal relation and has great promise in it.

I cleared up and harmonized some financial differences in the territory unions, and assisted in correcting several misunderstandings. I picked up several traveling cards and deposited them with nearby locals, and I had many conversations with employers. I believe, that in a general way, the sections I visited in Oklahoma and Indian Territories are much strengthened in the interest of our International organization. Some results of the trip are yet problematical, as it is too recent to make a full estimate.

With the sincerest hope that the present session of the International Typographical Union may be marked by the wisest and best acts, I am Fraternally, R. F. Radley.

ORGANIZER RUST.

On December 30 I received a telegram from President Lynch, instructing me to go to Portland, Ore., immediately, on account of scale trouble. I did so, and arrived there on Saturday morning, December 31. The conditions I found were as follows: The union had raised the book and job scale from $19.20 for eight hours to $21 for eight hours. The employers had refused to meet the raise and had demanded a nine-hour day at the old rate per hour, which demand, after some parleying, had been modified so as to demand eight and one-half hours at the old rate per hour instead of nine hours. To this demand the union replied that they had receded from their original demand entirely, but would stand on the scale of last year. This ended the negotiations, and when the new year began the scale of the previous year was paid without protest. I called on the stereotypers while there and found them in good condition. Also called on the waiters, who were apparently having a hard struggle.

On January 5 I received a telegram to go to North Yakima, Wash., on account of scale trouble. I was at the convention of the Washington State Federation of Labor then in session at Everett, Wash., and immediately wrote the officials at North Yakima to do nothing pending my arrival. I arrived there on the 10th of January. Found the usual country town conditions there—advertisers with city ideas and printing offices with country facilities. The membership of the union is very small. The scale of the union had been $15 per week, nine-hour day, but most of the men were receiving more than the scale. The boys were endeavoring to establish a new scale providing for the shortening of the day fifteen minutes every three months for one year. They had utterly failed, the employers claiming that they would have to grant the eight-hour day on January 1, 1906, anyway, and that should be sufficient. Another source of annoyance was the transfer of matter, there being but one office in the place with facilities to set a large advertisement. This made it almost impossible to do away with transfer of matter or to reproduce it. I secured settlement as follows: The hours during this year are to be eight hours for three days and nine hours for three days each week; each the long and short days to be established by each office for that office and remain the same during the year. The pay per day is to remain the same as heretofore. For transferred matter the union is to receive two cents per inch. This price was decided upon through the existence of a contract with the best office in town, whereby it furnished the transferred matter at two cents.

During the month of May, this year, I received a telegram instructing me to go to Everett. I was in the East at the time, and the matter was turned over to George W. Ficks, ex-president of No. 202, who went there and found some complications which were readily adjusted.

Trouble has been threatening at times at Bellingham for some months, but nothing serious has occurred and I anticipate no trouble of importance.

Trouble has been hovering over No. 202 for some time, but has now passed away with no bad effects. No. 202 at its April meeting asked for an extension of jurisdiction over Georgetown, Columbia, West Seattle, Bremerton and Renton, Wash. The matter was referred to President Lynch and the request was granted.

The printing business in this section of the country is good and no troubles are threatening at present. We expect the inauguration of the eight-hour day with little or no trouble. In fact, most of the locals in this jurisdiction have already secured the eight-hour day or better.

Fraternally, F. A. Rust.

ORGANIZER RODIER.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

Ladies and Gentlemen—Since last year I have succeeded in forming the journalists of the French language in Montreal into a union. This organization was started with much trouble, but I think that it will work with the best results now.

I tried to organize the typographers of St. John, a small town not far from Montreal, but I have not succeeded yet. However, I believe I can found a union there.

I also think that this summer I will form a union in Sherbrooke. This is another small town, ninety miles from Montreal, and there are about twenty-five typos there.

I hope that next year I will have a better report to send you. Yours truly, J. A. RODIER.

ORGANIZER SCOTT.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—In presenting my first annual report as organizer of the New England district, covering a period of seven months, from October 31, 1904, to May 31, 1905, I desire at this time to thank the officers and members of the various local unions for the many courtesies they have shown me and valuable assistance rendered. Many of the difficulties that have arisen in the district have been overcome by the officers and members of the locals affected using good judgment and desiring at all times to administer justice to all concerned.

I also desire to thank President Lynch and Secretary Bramwood for their readiness to assist the organizer in this district. There has been a complete understanding at all times of all matters affecting the district between the executive council and the organizer.

I have been kept constantly at work by the executive council, they believing that the eight-hour day for the book and job trade should receive as much consideration as it was possible to give it. And further efforts will be made to put our New England locals in a position that will enable them to secure the eight-hour day.

Up to the time of making out this report, May 31, 1905, most all the local unions of New England have been visited in the interest of the eight-hour movement, and before the end of the year 1905 it is hoped that all of the locals in the New England jurisdiction can be covered. Eight-hour meetings have been held, many trips have been made to confer with eight-hour committees, and everything possible has been done to give all the attention to the eight-hour movement that could be spared from the other work in the district.

About twenty or twenty-five cases of differences between our local unions and employers have been handled, and all, with the exception of the one in Meriden (mention of which is made later in this report), have resulted in a favorable verdict for the union involved in the controversy. There have been a few instances where matters have been referred to the organizer that were not of sufficient importance to open negotiations.

It has been the aim of the organizer not to launch any of our unions on the sea of trouble until every means of getting a peaceable settlement had been exhausted. And, I believe, that the results obtained have proven this to be the proper course. In but very few cases has it been necessary to ask for the sanction of the executive council to inaugurate a strike, and in such cases a quick settlement has followed.

In the seven months I have been on the road, under the direction of the executive council, about 12,000 miles have been traveled.

Three new unions have been organized in the district in the past seven months. Two of these were organized through the efforts of John H. Dooley, of Portland, Me., and L. V. Clark, of Augusta, Me. No charters have been surrendered.

My failure to be in certain cities exactly at the time desired by local unions can only be laid to one cause—that I have found it a physical impossibility to be in more than one city at a time. But in all instances the different locals, large or small, have been given an equal amount of consideration when requests were made for the organizer.

At this writing arrangements are being made to have President Lynch and the organizer visit at least one city in each New England state and conduct eight-hour meetings, all those interested in the undertaking believing that it will result in much good and have a further tendency to strengthen our position in this locality.

There have been several attempts on the part of the employing printers throughout New England to put into effect conditions that would weaken our organizations. All of these have been combated by our various locals with such a spirit of resistance as to convince the employers that we do not intend to give up any of the things we have gained in the past through our organizations, and we have not only been able to retain what we have, but in many cases we have gained better conditions. And in the future the same policy will be followed by our local unions.

The work of organizing the district is being carried on by the various locals in a manner that will surely bring gratifying results. We are constantly calling to the attention of the unorganized printers the benefits to be derived from affiliation with not only the oldest, but, with pardonable pride, we may say, the best labor organization in existence—the International Typographical Union.

The following is a résumé, in brief, of the various matters handled by the organizer:

On October 31 I was directed by President Lynch to proceed to Lowell, Mass., to assist the union in putting through a new scale of wages. After several conferences, covering a period of three days, a proposition was made by the employers to have the matter held in abeyance for three months. The local committee agreed to present the matter to the union. The sentiment of the union was against accepting the proposition, but it agreed to withdraw the demand for more money and endeavor to get a reduction of one hour per day on day work on newspapers—from nine to eight. We held two meetings with the proprietors and were successful, it being agreed that on the first Monday in December, 1904, the change should take place. President Spead and Vice-President McHugh acted with the organizer in all the negotiations, and it was largely through their efforts that the new scale was put through successfully.

I was next instructed by President Lynch to go to Pittsfield, Mass., and find out the condition of the local union in that city, it being reported in bad shape. I found that the union was holding its charter by the narrowest margin, the members having lost interest and were evidently intending to allow the organization tc go to the wall. President Gorman stated he would try and get them together, and on November 28 the organizer again went to Pittsfield, and was able to hold two meetings, with the result that the delinquent members promised to reunite with the union and pay up its indebtedness to the International Typographical Union.

On December 1 I was notified by President Spead, of the Lowell (Mass.) Union, that one proprietor had refused to sign the new scale. I immediately proceeded there, and, together with the president, we took up the matter in dispute with the proprietor. After a conference lasting about an hour everything was satisfactorily settled and the signature to the contract obtained.

On December 2 and 3 the organizer was in Brockton, Mass., for the purpose of looking over a contract between Brockton Union and the Enterprise office and interpreting the same, the proprietor refusing to sign a new one, claiming that certain stipulations in his old contract had been violated by the union. The organizer failed to discover where the union had broken faith, and forwarded a decision on the matter to President Lynch, who concurred in the same. The organizer was later informed by President Lynch that the Enterprise would accept the decision rendered and would pursue the matter no further.

On December 5 a visit was paid to Haverhill Union, they requesting that a representative of the International Typographical Union be sent to that city, as interest in the organization was at a low ebb. A meeting was held and the condition of affairs discussed. President Burbank stated that later he would make a request to have me come to Haverhill and endeavor to have the position of the union strengthened.

On December 12 a telegram was received from President Lynch, instructing the organizer to leave for Brockton, Mass., as the union was putting into effect a new job scale, which called for a raise from $15 to $16.50, and several other minor changes. One firm, the Howard Printing Co., was under the impression that they had been discriminated against, by the union passing a resolution which gave other offices certain privileges denied them. After a couple of conferences and a special meeting of the union, the matter was satisfactorily adjusted, and the Howard Company promptly signed. A large non-union office in Brockton agreed to pay the new scale to our members and to reduce the hours from fifty-five to fifty-four per week. The local committee handled the entire matter in a very creditable manner, and all the employers either signed or agreed to the new scale. Brockton is one of the best organized cities in the district. While in Brockton I called upon George E. Keith, the manufacturer of the "Walk-Over" shoe—a union stamp shoe. Mr. Keith owns and operates his own printing plant, but absolutely refused to run a union office. The matter was left in the hands of Brockton Union.

On December 26, pursuant to instructions from the International president, a trip was inaugurated which included visits to the cities of Portland, Bangor, Augusta and Lewiston, Me. The condition of these several Maine cities was reported in full to the executive council. Organization work was being carried on in Maine, and the members of the local unions were unanimous in their desire to have their organizations strengthened, and were working toward that end.

On January 1, 1905, in connection with Secretary Sterling and Organizer McPherson, of No. 13, a visit was paid to the Worcester (Mass.) Union. Addresses were made covering the eight-hour proposition and general organization work.

On January 2 a meeting was held in Lynn, Mass. The officers and members of Lynn Union were working hard to perfect their organization, and to prove that their efforts were not in vain, they later secured an increase of $1.00 a week for all newspaper employes.

January 9 a trip was commenced, in the interest of the eight-hour movement, which included stops in Springfield, Holyoke, Pittsfield and North Adams, Mass., and Concord, Manchester, Portsmouth, Dover and Nashua, N. H. In most of these jurisdictions the membership seemed alive to the fact that work was necessary in order to make the eight-hour day a success.

January 22, returned to Springfield, Mass., and addressed a meeting of the local union on the eight-hour movement, going from there to Holyoke and addressing a meeting of the local there on the following evening. Hartford and New Haven were the next cities visited in reference to the eight-hour movement.

The work being carried on in both Hartford and New Haven along organization lines is worthy of special mention. Both of these cities have active eight-hour and organization committees at work. They have put forth every effort to enroll upon their membership books the names of all competent and eligible printers in their jurisdictions. They have issued from time to time printed matter calling especial attention to the advantages to be gained by becoming members of the typographical union, laying particular stress to the movement for the eight-hour day. They have been fully repaid for the labor they have expended.

On January 30 a trip was made to Lynn, and organization matters discussed with the officers of the local union. This was followed by visits to Brockton, Lowell and Lawrence. All of these locals were found to be busy pushing the work of organization.

Following instructions from headquarters, the cities of Fall River, New Bedford, Taunton, Meriden, New London and Norwich were visited in turn. In all of these places the membership was found to be active—Fall River, Meriden, New London and Norwich being practically 100 per cent union cities. Fall River has signed contracts with the employers which give them the eight-hour day on October 1, 1905.

On February 19 the organizer attended a meeting of Lawrence Union, and on the next day held a meeting in Fitchburg. Going from Fitchburg to Springfield, I addressed an open meeting in that city on the necessity of organization.

February 27 I was instructed by President Lynch to go to Lynn, Mass., as the local union was having trouble with the job office of Perry & Searles. This firm insisted on putting into effect a fifty-six-hour week in place of fifty-three hours, according to the Lynn scale. After a fruitless conference, I telegraphed to headquarters for permission to call our men out, but before an answer was received another conference was held, which resulted in the firm signing a new contract with Lynn Union, agreeing to all their requirements. The firm also was granted the use of the union labels. Secretary Goodridge acted with the organizer in securing the favorable settlement.

March 1 Meriden (Conn.) Union asked for the services of an organizer, as the Curtiss-Way Company in that city had employed a non-union foreman while having a verbal agreement with the union to employ union help. Secretary Maydwell and the organizer held several conferences with Mr. Way, but we were unable to settle the matter satisfactorily to the local union. Later another person, a monotype operator without a card, was put to work in the office. All efforts to settle the matter proved unsuccessful, and while negotiations were still on in the early part of April all our members were locked out by Mr. Way, he giving them the choice of withdrawing from the union or leaving his employ. To the lasting credit of those who were members of Meriden Union they very readily chose the latter rather than to give up their membership in the typographical union. Further mention is made of this matter later on in this report.

On March 14 I was instructed to go to Holyoke, as the union was endeavoring to put into effect a new scale—both news and job. After three or four conferences a new scale of wages was agreed to by the principal employers of that city. The new scale called for a flat job scale of $15—an increase of $1.50 a week—and the scale for floormen and admen on newspapers was increased $3.00 a week. President Alden (of Holyoke Union) was untiring in his efforts to secure a good settlement for the local union.

On March 27 called upon the officers of Woonsocket (R. I.) Union in reference to forming a union in Milford, Mass. Milford was next visited, but it was not deemed advisable at that time to form an organization. Another effort will be made to put a charter into Milford.

On April 3 a trip was begun which included the cities of Hartford, Waterbury, Danbury and Bridgeport, Conn. The city of Danbury has already made satisfactory arangements for the introduction of the eight-hour day, which shows that the union is strong and active. Waterbury has a scale in effect at the present time, which calls for eight and a half hours a day, and the membership is looking forward expectantly to the introduction of the eight-hour day.

On April 9 I was instructed to go to Portland, Me., and address the meeting of the local union on the eight-hour proposition. A good attendance turned out and an enthusiastic meeting was the result.

On April 11 was instructed by President Lynch to proceed to Taunton, Mass. Charges of violation of International Typographical Union law in one of the offices in that city had been filed at headquarters. On investigation it was found that some of the charges were correct, and steps were immediately taken to correct the evil.

April 12 found the organizer back in Meriden, to act with the local officers in connection with the Curtiss-Way Company lockout. It was decided to put forth every effort in an endeavor to convince the Curtiss-Way Company that a contract with the typographical union, whether written or verbal, was not to be thrust aside and its stipulations violated. All contracts that we make we insist upon their being lived up to, and we expect that those who make contracts with us do the same. At this writing, May 31, 1905, the local union in Meriden is in good shape, having written contracts with all the offices in its jurisdiction except the one mentioned above. The members who were locked out have found employment in other places.

April 17 was back in New Haven and addressed a well-attended meeting of the local union. New Haven is surely becoming a thoroughly organized city.

April 24 returned to Meriden in connection with the trouble in that city.

May 2 was in Springfield to act in connection with a local committee in an endeavor to adjust a difference which had arisen between the Homestead office and the local union. The Homestead had been published as a weekly and had been paying the weekly scale. It changed from a weekly publication to appearing twice a week, and the local union thought that it should no longer be classed as a weekly, but should pay the evening newspaper scale. A conference resulted in the representative of the Homestead agreeing to pay the scale asked by the union.

May 4 visited Haverhill to try and adjust certain complications which had arisen in one office there. The trouble was satisfactorily settled. From Haverhill I returned again to Meriden.

The week of May 8 was started by visiting and straightening out a small matter which had arisen in Newport, R. I. Fall River and Providence were next visited.

May 15 a flying visit was made to Worcester to arrange for a future meeting.

May 18 the organizer was called to Lowell by President Spead. The local organization has a law which requires a machinist for a certain number of machines. One office refused to abide by that law. We held a conference with the manager of the plant, and the result was that the office agreed to abide by the ruling of the union.

May 22 New Haven was visited in reference to the eight-hour-day work being carried on. The organizer went from there to Meriden. Waterbury was next visited, and Secretary Foley consulted regarding the lockout in Meriden.

The above report covers only seven months, as I was not appointed until October 31, 1904.

As the eight-hour proposition has been in the hands of the membership since the last referendum vote, it is to be hoped that our members in the New England district will still continue to appreciate the benefits that will follow the introduction of the eight-hour day. I, at this time, respectfully call the attention of every member of the International Typographical Union in New England to the fact that he or she should consider it a sacred duty to assist in some manner in the organization work that will be carried on during the rest of the year. Above everything else we are out for the eight-hour day. To quote from President Lynch's report one year ago: "In the last analysis victory depends on the support accorded by the membership." And the same statement holds good today. I am satisfied the membership will stand firm and keep on working hard to perfect our organizations in this district, and in the end, when the eight-hour question is settled satisfactorily to our membership, there will be glory enough in it for all of us. Be willing to stand up and be counted among those who are making the attempt to place our organization in the front rank in the industrial field. Our motto should be: "Not only the oldest, but the best."

In conclusion, I desire to wish every member of the International Typographical Union the fullest measure of success the coming year, and trust that the Toronto convention will take such action as will further add to the prestige of the International Typographical Union.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Fraternally, CHARLES T. SCOTT.

ORGANIZER WELLS.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—On September 1, 1904, the newspapers and job offices of El Paso, Texas, attempted to resume the nine-hour day. The newspapers—one morning and two afternoon—joined five job offices in the effort. The morning, as well as one afternoon paper, were out one day. At the end of fourteen days the other afternoon paper fell into the fold—simply because non-union machine operators and printers could not be found. The manager of an afternoon paper spent ten or twelve days in Chicago, Philadelphia and Milwaukee without results. The manager succeeded in sending, as he thought, eight thoroughbred strikebreakers, but when they reached El Paso, turned out to be card men. At the end of fourteen days the small aggregation of incompetents that had been gathered in this office were turned adrift, and, as was demanded by the local union, every man was reinstated in his former position on each paper. The five job offices have held out persistently, employing Mexican printers, women, boys and girls. The hours adopted by these five offices range from nine to fourteen per day, while wages paid range from $1.50 to $15 per week (?). Unfortunately, El Paso is situated on the border of Mexico, 623 miles from San Antonio, 616 from Fort Worth, 1,000 from Denver, 812 from Los Angeles, making it difficult to secure American printers, and as El Paso has grown so rapidly in population, it has been a hard problem to keep up organization in other crafts as well as the typographical, especially among the Spanish-speaking workmen. Out of thirty-nine crafts that could and should be organized, only eighteen are organized and twenty-one not organized.

The local typographical union has made extraordinary progress since its organization, in 1900. It started with a ten-hour day and $10 per week; in 1902 it got a nine-hour day and $13 per week; in 1903 it got eight and one-half hours for first six months and eight for last six months and $15 per week; in 1904 it was forced to walk out to maintain an eight-hour day and enforce an $18 scale, which is now in force in all ad rooms and one job office. The above applies to hand men only. Machine men receive, day, eight hours, $3.50 per day; night, eight hours, $4 per day; machinist operator, day, $27 per week; night, eight hours, $30 per week. The increase in wages and decrease in hours is equivalent to 80 and 150 per cent for both hand and machine men, respectively.

El Paso has always been on a time basis, and as a consequence the machine offices have used every effort to get "that other line." When a force employed in one office would average 5,000 eight-point per hour, according to business office reports, the forces in other offices averaging 4,500, 4,800 per hour would be cited to the 5,000 figures, through the foremen, as the business managers of the different offices compared reports. The question then arose: "How can we get more type?" "What is a 'competent' day's work as to output?" The cry from each business office was: "Get swifts." It finally came up for a decision, and the following method was resorted to: Each office, by agreement in writing with the local union, had agreed to abide by the adopted scale of prices, which is: Night, eight hours, time, $4, piece, eight-point, 15 cents per 1,000 ems; day, eight hours, time $3.50, piece, eight-point, 14 cents per 1,000 ems. Now, 25,000 ems, eight-point, in eight hours, day, at 14 cents, would amount to $3.50; 26,700 ems, eight-point, in eight hours, night, at 15 cents, would amount to $4. Therefore, in order to comply with International Typographical Union General Laws, my decision was that 25,000 ems, eight-point, in eight hours, day, or 26,700, eight-point, in eight hours, night, would be construed and held as a "competent" day's work, either on time or piece.

El Paso is not and never has been an "open shop" town.

El Paso has a population of 36,000 and will soon be one of the best organized eight-hour towns in the west. The American Federation of Labor has directed its attention to this section, and during the past year some ten or twelve officials and organizers have visited El Paso and vicinity.

My work has been entirely directed to El Paso, except by correspondence, having secured a number of provisional members, one from Old Mexico.

I am still of the opinion that a universal blotter advertising system for the label would produce tenfold results.

Thanking the International officers and the craft in general for courtesies, I am most fraternally,

El Paso, Texas. D. M. WELLS.

ORGANIZER WILSON.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—The last year has been very quiet in Michigan, and the printing trade has never been more prosperous. The state is well organized, but there are still several cities in which unions can be founded, and these will be organized before January 1, 1906.

On September 19 I visited Marshall and spent several days trying to organize a union, but was not successful. However, the majority of the printers there have cards at present in nearby cities.

From there I visited Charlotte, Ludington and Cadillac. The printers at Ludington intend to become members at Manistee.

On February 3 I visited Cheboygan, and as a result every office is now union and the membership has been increased.

In conclusion, I desire to thank President Lynch and the members of the eight-hour committee for the very material aid they have rendered in promulgating the campaign for the shorter workday.

Yours fraternally, W. B. WILSON.

ORGANIZER WOODROW.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I herewith submit my report for the past fiscal year. During the term, mindful of the necessity for a solid front in the effort to secure the eight-hour day on January 1, every opportunity has been taken by your organizer to build up and strengthen the weaker unions throughout my territory, and good success has attended the efforts, while in some unions much activity is promised to begin in the fall, after the dull summer season. Several visits have been made to Reading, Pa., in order to assist in making the eight-hour day complete in that city, but up to the present two of the small offices which refused to concede the shorter hours are still holding out. A vigorous label campaign has been waged in Reading, which has resulted in these two offices losing much of their regular work, and their office forces have been cut down one-half. The fourteen offices in Reading which granted the eight-hour day last May are working smoothly and have demonstrated that the shorter day can be successfully carried out in this section.

June 26 I was called to Sunbury, Pa. The proprietor of the Daily Item had discharged a simplex machine operator and put a boy on the machine in his place. At an interview with the manager he claimed that the man had remained from work without permission and he was obliged to put the boy on, as there was no operator in town. His charge against the operator was proven to be without truth, and another interview was had with the manager, at which your organizer insisted that justice be done the operator, but it developed that the proprietor was anxious to dispense with the man for some unknown reason and was willing to employ another union operator as soon as one could be secured. A week was given in which to secure an operator, but fortunately the paper within that time was sold to another party, who at once replaced the former operator in his position.

On this trip I stopped at Shamokin and endeavored to form a union to take the place of a former organization, which had been abandoned because too many small proprietors were running it. Only a few competent men could be found, and many boys and girls were working in the offices. On a subsequent visit in July I endeavored to combine Mount Carmel with Shamokin, but the effort failed on account of the great number of apprentices and few journeymen.

On August 31 I was called to Hazleton to adjust differences between No. 401 and the employers over a new scale to go into effect next day, but by the time I reached there an understanding had been reached which was satisfactory to both sides and gave No. 401 a substantial increase in wages. On this trip I visited Tamaqua and Lansford in an effort to revive interest in a new union there, but enough members could not be had without taking in the employers of the offices, who were anxious to form a union in order to get the use of the label. The fact that these employers dominated a former union caused the employes to lose interest and resulted in the surrender of its charter. In order to secure enough journeymen to insure a new union of employes only I visited Mauch Chunk, about five miles away, connected by trolley, but the effort finally failed on account of the activity of employers, though there is still hope of placing a charter there in the future.

On October 4 I received instructions to go to Easton. Arriving there found the trouble to be that Mr. Fehr, proprietor of the Daily Argus, had refused to sign the scale unless the union would consent to his reducing the pay below the scale of a man who had been in his employ for twenty years. After several conferences the matter was adjusted and the scale was signed.

November 15, by direction of President Lynch, I visited Allentown, Pa., for the purpose of building up that union, and was partially successful in gathering in a few members and creating new interest by holding smokers and entertainments monthly. These were very enjoyable affairs and well attended, but the non-union printers of Allentown are of peculiar temperament and their interest usually lapses as soon as the excitement and pleasure is over. Nothing short of a guarantee of a good job and high wages at once will keep them in line. Smokers were held on January 17 and March 7, both of which I attended.

On April 10 I visited Chester, Pa., for the purpose of organizing. The union sentiment was favorable among a few of the printers and several of them were holding cards from Wilmington

Union, but the outlook was discouraging at this time, and the effort was abandoned until a later date.

Lancaster was visited on April 11, and at the meeting of No. 70 plans were made to revise the scale and provide some means to gather in some of the non-union men there, which will no doubt bear some good results in the months to come.

On April 13 I visited Columbia, Pa., about ten miles from Lancaster, on the Susquehanna river. There were two daily and two weekly papers, employing about fourteen journeymen and many apprentices, with wages ranging from $4 up to $10. Considerable sentiment favorable to union was found, but was unable to secure a meeting until a subsequent visit on April 30. At that time every one of the fourteen men signed a charter application. Their charter was received on May 5, and on June 1 every office in Columbia signed a scale which gives the men an increase of twenty-five per cent and an hour less per day, and disposes of the apprentice question in a satisfactory manner.

On April 18 I visited Doylestown, Pa., but found fewer men employed there than two years ago. The machine has taken the place of many men and not enough were left to hold a charter.

With thanks to the executive officers for kindly assistance and to various unions for courtesies extended, and best wishes for future success of the International Typographical Union, I remain, Fraternally, S. T. Woodrow.

REPORT OF FEDERATION DELEGATES.

To the Officers and Delegates of the International Typographical Union, in Convention Assembled:

Fellow Craftsmen—The 24th annual convention of the American Federation of Labor was held in Lyric Hall, San Francisco, Cal., November 14-26, 1904. President Gompers called the convention to order at 10 A. M., November 14. Addresses of welcome were delivered by J. O. Walsh, president of the San Francisco Labor Council; Harry Knox, president of the California State Federation of Labor; J. Williams, of the City Front Federation; P. H. McCarthy, president of the California State Building Trades Council, and Mayor Schmitz, of San Francisco.

There were 173 unions represented—seventy-eight international organizations, thirteen state, thirty-three central, forty-five trade and federal labor unions, British Trades Union Congress, Canadian Trades and Labor Congress, Women's International Union Label League and the National Women's Trade Union League.

Secretary Morrison reported the total receipts for the year ending September 30, 1904, to be $220,995.97, the expenses $203,991.15; balance on hand October 1, 1904, $103,017.94. The average paid-up membership, 1,676,200—a gain of 210,400 over previous year.

Charters were granted during the year to the following international unions:

International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers.
International Union of Paper Box Workers.
International Union of Building Employes of America.

The executive council reported the endorsement of the labels of the following organizations during the year, which action was ratified by the convention:

International Brotherhood of Tip Printers.
Brushmakers' International Union.
Glove Workers' International Union.
Amalgamated Leather Workers.

Resolutions were adopted declaring in favor of a more strict observance of factory inspection laws; of extending Chinese exclusion law to cover Japanese and Korean immigration; against anti-scalping legislation; initiative and referendum and questioning candidates for nominations for congress and state legislatures; for women's rights; to use measures to aid in checking the spread of tuberculosis; for the encouragement and organization of labor leagues; to assist on passage of pending bills in the interests of seamen; to demand for the Porto Ricans the same rights and privileges as enjoyed by American citizens; passage and enforcement of laws abolishing child labor; for the organization of women workers; endorse the organization of women's auxiliaries to trade unions; for the demand of union labeled products; to assist in the passage of a law prohibiting the competition of enlisted musicians with civilian musicians; to support candidates pledged in advance to pay due regard to the sanitary conditions in the respective municipalities and to urge the removal of unhealthful conditions in the places where such reforms are needed; that city central bodies and state federations are hereby advised that all special assessments levied should only be declared upon a referendum vote of the unions affiliated.

An assessment of one cent per member per week for three weeks was ordered levied by the convention on every member affiliated with the American Federation of Labor for the assistance of the United Textile Workers for the members on strike at Fall River, Mass.

The convention of the American Federation of Labor adopted the following as their position on subjects under caption:

PRINTERS' EIGHT-HOUR DAY.

President Gompers in his annual report to the convention submitted the following strong statement and recommendation relative to the establishment of an eight-hour day for the membership of the International Typographical Union:

PRINTERS' EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT.

Taking cognizance of the vast progress in the development of the printing trade, the International Typographical Union at its last convention adopted a resolution declaring that on January 1, 1906, a general eight-hour workday shall be enforced. The effort is to be made to secure the co-operation of the printing employers and to bring about the change by mutual agreement.

These propositions were submitted to a referendum vote of the membership of the International Typographical Union. No official information has yet been given me as to the final result of the vote. From information received, however, it is certain that the proposition has been favorably decided. The membership at the same time voted in favor of assessing themselves to accumulate a defense fund in the meantime, to stand the members in good stead should necessity require them to enforce their demands by a cessation of work.

The American Federation of Labor has been of incalculable benefit to a large number of international unions and local unions in the introduction and enforcement of the eight-hour workday, as attested by the large number of our fellows who now work under that rule. Inasmuch as the International Typographical Union has taken the initiative of its own accord in the matter of introducing and enforcing the eight-hour workday, I submit for your consideration and recommend that this movement of the International Typographical Union receive the sincere and hearty endorsement and co-operation of this convention of the American Federation of Labor, and of every union member as well as every wage earner and those who sympathize with practical, evolutionary, economic progress.

It is not now known whether there will be any contest against the eight-hour day; whether any antagonistic action will be taken by the employers to the men. We do know, however, that at the last convention of the employing printers of the United States, organized under the name of the Typothetæ, a resolution was adopted declaring against that movement. In any event, it seems clear to me that every action should be taken by this convention and by our organizations generally, not only to pledge the support of the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated unions to the International Typographical Union in its effort to enforce the eight-hour day, but that a special committee be appointed by this convention to give the subject-matter consideration; that the committee should consult with the officers and representatives of the International Typographical Union during the convention and report thereto before adjournment; that either that committee or another committee be authorized to be appointed for purpose of co-operating with the executive council of the American Federation of Labor and the officers of the Typographical Union, so that the best possible aid can be rendered to our fellow workers in the great movement that they have undertaken and in which they have the hopes, wishes, prayers, and co-operation of every one interested in the welfare of the human family and the progress and civilization of our people.

Of course, in the effort to help one particular organization, especially in the laudable purpose it has mapped out for itself to achieve, we are not circumscribed or limited in our effort to help any and all of our fellow workmen who are in a position to make any effort for the advancement or promotion of their interests. We shall, therefore, welcome not only the initiative of our fellow unionists to obtain improved conditions, and particularly the improved conditions that come from a shorter workday, but we shall be glad to help in the initiation of any movement that will contribute in any way toward the protection, the promotion of the conditions and interests of our fellow workmen, and to render them every assistance within our power.

Upon the recommendation of committee on President Gompers' report, the above was referred to a special committee. The committee submitted the following, which was unanimously adopted:

EIGHT-HOUR WORKDAY.

First—That the American Federation of Labor approve and endorse the movement under way by the International Typographical Union for an eight-hour day for the book and job printers of the United States and Canada, and pledge to the support of this movement both moral and financial assistance.

Second—That if at any time after January 1, 1906, the International Typographical Union desires the financial support of the American Federation of Labor, and if after investigation by the executive council such financial support is found necessary in order to insure victory to the printers, the executive council shall levy the constitutional assessment on affiliated bodies, this assessment to continue for such length of time as in the judgment of the executive council may be necessary.

Third—Your committee recommends that a committee of five members be appointed to act with the executive council in furthering the eight-hour day for the book and job printers.

And we desire to conclude this report by extending to the International Typographical Union the hearty well wishes of the American Federation of Labor for the success of the printers' eight-hour project.

Your committee would recommend the adoption of resolutions thanking the American Federation of Labor and President Gompers for their favorable action, which resulted in pledging the moral and financial support of the American Federation of Labor to the International Typographical Union in its efforts to secure the eight-hour workday.

INDUSTRIAL PEACE.

Under the caption of "Industrial Peace," he calls attention to the fact that there is no peace guaranteed to those who are not prepared to defend it; that in so far as strikes against wage reductions have been unsuccessful, they have been so because the organizations in question were not financially prepared for the struggle. Your committee desire to say that at all times those who worked had to sustain those who defended them while at work. This has been the history of the development of races and nations, and, unquestionably, is the law running through all associated effort. We therefore earnestly agree with the president in his recommendations, that members of organizations must in time of peace furnish the necessary means to defend and improve the conditions during times of stress and trouble.

I. T. U. VS. NEW ORLEANS CENTRAL BODY.

A case has recently arisen in New Orleans similar to one which existed in Omaha a few years ago; that is, that the central labor union of New Orleans has placed upon its unfair list a labor paper, published and edited by a member of the International Typographical Union.

The president of the International Typographical Union complained that R. P. Fleming, the proprietor and editor of the paper referred to, is a union member; that all the work done in connection with the paper is that of union members; that the reason for declaring this publication unfair is due to nothing more or less than the expression of opinion by the editor.

Acting upon principles of trade union law, as well as the decision rendered by the executive council in the Omaha case, already referred to, President Gompers communicated with the New Orleans central body, practically reiterating the decision reached in the similar case.

While we all reserve to ourselves the right of patronizing or refusing to patronize any publication because of the views and judgment expressed in its columns, yet, as trade unionists, we have not the moral right to "boycott" any publication because of the expression of opinion through its columns.

We do not undertake to say that the statements complained of, as published by Editor Fleming, are justified or otherwise; we are not in a position to know, but whatever the expressions may have been, the untrammeled freedom of the press is so important to the well being, not only of organized labor, but to human, civilized life, that no conceivable circumstance could arise that would warrant trade unionists, in their organized capacity, in placing a publication upon a "boycott" list for the expression of opinion.

President Gompers has communicated to the New Orleans central body to this effect, but the central body has neither rectified the wrong nor complied with its repeated promises to answer the complaint made. In view of these facts, we recommend that unless the New Orleans central body removes from its unfair list the "United Labor Journal" within thirty days after the close of this convention, and so notifies the president of the American Federation of Labor, the charter of said central body shall be withdrawn.

Committee reports favorably, and recommends that the executive council enforce its decision even to the extent of revoking the charter of the central body.

INCORPORATION.

In the matter of the incorporation of trade unions, the president states, and your committee fully agrees, that it is but a pretext, not honestly offered, but distinctly for the purpose of so mulcting the unions in damages as to prevent them from getting together the necessary funds for an effective resistance to any encroachment which the citizens' alliance may choose to make at any time or place; and your committee further recommends that efforts be made to watch congress and the different state legislatures for bills which have any such purpose in view, with the purpose of resisting their passage to the utmost.

MONGOLIAN COMPETITION.

One of the gravest, if not the most so, of the dangers confronting not only the working people, but all the people, is the Mongolian competition, the mere beginning of which has shown disastrous consequences. Occidental civilization has within the last hundred years or more followed a policy of sacrificing population to production. The introduction of labor-saving appliances forced out of work in Great Britain and on the continent of Europe the people out of which have grown the populations of this continent, of New Zealand, Australia and South Africa. Oriental civilization, as exemplified by the Chinese, Koreans and Japanese, have followed the direct opposite system, of sacrificing production to population. The introduction amongst them at this time of power-driven machinery and the newest and best of labor-saving appliances necessarily will throw out of employment in those countries untold millions of people, highly skilled artisans, among them perhaps the highest skilled and best disciplined and most docile hand labor in the world. They are not going to die of want in China, Korea or Japan. They will come as immigrants to any part of the world where they can find the slightest opening, and the cleavage in modern Occidental countries existing between the employer, who seeks cheap and docile labor, and the laborer who wants equal rights as laborer as well as he has as citizen, furnishes to the Mongolian so inviting a field, and so much secret and open assistance to get a foothold on our shores is given them, that the sternest of efforts, as suggested by the president, must be employed to save for the Caucasian race this continent, if such be at all possible. We are therefore in full accord with the president's report upon this subject, and will submit for your consideration resolutions introduced upon that subject, asking your favorable consideration of the same.

ENGINEERS, FIREMEN AND TEAMSTERS VS. BREWERY WORKMEN.

We recommend that all agreements and decisions heretofore made by, or at the instance of, the American Federation of Labor, between the brewery workmen, engineers, firemen and teamsters, be and are hereby substituted by a working agreement upon the following basis:

1. All brewery employes now members of the United Brewery Workmen's Union may remain such, provided that such members of said United Brewery Workmen's Union as are now employed as engineers, firemen, or teamsters, may withdraw from that organization, and join their respective unions, representing these crafts, without prejudice or discrimination on the part of their former associates.

2. Hereafter the United Brewery Workmen's Union shall not admit to membership any engineer, fireman or teamster, but shall refer all applicants, members of these trades, to the respective organizations of these trades, now affiliated with the American Federation of Labor where such organizations exist.

3. All engineers, firemen and teamsters employed in breweries shall conform to the laws, rules and regulations made by that organization of which the majority of the members of the respective crafts employed in each brewery are members.

4. Whenever a majority of men employed as engineers, firemen or teamsters in any brewery are members of the respective unions of these crafts, the organization or organizations representing such majority shall appoint a committee to act co-jointly with the United Brewery Workmen's Union in any negotiations which may arise with the employers, provided that the United Brewery Workmen shall have equal representation with all the other organizations in joint conference.

5. Failure to comply with the provisions of this agreement within a period of six months after the date of adjournment of this convention shall work a revocation of the charter of the organization or organizations so failing.

Resolved, That the executive council is hereby instructed to execute this mandate;

Resolved, That the United Brewery Workmen be compelled to withdraw those engineers and firemen who have taken the places of striking engineers and firemen in the cities of St. Louis, Mo., and Belleville, Ill.

Resolved, That the United Brewery Workmen be requested to withdraw all injunction suits now pending and to dissolve such injunctions as have been secured against the International Unions of stationary engineers and firemen affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

APPEALS FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.

During the past year we had numerous appeals for financial assistance, each urging that a special assessment be levied upon the unions. In view of the fact, however, that there were so many involved, and taking into consideration the financial condition of nearly all th international unions, we were strongly convinced of the inexpediency of levying such assessments.

We, however issued several appeals, some of which brought fair returns.

We can not too strongly impress upon the minds of our fellow unionists the absolute necessity of providing their organizations with funds. During the period when they are employed, and without any difficulty confronting them, they should contribute to the dues that will afford them protection in all of the vicissitudes that may befall them, to aid in securing the improved conditions to which they are entitled.

Experience has demonstrated that the failure of unions to require the contribution of higher dues, and the consequent absence of any fund, is the cause of many strikes and lockouts which could and would otherwise be averted.

When unions have no accumulated funds, they are often imposed upon by employers who undertake to calculate to a nicety how long the workmen can resist aggression and hold out to enforce a demand, no matter how reasonable it may be. The fact that men can and do economize, and live on less than usual during a contest, is not considered when the employers take an aggressive position, and strikes are thereby prolonged to a greater period than calculated upon by the employers. But the presence of a good fund would have the effect of moderating the employers' attitude and persuading them to a more reasonable consideration of labor's rights. It is true that appeals for financial aid have been of great material advantage; that for the miners' strike, in the anthracite regions; for the Western Federation of Miners, for the textile workers, and for the glove workers, have had fairly reasonable results, but, generally speaking, the issuance of appeals for financial assistance is immediately considered by employers as a sign of weakness and as a token of distress, that influences them to take an obstinate position, in their supposed confidence that in a very brief time hunger will weaken the ranks and break the backbone of the strike.

In view of these absolute facts, demonstrated beyond doubt, we desire strongly to impress upon the minds of fellow unionists, and to recommend and urge upon our international unions the absolute necessity and advantage to them, to their members, and to all labor, that the dues of the membership of their local unions should not be less than $1 per month. Funds accumulated from the contribution of such dues would not only admit the payment of benefits of several kinds to the members, but would be the greatest preventive of the deterioration of the condition of labor, would be the easiest and most practical method of obtaining improvements in the condition of the workers, and accomplish these beneficial results without the necessity of strikes or lockouts.

CITIZENS' ALLIANCE.

There has in the past sprung up in different cities associations of employers, organized for the specific purpose of opposing the aims and objects of the trade union movement. Within the last year or two these different organizations have come together under the name "Citizens' Alliance." Mr. Job of Chicago said that the principles of this association are: First, the open shop; second, no sympathetic strikes; third, no limitation or restriction of output or apprentices; fourth, the enforcement of law. Being for the open shop, and against the union shop, they stand pledged to oppose any efforts toward any unity on the part of the working people. They desire to prevent the co-operation of the working people for any specific object not sanctioned or endorsed by the employers of labor. They claim that the so-called open shop is the only constitutional or legal shop; that the union shop is in violation of constitutional guaranties and of individual liberty. Our position is that, being free, we have the absolute right to associate together, to assist each other in any effort to improve our condition as workmen or as citizens. We claim that as workmen we have the absolute right to refuse to work for or with any employer or laborer antagonistic to our interests. We insist upon the union shop, because in any serious disagreement with our employers, the most effective weapon which we have is to withdraw our labor from the shop until such disagreement shall be arranged. That the open shop—the non-union shop—is the more advantageous to the employer who desires to destroy existing conditions and reduce wages is undoubtedly true. That this is the reason for the solicitude of the employer for the establishment of the open shop—the non-union shop—is equally true. The alliance is against sympathetic strikes. Being against the combination of workmen under any circumstances, this goes without saying. That the organization as such, the citizens' alliance, would fail to understand and sympathize with the feelings which at times produce the sympathetic strike is equally natural. No limitation upon the number of apprentices means, as we know too well, the turning out of numberless, half-baked mechanics, whose years for learning their trade have been wasted to them, while very profitable to the employer who taught them but one part of the handicraft which they were supposed to learn. Enforcement of law is the fourth reason given by Mr. Job for the existence of the citizens' alliance. In this statement is an indictment against the entire system of jurisprudence, and an indictment of all the public officers elected by the people throughout the country. Vigilance committees are at times organized in new and unsettled countries. When they are organized in countries with an orderly government, they can only exist for the purpose of taking the place of the regularly elected officials, and enforcing such law and order as they themselves hold to be proper. They may be progressive or reactionary. They are at all times revolutionary. The citizens' alliance must, like other institutions, be judged by its actions, and its actions prove it to be antagonistic to any combinations except their own; to the right of association when used by the working people. They claim that with the ownership of the means of production or transportation necessarily goes the right to and the power over so much labor power as will make such means of production or transportation profitable. This contention is in direct opposition to the Declaration of Independence—the first constitution of the United States—to the entire development of civilized life as found in this country. It would set at naught the thirteenth amendment to the constitution, by so arranging the laws and customs of the country as to rob the workman of his freedom to quit, singly or collectively, but especially collectively, and by isolation deprive him of the power of locomotion. The right of labor to freely move from state to state within this country, or from one country to another, has been looked upon as fundamental, and was never questioned until the citizens' alliance, with its injunctions, undertook to enforce their reactionary principles—that the laborer belongs to him who owns the tools. It is to enforce this ownership, to prevent the workman from enforcing the distinctly American principle of freedom, that the citizens' alliance stands for and works for the open shop. It is for this reason that it stands for the abolition of the workman's right to bestow his patronage upon his friends and withhold it from his enemies. It is for this reason that it uses its best efforts wherever opportunity offers to destroy the value of the union label. What it will do when it has the opportunity and power is best exemplified by the situation produced by it in the state of Colorado; and we are in full accord with what the president says about this situation, with especial approval of the following:

"The iniquitous policy of the so-called citizens' alliances has had its fullest fruition in Colorado. In that state it has not only of itself had full sway, but it has been aided in the execution of its edicts by the executive with the full power of the military. Indeed, the citizens' alliance had but the simple declaration to make as to its wishes and what in its judgment constituted the law, to have the governor of the state order the troops to the most convenient point to execute what was accepted as a decree. Civil government has been set at naught, and constitutional and natural rights and guarantees wantonly trampled under foot."

Reactionary in its principles, revolutionary in its methods, it can not be but that our people, whether connected with labor organizations or not, will, as they learn to know what it stands for and what it is, place upon it such a seal of disapproval as will compel it either to change its policy or go out of existence. It should be the duty of union men and friends of labor and progress everywhere to study its purposes, its acts, and to give to the same the widest publication possible.

Victor L. Berger, of the International Typographical Union delegation, introduced the following resolution:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

COMMITTEE ON COPYRIGHT LAW.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

Ladies and Gentlemen—The past year has been an active one in copyright matter, and more interest has been manifested, by way of conferences and legislation, on the subject of copyright than at any other period during the existence of your committee. During the year five bills were introduced in congress amending the copyright law, but only one of the number became law. This was an amendment to Section 4952 of the copyright law, and as the same has been the subject of wide comment and is not well understood generally by our members, the bill is offered in full:

FIFTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS, THIRD SESSION.

AN ACT TO AMEND SECTION FORTY-NINE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-TWO OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section forty-nine hundred and fifty-two of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 4952. The author, inventor, designer, or proprietor of any book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, cut, print, or photograph, or negative thereof, or of a painting, drawing, chromo, statue, statuary, and of models or designs intended to be perfected as works of the fine arts, and the executors, administrators, or assigns of any such person shall, upon complying with the provisions of this chapter, have the sole liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, completing, copying, executing, finishing, and vending the same; and, in the case of a dramatic composition, of publicly performing or representing it, or causing it to be performed or represented by others. And authors or their assigns shall have exclusive right to dramatize or translate any of their works for which copyright shall have been obtained under the laws of the United States.

"Whenever the author of a book in a foreign language, which shall be published in a foreign country before the day of publication in this country, or his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall deposit one complete copy of the same, including all maps and other illustrations, in the Library of Congress, Washington, District of Columbia, within thirty days after the first publication of such book in a foreign country, and shall insert in such copy, and in all copies of such book sold or distributed in the United States, on the title page or the page immediately following, a notice of the reservation of copyright in the name of the proprietor, together with the true date of first publication of such book, in the following words: 'Published ——, nineteen hundred and ——. Privilege of copyright in the United States reserved under the act approved ——, nineteen hundred and five, by ——,' and shall within twelve months after the first publication of such book in a foreign country, file the title of such book and deposit two copies of it in the original language or, at his option, of a translation of it in the English language, printed from type set within the limits of the United States, or from plates made therefrom, containing a notice of copyright, as provided by the copyright laws now in force, he and they shall have during the term of twenty-eight years from the date of recording the title of the book or of the English translation of it, as provided for above, the sole liberty of printing, reprinting, publishing, vending, translating and dramatizing the said book: Provided, That this act shall only apply to a citizen or subject of a foreign state or nation when such foreign state or nation permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as to its own citizens."

Approved March 3, 1905.

Your committee received many letters after the enactment of this bill inquiring if the adoption of the same would not endanger the manufacturing clause of the copyright law. The act does not apply to books published in English, and does not even apply to books printed in a foreign language previous to the passage of the act. It is virtually a reservation of copyright for one year, and as your committee understands it, its purpose is to give sufficient time for proper translation of the book in the original language.

The efforts of your committee during the past years were principally directed toward securing an amendment to Section 4956, which is the manufacturing clause of the copyright law. In this we were partially successful. The bill passed the lower house of congress, but failed in the senate, although it had the approval of the senate committee on patents, and was strongly recommended by Senator Kittridge, the chairman of that committee. The last session of congress was what is known as the "short session," and but little legislation can be secured at such a time, but your committee was hopeful that the bill could be put through, and President Lynch was requested to come to Washington and personally assist in the matter, which he did, ably assisting us in our work. The bill was brought up two days before the end of the session, and objection being raised, it had to go over. Having passed the lower house and being approved by the senate committee, and with other circumstances which have since arisen adding in its favor, we believe the bill will have no trouble passing the next congress. The bill in question, and which is given below, is the one which received the endorsement of the last International convention and has for its object the strengthening of the manufacturing clause of the copyright law by the enactment of new provisions, and providing penalties for false registration. In other words, it requires an affidavit to secure a copyright, instead of an ex-parte statement, as is now the case. As some conferences have already been held, and others are to follow before congress convenes, in order to draft a general copyright bill, our bill is herewith respectfully submitted to the convention, and the delegates are requested to closely scrutinize the same and offer such suggestions or amendments as they may think proper. Such amendments or suggestions can be offered to the convention, or later forwarded to the copyright committee up to September 1, 1905, at Washington, D. C. Following is the bill in full, with the action taken on the same:

H. R. 13355.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. Tawney introduced the following bill, which was referred to the committee on patents and ordered to be printed:

A BILL TO AMEND THE COPYRIGHT LAWS.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section forty-nine hundred and fifty-six of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 4956. No person shall be entitled to a copyright unless he shall, on or before the day of publication, in this or any foreign country, deliver at the office of the librarian of congress, or deposit in the mail within the United States, addressed to the librarian of congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, a printed copy of the title of the book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, cut, print, photograph, or chromo, or a description of the painting, drawing, statue, statuary, or a model or design for a work of the fine arts, for which he desires a copyright; nor unless he shall also, not later than the day of the publication thereof, in this or any foreign country, deliver at the office of the librarian of congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, or deposit in the mail within the United States, addressed to the librarian of congress, at Washington, District of Columbia, two copies of such copyright book, map, chart, dramatic or musical composition, engraving, chromo, cut, print, or photograph; or, in case of a painting, drawing, statue, statuary, model, or design for a work of the fine arts, a photograph of the same: Provided, That in the case of a book, photograph, chromo, or lithograph, the two copies of the same required to be delivered or deposited as above, shall be printed from type set within the limits of the United States, or from plates made therefrom, or from negatives or drawings on stone made within the limits of the United States, or from transfers made therefrom. During the existence of such copyright, the importation into the United States of any book, chromo, lithograph, or photograph so copyrighted, or any edition, or editions thereof, or any plates of the same not made from type set, negatives or drawings on stone made within the limits of the United States shall be, and is hereby, prohibited except in the cases specified in paragraphs five hundred and twelve to five hundred and sixteen, inclusive, in section two of the act entitled 'An Act to reduce the revenue and equalize the duties on imports, and for other purposes,' approved October first, eighteen hundred and ninety; and, except in the case of persons purchasing for use and not for sale, who import subject to the duty thereon not more than two copies of such book at any one time; and, except in the case of newspapers and magazines, not containing in whole or in part matter copyrighted under the provisions of this act unauthorized by the author which are hereby exempted from prohibition of importation: Provided, nevertheless, That in the case of books in foreign languages, of which only translations in English are copyrighted, the prohibition of importation shall apply only to the translation of the same, and the importation of the books in the original language shall be permitted: And provided further, That accompanying the two copies of a book, required to be delivered or deposited as above, there shall be an affidavit under the seal of a registered notary public of the United States, and made by the person desiring the said copyright, or his United States agent or representative, setting forth that the two copies required to be so deposited have been printed from type set within the limits of the United States, or from plates made therefrom, or from negatives or drawings on stone made within the limits of the United States or from transfers made therefrom: Provided, also, That a penalty of not less than one thousand dollars nor more than five thousand dollars shall be imposed for the violation of any of the provisions of this section."

March 2, 1904—Referred to the committee on patents and ordered to be printed.

Passed the house April 2, '94.

On March 1, 1905, the chairman of your committee was informed by President Lynch that President McCormick, of Typographical Union No. 6, had requested that the copyright committee be instructed to come over to New York to attend a copyright conference. Acting under the president's advice the chairman of your committee proceeded at once to New York and reported to No. 6. This conference was held on March 2, 1905, at the Aldine Association, with the following gentlemen present:

Mr. Scott (Century), president American Publishers' Association.
George Haven Putnam.
Charles Scribner.
Mr. Sullivan, International Typographical Union, Washington.
Mr. Donnelly, Typographical Union No. 6.
Mr. Jackson, Typographical Union No. 6.
William Green, president typothetæ, city of New York.
S. H. Eggers, chairman executive committee, typothetæ.
H. V. Boyar, recording secretary, typothetæ.
William Heinemann.

Mr. Scott, president American publishers' association, who presided, stated that the purpose of the conference was to discuss certain proposals which had been made by William Heinemann, vice-president of the English publishers' association, with regard to American copyright on English books. Mr. Heinemann explained his position as follows:

It would appear that under the amendment concerning copyright on translations which passed congress on February 28, foreign authors would be at an advantage over English authors, inasmuch as they would have twelve months' grace before a copyright need be completed. As a matter of fact, the amendment as passed gave only a very moderate sort of protection, although in its original form it certainly would have seemed as if it favored continental authors over English authors.

He expressed an opinion that if a provisional copyright could be obtained by entering a work in Washington, with the option of completing the copyright within a period of say two or three months, that that would be a very helpful measure and one which would certainly reduce the feeling of injustice that many English authors and publishers cherish at the present moment.

Upon inquiry he learned that the means of obtaining such a measure of relief would be by enlisting the co-operation of the typographers of America, and he had thereupon written to Typographical Union No. 6, requesting a representative of that union to meet him, and after meeting Mr. Jackson and Mr. Donelly, of Typographical Union No. 6, it was thought well to call a meeting representing all the interests at stake.

The present meeting was the outcome of this invitation, and he wished to emphasize the fact that this meeting was an entirely informal one and that none of those present were in any way able to pledge their associations, so he also, although vice-president of the Publishers' Association of Great Britain and Ireland, spoke in his private capacity and with no mandate from the Publishers' Association of Great Britain and Ireland.

Mr. Heinemann pointed out that his wish would be that a copyright could be applied for in America in the same way that a patent was applied for—on specification, with a period of say two or three months to complete the copyright. He pointed out that the typographers of America could only benefit by supporting this proposal and, in order to show it, developed the theory that whereas books, the sale of which was quite assured, would always be copyrighted in America, those commanding only a limited sale or were exceedingly expensive in manufacture would always be manufactured in the country of their origin as they are now—so that the only books which it was necessary to discuss in this relation were those which had a moderate success assured (not sufficient to warrant two independent settings) and experimental books. Of the latter a few might, if Mr. Heinemann's suggestion was adopted, be lost to American printers, but he had found only a very small number, and a decreasing one, of such books which were experimentally published in England and had proved sufficiently attractive to be reprinted unauthoritatively in America. There remained then the large number of books which were set with no view to American copyright under the present manufacturing clause, and which, under the present arrangement, were generally published in England with reference to no American edition. These were usually, under the present arrangement, imported either in sheets or in the shape of English plates, whereas in many cases it would be worth while to take out American copyright after the market had been tested in England, could in the first instance a provisional copyright be obtained. This then was what Mr. Heinemann asked for and he dwelt on the fact that it would constantly enable the English publishers to bring out a book on the psychological moment, which under the present arrangement was frequently lost through the delay in taking out American copyright. Most frequently this was the case, of course, in the rush of Christmas business, when it very often happened American copyright had to be sacrificed in order to place the book on the market in time for the season's sales. Mr. Heinemann contended that a great deal of typesetting would be required by American printers and a great advantage given at the same time to English authors and publishers by the adoption of his suggestion.

Mr. Scribner suggested that it would be quite necessary, if such an amendment were proposed to the copyright act, that some provision should be made for the supply of the English edition during the interim period, and he thought that the words "with the consent of the owner of the copyright" should be added to the section of the present copyright act permitting the importation of two copies of any book for use but not for sale.

Mr. Putnam drew a comparison to the present proposal with the proposal which now had become a law concerning the rights of translation, and he was not sure whether the period that ought to be allowed should not be thirty days rather than longer. A general discussion ensued in which it seemed to be generally agreed that the period of sixty days was the most practical period.

In conclusion Mr. Scott, on behalf of the American publishers, intimated that they would support such a measure, provided a proper means could be found to regulate the importation of the English edition during the period between application and completion of copyright.

Mr. Sullivan, on behalf of the International

Typographical Union, intimated that the typographers would equally support such a measure, which was bound to bring printing into the country and which would foster the good feeling and business relations between English publishers and authors and American publishers and printers, so long as no attempt was made to place the English edition on the market in the interim period and then try to obtain American copyright. It would be necessary to make quite clear that the measure was asked in order to give the fullest possible latitude to those wishing to obtain copyright without the risk of infringing the manufacturing clause to which they always would most jealously adhere.

Mr. Green, on behalf of the typothetæ, agreed with Mr. Sullivan, and Mr. Heinemann, in conclusion, assured the meeting that it had never been his intention to ask for this present measure with a view to circumventing the manufacturing clause, irksome as it was and always would be to English publishers and authors.

After the meeting Mr. Heinemann asked for a further conference with the representatives of the typographers, which was granted, and the subject was gone over more extensively. The printers believed thirty days to be a reasonable time to secure copyright and were willing to concede that period on behalf of their organization. The chairman of your committee was requested by Mr. Heinemann to put his proposition for sixty days' time for securing copyright before the International, stating that English publishers and printers had many disadvantages to contend with, as compared with American publishers and printers, one principal handicap being that in England they print almost entirely from the type, instead of plates, as we do here, and he urgently suggested that the International send a representative to England to look into the printing trades there for the purpose of securing data and information of benefit to the American typographers.

I therefore submit Mr. Heinemann's request and suggestions to the convention for respectful consideration. I believe there are certain important facts in regard to the transmission of plates, printed sheets, etc., bearing seriously on copyright matter, as well as other valuable information which could be secured by sending a representative of the craft to England.

During the last congress, Senator Kittridge, who has charge of such legislation, advised the librarian of congress to call together during the year all parties interested in copyright matters for the purpose of drafting a general copyright bill, as the present law had been so weighted down with amendments as to become conflicting.

Mr. Putnam, the librarian of congress, called the first conference to be held in New York city on May 31, 1905. I was instructed by President Lynch to represent the International at that conference. In order to give the International proper representation, as well as full voting strength, I was advised to select additional representatives, and this was done in the choice of President McCormick and George J. Jackson, organizer of No. 6.

The conference met on May 31, and continued its sessions until the evening of June 2. Twenty-nine associations were represented. The conference was a busy one, and was presided over by the librarian of congress, Mr. Putnam. The present copyright law was taken up seriatim, and discussed, eliminations made where the same were thought necessary, and new features were added. Your representatives attended every session of the conference and took an active part in the proceedings. Our copyright bill, previously mentioned, was introduced and generally discussed. No serious objection was offered to it. The amount of business done at the conference was so large that I could not undertake to give even a synopsis of it. That it will result in a great deal of good to all concerned there is no question. The work of this conference will be supplemented by two other conferences to be held later on, and then the final result will be submitted to the next congress for adoption.

Your committee respectfully suggest that the International body place itself on record as endorsing our bill, H. B. 13355, and requesting its passage by the incoming congress.

Your committee would also respectfully suggest that in order to prevent the continued importation into this country of perfect plates and shells under the head of "old type metal," which are now admitted free of duty, and whereby the government is defrauded of its just revenue and certain members of our craft deprived of a portion of the labor to which they are justly entitled, that the International body, assembled in convention, unanimously protest against the continued importation into this country of perfect plates under the head of "old type metal," and that in order to effectively secure this result that a petition be forwarded to the speaker of the house and presiding officer of the senate before the convening of the next congress requesting that paragraph 533 of the tariff act of 1897, which reads as follows: "Old copper, fit only for manufacture, clippings from new copper, and all composition metal of which copper is a component material of chief value not specifically provided for in this act," be transferred from the free list and placed on the dutiable list at an ad valorem duty of 25 per cent.

Respectfully submitted,

J. J. Sullivan, Chairman.
James H. Platt.

COMMITTEE ON TELEGRAPH.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

Ladies and Gentlemen—Your committee on government ownership and control of the telegraph begs leave to report as follows:

During the past year little progress was made for the measure in charge of your committee. Early in the recent short session of congress it became apparent that the business before the senate and house committees was so voluminous, principally with appropriations and urgent bills, that scant consideration could or would be paid to our appeals. Therefore, any effort we might put forth would be but a useless waste of time and, in all probability, a source of more or less expense to the International Typographical Union. Under the circumstances we did not feel justified in devoting much time to labor, the probable results of which were so utterly unpromising. However, the forthcoming session of congress is looked forward to with brighter hopes for the reason that government and municipal ownership sentiment is developing and making such rapid strides that thousands of converts are flocking to the standard of government ownership of public utilities.

Your committee requests that the delegates to the forthcoming session of the International Typographical Union give all possible assistance when the measure is presented to congress.

We recommend that our delegates to the next convention of the American Federation of Labor be instructed to request of that body that governmental ownership and control of the telegraph be made a preferred measure; that the legislative committee be directed to co-operate with the International Typographical Union committee stationed in Washington, in pushing the work among the membership and the committees of both houses of congress, and that all organizations represented in the federation be requested to take the necessary steps toward putting into practical effect the measure we have been striving for for years.

Respectfully submitted,

A. L. Randall, Chairman,
John B. Dickman, Secretary,
W. N. Brackwell,
F. C. Roberts,
John A. Huston.

CUMMINGS MEMORIAL COMMITTEE.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

Ladies and Gentlemen—Your Amos J. Cummings memorial committee desires to submit for your consideration the following report of their transactions since organization.

As all know, at the session of the International Typographical Union in St. Louis, the report of the Cummings memorial committee, and all matter pertaining to the subject, was referred to the committee on Union Printers' Home for consideration; said committee reported the following recommendations, which were adopted unanimously by the convention, thus committing that body to the project:

Reviewing the report of the "Cummings Memorial Committee," printed in the supplement to the officers' report, we beg leave to express approval of the conclusion of the Washington convention, that the "Cummings memorial" take the form of a permanent library extension to the Union Printers' Home, and we recommend that the "Cummings memorial" be in the form of a permanent addition to the Home by extending the northeast wing of the main building about sixty-five feet, according to plans and specifications laid before this committee and accompanying this report, except that the interior of the two upper floors be not finished until absolutely necessary to accommodate an increased number of inmates. The estimate of the architect for this extension is about $24,000 or $25,000, but by deferring the finishing of the interior, as suggested, the cost will not exceed $20,000. This plan will give the Home increased facilities that it needs at present in the basement, will enlarge the dining room and the reading room, and provide a handsome library room as a "Cummings memorial."

To accomplish this we further recommend that the present "Cummings Memorial" committee be continued and that it be increased to eleven members; that said committee continue its work of raising funds until about $20,000 have been accumulated; that when such amount has been raised it shall pass to the control of the board of trustees of the Union Printers' Home, who shall proceed to erect said extension; that the installation of the Cummings library therein shall be a part of the work of the special "Cummings Memorial" committee.

President Lynch added, on the last day of the session, six members to the committee as follows: Michael Colbert, Chicago No. 16; H. E. Garman, Denver No. 49; David Hastings, Hamilton No. 129; L. A. Bickell, San Francisco No. 21; T. B. Brown, Topeka No. 121; P. L. Brent, Memphis No. 11. The original committee was composed of M. G. Scott, New York No. 6; A. D. Calvert, Philadelphia No. 2; A. G. Davis, Boston No. 13; Joe M. Johnson, Columbia (Washington) No. 101; F. H. Brown, Syracuse No. 55.

August 21, Chairman Scott, of the committee, communicated with the members regarding their desires as to organization and future work in the raising of the remainder of the $20,000 necessary to enter upon the erecting of the building as endorsed by the convention. He suggested two points for the consideration of the committee, as follows:

First. Do you think it advisable to call a meeting of the committee for the discussion of organization and future work?

Second. If so, what time and place would be most acceptable and convenient for you, giving due consideration for the location of the other members of the committee?

Replies were to the effect that it would be too expensive at that time to hold a meeting of the committee, and that some plan of action be evolved by correspondence to proceed with the work of raising the balance. It also was the sentiment of the committee that, in view of the enlarged number, a reorganization was advisable. The latter part of September Chairman Scott asked each member to designate his choice for chairman and secretary. The latter part of October we were informed by President Lynch of the action of the committee, and that Michael Colbert, of Chicago, and Harvey E. Garman, of Denver, had been selected as chairman and secretary, respectively, by the members, and also informed that we were thoroughly organized and were expected to get "busy."

It was the sense of the committee that the plan of asking a donation of 50 cents from each member of the International in every union be continued; that circulars asking the above be issued to all unions that had not heretofore responded, and that every committeeman do his utmost to bring about the desired result, with the hope that prior to the Toronto convention the sum desired would be in the hands of the International and the spirit of the action of the convention be complied with. For the purpose of perfecting the work and securing the active co-operation of all the committee, the several states in the jurisdiction were apportioned to the eleven members as follows, each to be responsible for his own territory, mailing his literature, etc., from his own residence, such matter to be furnished him from the secretary's office. The division was as follows:

Marsden G. Scott—All unions in Greater New York City and New Jersey.

Joe M. Johnson—All unions in Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and District of Columbia.

Alfred D. Calvert—All unions in Pennsylvania and Delaware.

Arthur G. Davis—All unions in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

Fred H. Brown—All unions in New York state (outside the city) and Ohio.

Michael Colbert—All unions in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

T. B. Brown—All unions in Kansas, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, North Dakota and South Dakota.

David Hastings—All unions in Canada and Michigan.

P. L. Brent—All unions in Tennessee, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Kentucky.

L. A. Bickel—All unions in California, Oregon, Washington and Nevada.

H. E. Garman—All unions in Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Texas, Utah, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Alaska, Porto Rico, Hawaii and Philippines.

As a first effort, a circular was drawn and sent out late in December, embodying the plea and plans of the committee, the elegant write-up of the Home in the Inland Printer was secured in pamphlet form and return postal cards prepared. Each committeeman was furnished with enough of the above and sufficient stationery to fully cover the unions in his domain and to be sent to those desired, as well as individual members, officers and any one whom it was believed it would influence. In addition to these it was the instruction to each committeeman to write at least five personal letters to all of his unions on the matter and keep them stirred up. The responses were gratifying, for hardly had the first volley been fired before responses came rolling in. Unions that had partially donated raised to the full amount and many that had not, assured the committee they would be found on the right side of the ledger, and in a few months after the committee got actively at work the sum was swelled to fully $12,000 in cash, while the secretary's office had pledges on file for several thousand more.

In addition the secretary was instructed to send out literature and letters wherever he deemed it advisable. Many were sent to newspapers throughout the country, and the amount of favorable comment and commendation we received and free advertising secured for the International Typographical Union was well worth the time and money expended, if not a dollar had been received for the cause.

In May it was deemed advisable to again call the attention of those unions that had made no response to the committee's appeal, and another circular was prepared, together with a leaflet for each district, containing the amount expected on a 50-cent basis, the sum paid in, if any, and the amount pledged. This last appeal was sent out from the secretary's office and the personal letter writing continued. The results have been highly gratifying, and the unions seem to be taking a new interest in the matter.

A pleasing feature of the work of the committee had been the replies received. A number of unions have kindly expressed their willingness to aid the cause, but have found themselves unable at present to do so, owing to low treasuries and trouble in prospect. One or two have absolutely refused to contribute and so informed the committee, but it is believed that they will get in line as soon as matters progress a little further. Another commendable phase is the fact that it was found that the smaller unions were very prompt to respond to the committee's appeal. A number of the larger ones have the matter under consideration, and when they see the trend of sentiment, it is safe to say they will be found doing their part with a royal good will.

Another great assistance to the committee has been the inmates of the Home, who have aided in the corresponding and bringing the importance of the matter to the attention of such unions as had not done their part, especially those that had resident members.

When the committee was reorganized and took up the work there had been received from all sources, in the hands of the International, $7,898.12. This had been raised by the committee, aided by the campaign started by Denver Union No. 49, which took up the battle in the spring of 1904. The amount in the hands of Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood at the close of the fiscal year is $11,312.85. It is not the purpose of the committee to give the list of donations by unions, as that will appear in the report of Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood. Since its work began this committee has succeeded in raising and securing in cash in the neighborhood of $5,000 additional, which is an excellent showing and fully exemplifies the loyalty and generosity of the printer—the union printer. In addition to this there are on file in the office of the secretary of the committee pledges from various unions throughout the jurisdiction for fully $2,000 more that undoubtedly will be in the coffers of the secretary-treasurer by the time the convention meets. The committee feels confident that with a continuation of the methods adopted, work on the erection of the proposed addition is almost in sight, and that the delegates to the coming convention will do their part to make the project an unqualified success. We are in a position that we must go ahead with this work. There can be no turning back, and it must never be said that the members of the International Typographical Union started something it could not finish. We believe that to halt now would have a bad effect on the eight-hour-day movement, as it would give our opposers an opportunity to "knock."

We feel, also, that had it not been for the fact that our unions are under assessment for an eight-hour-day campaign, and many expect that the sinews of war will be needed at home, there would not have been a union in the jurisdiction but would have had its name on the roll before this.

Several offers of donations from outside sources, parties not connected in any way except through newspapers, have been tendered your committee, but have not so far been considered, except in one or two small amounts from former members. It is the belief of your committee that this project is purely one concerning printers, and they should handle it; it will be their monument, and they should pay for it. It can be unhesitatingly said that the committee could go out tomorrow and secure the remaining sum from those who are friends in other walks of life, and it would be given gladly.

While the committee has reached—several times over—with its numerous appeals and circulars, the various unions, there are undoubtedly some that do not realize the importance of the undertaking and the benefit and comfort the erection of this proposed extension to the Home will mean. We are trying to educate such as fast as possible to the right way of thinking, and if it were possible for members of this committee to appear in person before those unions that have not yet responded, it is safe to say that it would be only a question of a few months until the amount desired was in the hands of the secretary-treasurer, the money turned over to the Home trustees, the plans for the building of the Amos J. Cummings library extension to the Union Printers' Home accepted from the architect, the committee discharged and the whole matter closed up. We will keep at it, however, until such a happy result follows. The sum needed is about $20,000; more than half has been raised; we ask the aid of all to complete the good work so nobly begun by those charitable and thoughtful unions that have made it so successful thus far.

In appealing to the unions, all branches—printers, mailers, German-American, newswriters—have been treated alike. A perusal of the report of the donations by the secretary-treasurer will show how they have replied.

It will also be noticed how warmly the ladies of the woman's auxiliary have rallied to the support of the committee in the matter of donations. It may be safely said that if they had our membership and the same spirit of progress they now have, the erection of the addition would be well under way by this time.

Up to the time of the reorganization of the committee the expenses attached to the work had been slight, and had been paid by the International. As soon as the new work was started all expenses incurred were ordered by the executive board paid from the funds raised, which was eminently proper and correct, as they would necessarily be much larger under the new regime. Thousands of the various circulars were necessary, and the printing and stationery accounts would be considerable. Believing in putting out money to get money, no niggardliness was considered in this connection, though no excess was permitted. Each committeeman was furnished with all necessary supplies to cover his territory. The item of postage alone in such a campaign as we have conducted is no small one. But it has been money well spent. The entire itemized expense, up to the close of the fiscal year, for printing, postage, supplies, stationery, time, etc., according to the report of Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood, through whom all bills were paid, totals $832.85.

President Lynch and Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood, as well as many other officers and individual members throughout the jurisdiction, have been of great help to the committee and rendered much valuable aid. In this connection we desire to express our appreciation and thanks to those unions that have heeded our appeals, and to all who have aided us in any way.

Mrs. Amos J. Cummings has written several letters to the committee wishing us Godspeed in our work, and we again have her assurance that the library of her late husband will be ready for its resting place in our addition as soon as we are ready to receive it. She has also expressed her desire to be with us upon the occasion of the dedication of the same.

No plans have been entered into by the committee looking to the commencing of work on the structure. However, architects have of their own motion prepared plans which give an excellent idea of what proportions and outline the proposed structure would be. We do not desire to burden this report with all the many details and advantages thereof, but suffice it to say that the proposed addition will extend eastward from the present building, facing north, be 65x42 feet in size, three stories high, and basement; that it would give an assembly room 40x100 feet, a library 50x36; furnish accommodations for forty-eight more residents on the second and third floors with sixteen more sleeping rooms, 12x15 feet each; secure an extension to the dining-room of 23x36 feet, and increase the size of the kitchen, serving room, storage, refrigerator rooms, bakery, etc., in fact, greatly add to the comfort and enjoyment of the inmates in every way, such as the giving of entertainments for their amusement, especially in winter or bad weather.

This report can not be cumbered with a list of those unions that have donated, and the amounts, or those that have pledged but not yet sent in to headquarters. The roll is a goodly one and a reference to the financial report of the secretary-treasurer will give all the desired information on this point.

It is the belief of the committee that this work should not be allowed to languish. We are too far on the road to complete success to falter or even consider a cessation of the work. The crowded condition of the Home, the constantly increasing demand for accommodations there, only too plainly say to all thinking members of the International Typographical Union that there must be a building provided and more accommodations secured for those of our members who fall in the battle of life. We believe that the easiest way to secure this is to continue on in the work of raising the amount necessary to erect this Amos J. Cummings library extension in memory of one of us who has passed on, and provide more comforts and enjoyments for those who can no longer keep up the fight and have been compelled to seek the shelter of the friendly harbor erected by the printer man for the anchoring of the bark of his fellow that is no longer able to successfully combat the waves on life's rough sea. No one of us is secure in our present good fortune, and we may be the next to seek that stone asylum that marks the International Typographical Union as being the first to care for its infirm and maintain a home for them, as it was the pioneer in thorough unionism in all the word means. This convention can well afford to go on record in any way possible that will bring ultimate and complete success to the aims of this committee and thousands of members of the jurisdiction. We are so near the complete fruition of the idea; the amount remaining is so small, and the 50-cent piece from each member that has not yet contributed would go so far and bring so many comforts to old age and the weak and sick, far from home and kindred, that we are sure that the delegates will wisely do that which is best in their sight to have those unions not yet on the roll of honor get there. This is no compulsory matter; more than 45,000 members of a great, big, strong labor union that is looked up to by all other crafts as the embodiment of all that goes to make up progress and intelligence, can surely be depended upon to do the right thing at the right time. Nothing could redound more to our credit and standing than the blazoning forth of the fact that voluntarily we had again gone down in our pockets and provided for our own; we did it twice before, why not once more?

LABEL COMMITTEE ON TEXT BOOKS.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—The International Typographical Union label committee on text books has had a busy year and a generally satisfactory one. Though there have been no large cities which have replaced non-union books with those bearing the label, we feel that this would not be so had the contracts for supplying books been given out during the year just closed. These contracts in many instances call for the supplying of books for a term of five years, and when this term expires, as it will in many places during the year to come, we feel that the results of our work will be apparent.

We have sent out during the last year some hundreds of circulars to as many cities, asking for information as to the firms supplying books to their schools, as to what proportion bear the label, and when the contract for new books would be awarded. The answers to these circulars were generally prompt and very comprehensive, and have been a great help to us in our work. They have given us information which will be invaluable in the future, as showing where the non-union publishers are strong and where label books are in use; also when contracts are to be given out.

Unfortunately we are not able to report the further adoption of the label by any school-book publishing house, and have to record the discontinuance of the label by a house which has always used it. This has been caused, as near as we are able to judge, by some petty dispute which arose with one of the small unions in the allied trades, a dispute which probably could have been, and, considering the limited number of label school-book publishing houses, absolutely should have been settled without requiring this firm to discontinue the use of the label.

Your committee believes that to attain the object for which it was formed and toward which it is working two things are necessary: First, the membership must be brought to understand the necessity for and the benefits to be derived from the placing of the label on school books, and through good committees must work with this end in view. Second, the use of the label on their publications by book publishers should not be made a burden and a constant source of friction, as many claim it now is. As at present constituted the different branches of the allied trades are often not in harmony with each other, and through this lack of harmony the publisher sometimes suffers. We believe that there should be greater safeguards thrown around the use of the label, that through the caprice or jealousy or misunderstanding of any branch of the allied trades no publisher should be made to discontinue the use of the label, and that we fight as ardently to have the label retained by publishers as we do to have them adopt it. And we would recommend that this matter, with special reference to the use of the label by school-book publishers, be taken up by the joint conference board at its next sitting.

We wish to extend our hearty thanks to those members of text-book committees throughout the country who have so willingly co-operated with us, and we believe that with the continuance of the work so well begun by them that the future looks bright for the cause of the label on text books. We wish, also, to thank the international officers for their assistance, extended at every opportunity.

Respectfully submitted,

N. E. MCPHAIL, Chairman.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES—ANNUAL MEETING.

The board of trustees of the Union Printers' Home met at the Home, in Colorado Springs, Colo., at 10 A. M., Tuesday, September 6, and continued in session until Saturday evening, September 10, with the following officers and members in attendance: James M. Lynch, president; Thomas McCaffery, vice-president; J. W. Bramwood, secretary-treasurer; L. C. Shepard, T. F. Crowley, W. J. White and H. H. Rogers. A. H. McQuilkin, editor of the Inland Printer, Chicago, Ill., the invited guest of the board, was also present.

SUMMARY OF BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

The minutes of the last annual meeting, the regular corporation meeting and a special meeting of the latter body, were read and approved.

A letter from Superintendent Deacon, regarding needed improvements and changes in the rules, was read. That portion of the superintendent's letter relating to the rules was referred to the committee on rules.

A motion prevailed to defer action on the repairs and improvements suggested by the superintendent until after the official inspection. It was also decided that the other matters touched upon by the superintendent be handled under the order of new business.

The secretary was instructed to post notices in the main building and hospital annex, inviting and requesting inmates having complaints to make, or suggestions or recommendations to offer for the consideration of the trustees, to present them on Friday morning.

It was announced by the superintendent that the city council of Colorado Springs had just ordered the extension of its six-inch water main to the Home grounds, and would put in two hydrants for fire protection only.

Plans for the improvement of the Home grounds were discussed. The Home gardener expressed the belief that it would be a good idea to have plans, etc., to be followed in making contemplated improvements. It was moved that the resident trustee and superintendent be instructed to obtain from a competent landscape architect a set of plans for further beautifying the Home grounds, these plans to be based on a topographical map to be obtained by them.

On the question of annexing the Home to the city of Colorado Springs, it was decided that the city attorney be consulted by the board relative to the advantages and disadvantages of such action.

President Lynch was instructed to confer with the officers of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and endeavor to have the members of that body place the Home on the free list of their papers.

The action of the International Typographical Union on the Cummings memorial annex to the Home was read.

Propositions Nos. 52 and 55, from the St. Louis convention, relating to the admission of the wives of aged and infirm members who enter the Home, were discussed. It was the sense of the board that the plan is not feasible, and that the matter of expressing these views be referred to the executive committee for completion; its report to be submitted to the board.

The board decided that the matter of admitting women members to the Home would be disposed of in the regular way when application is filed.

San Francisco Union No. 21 was given one year in which to indicate its position as to refurnishing and continuing the San Francisco room as a memorial room.

It was decided that a first-class duplex pump be installed, the cost not to exceed $750; that if it is ascertained that the cost will exceed the above amount, this matter shall be again submitted to the board for action.

The engineer, in response to questions, gave it as his opinion that there is sufficient boiler capacity at present to furnish the necessary heat for all buildings and also for fourteen tents.

The following motion was adopted: "That the necessary changes be made in the piping to insure the proper heating of all rooms in the annex."

On the question of paying pensions during the consideration of appeals, it was ordered that the pension be withheld until the case is decided. If the decision is adverse, no pension to be paid. If the decision is favorable, the appellant to receive back pension.

It was ordered that six additional tents be erected for tuberculosis patients, and that all tents be equipped with steam heat. The rules committee was instructed to prepare a rule requiring tent occupants to care for their tent. As to additional rules governing residents occupying tents, it was the sense of the board that the superintendent has ample authority at present to deal with such cases.

Minor matters were disposed of as follows: To enlarge the dining-room in the annex, the removal of the partition between the dining and assembly room was ordered, as recommended by the superintendent. An order was issued for the necessary repairs to the plastering of the main building and for the protection of the walls. The necessary repairs to the billiard and pool tables were authorized. A motion to repair the eaves troughs, where necessary, prevailed. The superintendent was instructed to purchase an electric clock. Action on the question of erecting a storage warehouse was postponed one year. Authority was given the superintendent to purchase the necessary mattresses, rugs and rubber matting. The erection of an addition to the greenhouse was authorized. A new and suitable bath tub was ordered placed in the head nurse's room in the annex. The superintendent was instructed to purchase a sufficient number of bedside tables and head rests, and a rattan couch for the annex.

The superintendent was instructed to have the monthly accounts ready for Trustee McCaffery to examine on or before the sixth of the succeeding month, and the resident trustee was instructed to forward the bills to headquarters on or before the tenth of each month.

Shades were ordered placed on the electric lights in the dormitories and hallways.

Authority was given for the purchase of a new registry book, and its installation on January 1, 1905.

The following was adopted: "That the necessary lighting appliances be attached to the electric lights in the rooms on the lower floor of the main building occupied by hospital patients."

A motion prevailed to approve the proposed lettering for the inscription at the main entrance to the Home, and that the work be pushed to completion.

The question of purchasing the Palmer Electric Plant at Glen Eyrie was referred to the resident trustee and superintendent, with instructions to investigate and report to the board.

The following communication from Nashville was read:

Mr. James M. Lynch, Colorado Springs, Colo.:

My Dear Sir—Nashville Typographical Union No. 20 ordered an oil painting of our late friend, the Hon. William Aimison, to be placed in the Union Printers' Home. As chairman of the committee in charge I had hoped to have the picture at the Home during the meeting of the board of trustees. The picture is not quite ready for shipment, as the artist desires to make a few slight changes suggested by relatives of Mr. Aimison. When the picture is completed will send to Superintendent Deacon. With best wishes, I remain,

Yours truly,

The purchase of a wheeled invalid chair by the superintendent was ordered; residents wheeling it to be placed on the pension list.

It was the sense of the board that the picture of the late Trustee Aimison be placed in the Jefferson Davis memorial room.

On the subject of books, the board authorized the president and secretary to purchase such as might be deemed necessary, the cost not to exceed $100.

On motion the superintendent was instructed to purchase a room register, as per the drawing submitted.

The following officers were elected for the term beginning with November:

President—James M. Lynch.

Vice-President—Thomas McCaffery.

Secretary-Treasurer—J. W. Bramwood.

Home Physician—Dr. Christopher.

It was moved that the resident trustee and superintendent be empowered to procure plans for the contemplated addition to the Home, provided that no cost attach thereto, unless the plans are accepted and the building erected. Carried.

Trustee McCaffery was voted $150 for services performed as resident trustee during the past year.

The messengers were voted $1 each and the sergeant-at-arms $3, for services performed during the board meeting.

Superintendent Deacon was instructed to request Fire Chief Baty, of Colorado Springs, to visit the Home and make suggestions and recommendations that would tend to afford more adequate fire protection.

The following was adopted:

The members of the board of trustees of the Union Printers' Home, having carefully inspected the crossing of the Santa Fe road at Pike's Peak avenue, Colorado Springs, are convinced that this crossing is one of the most dangerous that ever came under our notice. We are solicitous for the welfare of all residents of the Home. We are informed that several narrow escapes from serious accidents have taken place, and we feel sure that unless relief is promptly furnished by the Santa Fe railroad, terrible catastrophes are in store; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we condemn the dangerous crossing made by the Santa Fe road at Pike's Peak avenue; that we demand that this crossing be immediately placed in a safe condition; and that we call on the citizens of Colorado Springs to aid us in securing relief.

During the meeting of the board of trustees all residents of the institution were examined and testimony taken in relation to the food provided, the service, management, and general conditions prevailing at the Home.

The board adjourned sine die Saturday, September 10, at 10 P. M.

OTHER BUSINESS TRANSACTED.

The following additional business was transacted by correspondence during the fiscal year:

In June, 1904, the superintendent was authorized to serve a lunch to the patrons of Denver Union's excursion to the Home, provided all expenses in connection therewith were guaranteed and paid by Denver Union.

On July 2, 1904, the board invited Superintendent Deacon to attend the St. Louis convention of the International Typographical Union at the expense of the Home fund.

Adverse action on the request of J. A. Gibson for transportation from South McAlester, I. T., to Jacksonville, Fla., was taken on July 21, 1904. Mr. Gibson was furnished with transportation to South McAlester when he left the Home, and the board held that he had received all that was due him under the law.

Authority was given Superintendent Deacon on July 16, 1904, to arrange for the annual picnic of the Home inmates at Green Mountain Falls, at the expense of the Home fund.

New Orleans Union No. 17 appealed, on July 12, 1904, from the decision of the admission committee in declining to authorize the admission of J. J. Aberle on the ground that the applicant was afflicted with locomotor ataxia and was unable to get around without assistance. The board affirmed the committee's decision under date of July 25, 1904.

On October 15, 1904, C. M. Loughlin, of Norfolk No. 32, who had been notified by Superintendent Deacon of his expulsion for interference with employes in the performance of duty and general obnoxious conduct, appealed to the board for clemency. The board suspended sentence during good behavior, and ordered Mr. Loughlin's pension discontinued for two months.

An appeal from the decision of the admission committee in the case of H. H. Spencer was filed by El Paso Union No. 370 on October 15, 1904. Mr. Spencer's application was acted upon unfavorably by the committee because the applicant was suffering from locomotor ataxia. The board sustained the appeal and authorized Mr. Spencer's admission to the Home. Its decision was based upon his personal statement of his condition, and was rendered with the understanding that he would be immediately returned to El Paso at the expense of his union if the Home physician found his physical condition, upon his arrival at the Home, to be other than represented.

In November, 1904, Fire Chief Baty, of Colorado Springs, who examined the fire protection at the Home at the request of the board, filed a report, in which he recommended improved fire escapes, an extension of the water system, the installation of a fire alarm system, the purchase of additional hose, extinguishers and other fire-fighting apparatus. The board ordered the superintendent to carry out the suggestions of Chief Baty without delay, and the improvements were completed during the year.

The purchase of five roller chairs, from the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, at an estimated cost of $75, was ordered in November, 1904.

Boston Union No. 13 appealed, in December, 1904, from the decision of the admission committee in the case of W. J. Crawford, whose application for admission to the Home was denied because the applicant was suffering from locomotor ataxia. The board sustained the action of the committee.

Early in January, 1905, Dr. Robinson, the Home oculist, advised the superintendent that an operation upon Joseph Waddingham's eyes was necessary in order to save the vision. The doctor asked $50 for the operation, and at the same time called attention to his increasing duties, and asked that his salary be increased from $75 to $150 per year. He proposed, if the increase was granted, that $150 should cover the cost of all work done for Home inmates. The board accepted the doctor's proposition, and ordered him to perform the necessary operation on Mr. Waddingham.

C. H. Anderson, of St. Louis No. 8, who had been notified of his expulsion by Superintendent Deacon for continued violation of the Home rule regarding intoxicating liquors, appealed for clemency and promised compliance with the Home rules, under date of January 4, 1905. The board ordered Mr. Anderson's pension discontinued for four months and granted him permission to remain at the Home during good behavior.

Permission was asked by G. S. Weaver, of New York No. 6, who was operated upon by Dr. Christopher, to have a book of his sermons printed in pamphlet form. Mr. Weaver's object in making this request was to sell the books and reimburse the Home fund for the expenses in connection with the operation in question. The board decided that Rule 5 would prevent Mr. Weaver from carrying out his intention.

In May, 1905, the superintendent asked the board to establish a rule relative to male inmates visiting the rooms of female residents of the Home, and vice versa. Visiting of this character was forbidden by the board, except when the patient is bedridden. In such cases the visit must be made within certain hours, and the nurse, matron or a responsible third party be present. It was the opinion of the board that the reading rooms, porches and grounds of the Home afford ample opportunity for the exchange of conversation and courtesies between male and female residents of the Home. The superintendent was instructed to issue an order covering this question, with the understanding that a rule on the subject would be adopted at the annual meeting of the trustees.

Columbia Union No. 101, through its officers, advised the board, in April, 1905, that it desired to furnish a memorial room at the Home for its lady members. The board informed the union that it had no objections to its furnishing a room at the Home, provided the room is furnished by direction of the board, and is at its disposal. The board declined to consent to the furnishing of a room to be set aside especially for lady members of Washington Union, as the accommodations at the Home made it necessary for the board to have at its disposal all rooms in the institution.

In May, 1905, a proposition to make a perspective drawing of the Home and grounds, at an estimated cost of $125, was submitted by the Williamson-Haffner Engraving Company, of Denver, Colo. A complete view of the Home buildings and grounds being desired for use on the Home stationery and other purposes, the offer of the company was accepted and an order given, through the superintendent, for the drawing and such halftones as may be required.

J. W. Bramwood,
Secretary-Treasurer.

THE LATE WILLIAM AIMISON.

At the annual meeting of the board of trustees of the Union Printers' Home, held in the city of Colorado Springs, Colo., on September 6, 1904, Trustees Bramwood, Shepard and McCaffery were appointed a committee to formulate the sentiments of the board of trustees in reference to the life and character of the late William Aimison, who was for many years a member of the board. The committee submitted the following minute, to be inserted in the records of the board, expressive of the sentiments of that body:

"On the night of February 26, 1904, the spirit of William Aimison passed calmly out of its earthly habitation, and entered upon its journey o'er the placid sea of eternity, leaving thousands of friends and fellow craftsmen to mourn his demise. His life was an exemplification of unselfish devotion to his country and his fellow man, in whose behalf many years of his early manhood, his energy and his intellect were given without stint and with no thought of remuneration save that which comes " 'With records sweet of duties done.'

"The members of the board of trustees of the Union Printers' Home were profoundly grieved when informed of the death of William Aimison, who had been an honored member of the Home board almost continuously from the time of its inception until the date of his death, and whose devotion to the welfare of the institution never ceased, or even lagged. His sympathetic heart went out in the fullest to those whose afflictions or failings appealed to his generous nature, and words of consolation and wholesome advice were given to all who sought his counsel. Only those who were intimately associated with Trustee Aimison can fully realize the loss sustained by the membership of the International Typographical Union, the board of trustees, and the residents of the Union Printers' Home, through his departure. His kindly nature endeared him to all, and in recognition of his upright and manly life he enjoyed in an unusual degree the confidence and esteem of the various members who have constituted the board of trustees during the many years he was connected with it.

"In whatever sphere of activity his lot was cast, either as printer, soldier of the Confederacy, legislator, president of the International Typographical Union, or member of the Home corporation, his conscientious endeavor to faithfully perform the duties pertaining to it won for him the respect and confidence of all, and the impress of his high ideals was always felt by those who came within its range.

" 'He has passed the confines of time, and his ashes are now slumbering upon the bosom of that mother earth that he fought for and loved so well. His ashes are sleeping there in the hope of an eternal resurrection, as the baby sleeps upon its mother's breast. Then, after a noble life, so kind to humanity, when that soul has fled beyond the clouds, and as the birds sing around his grave and the trees bloom where his ashes are now resting in peace, let us hope that the birds are but echoing the song of eternal happiness that is now ringing in his very soul; and as his memory goes down through the ages let us hope that other men who follow him will be inspired by his noble life; that they will fight not only for the cause of liberty and civilization, but that their lives will be spent for the uplifting of that noblest part of humanity—dignified, organized and healthy labor.'

"In placing upon the records of the Union Printers' Home this humble tribute to the memory of our departed fellow member, the Hon. William Aimison, we feel that we are acting in consonance with the wishes of the entire membership of the International Typographical Union, and are but echoing their sentiments."

Total	$570,080 02

The average number of inmates at the Home during the year was 134. On a basis of the total expenditures, the cost of maintaining the Home was $453.22 per year for each inmate. This calculation, it will be observed, includes the cost of repairs and improvements on the Home buildings, on which account there was expended $8,192.32. The building operations of the year are specifically covered in the superintendent's report, hence it is unnecessary to repeat the details here.

Aside from the building expenditures ($8,192.32) the cost of maintaining the Home was less than its revenue by $4,564.75. With the amount expended on the buildings, the expenses of the institution exceeded the revenue by $3,627.57. These figures clearly indicate that the present resources of the Home are barely more than adequate for the demands made upon them. While the number of inmates does not materially increase, and no extensive building operations are undertaken, additional revenue will not be needed. Another increase in per capita tax will be necessary with any marked increase in the demands on the Home fund.

Respectfully submitted,

J. W. Bramwood,

Secretary-Treasurer.

PENSION ACCOUNT.

The pension account for the twelve months ending May 31, 1905, amounted to $3,202, as against $2,882, an increase of $320 over the previous year. This is due to the increased number of residents. Each resident not provided for by his local union is given a weekly allowance of 50 cents, and where a willingness is shown to aid in caring for the grounds and performing other light labor an additional pension of from 50 cents to $1.50 is given. During the past year the following names have been borne upon the roll of those thus assisting: James McLaughlin, E. Lukowsky, Luther T. Quick, J. G. Schneider, George W. Hatch, John McGinty, Edward Martin, E. E. Mulligan, Joseph T. Purcell, Charles M. Carter, R. B. Hindle, Otto Kuntz, George Forbes, John McKillop, William Dunn, O.

This employment proves beneficial in two ways—it reduces the number of employes which would be otherwise necessary, and it is a matter of gratification to those who are thus furnished occupation which breaks the monotony of idleness that palls upon men who have led an active life. This is shown by the fact that there are always applications on file for any "sits" that become vacant. It also encourages the feeling among the residents that it is "our Home." In whatever a man has helped to produce or beautify, he feels a sense of ownership which can never attach to that which is furnished him by another.

THE LIBRARY.

The patronage of the library during the past year has again proved its popularity and confirmed the statement made in former reports that it was an exceedingly useful and necessary adjunct to life at the Home. Residents whose age or infirmities render it impossible for them to get about much find the library a comfortable and cheerful place to spend a few hours each day, engaged either in the perusal of its volumes, the dailies, the magazines, or in card playing or silent meditation.

During the past year there were received about 100 books from various sources, including 24 bound volumes from Mr. William Lycett, New York, from Mrs. Grove, Des Moines, Iowa, 58 bound volumes, and pamphlets and public documents from the Hon. Franklin E. Brooks. The monthlies received since last October have been greatly appreciated, as also the daily and weekly papers added. There are received at present 115 (last year 88) daily, 51 weekly and 50 monthly publications, besides 12 dailies and 20 weeklies sent directly to residents. At the last meeting of the board the superintendent was instructed to subscribe for two copies each of a number of the leading magazines, which was done, and they are now kept regularly on file.

Through the courtesy of Commissioner Frederick Driscoll, of the Newspaper Publishers' Association, several dailies have been added to the files during the past few months.

Donations of entertaining books, new or in good condition, would be greatly appreciated.

The monthly entertainments which have been provided during the past winter have all been held in the library, and on nearly every occasion the limited space has made it somewhat uncomfortable for the audience, made up chiefly of Home residents. The entertainments have been a source of much pleasure to those whose condition has made it impossible for them to leave the Home, and to the residents generally. Convalescing residents of the hospital have contributed willingly and considerably to the amusement of their less fortunate brothers on these occasions.

The Cummings memorial extension, when erected, will aid materially in relieving the crowding on entertainment nights, as well as in solving the problem of the congestion which is fast approaching in the main building. It will also afford better stage accommodations, and thereby be the means of obtaining for the Home residents many performances gratis which are now kept away for want of stage room. The added space which will be obtained by the erection of the Cummings memorial will likewise make funeral services much more comfortable for those attending. The installation of the Cummings library will be welcomed with delight by the large number of book-loving residents.

MORTALITY RECORD.

The following table will show the mortality record for the past year:

An analysis of the above table will show that of the nineteen deaths during the past year fifteen have been from tuberculosis, and the following table will show that almost without exception the deceased were in an advanced stage at the time of admission. Twelve of the fifteen were here less than three months, and only one had been a resident of the Home a year, an advanced case of seven years' standing. One died the day after arrival (arrived in dying condition), and six only survived the trip four weeks or less.

During the year thirteen have vacated in whose condition no improvement was shown. Of this number ten were suffering with tuberculosis, the majority in an advanced stage:

11	52	1 month, 2 wks.	Impaired vision.
12	40	2 months, 2 wks.	Tuberculosis.
13	27	5 weeks.	Tuberculosis.

In connection with the mortality record it may be stated that since the institution of the Home the records show a total of 165 deaths, 108 of which have been caused by pulmonary tuberculosis.

The management again feels it its duty to call particular attention to the increasing rate of mortality among this class of inmates, and to point out the fact, shown both in the table of deaths from tubercular disease and in that denoting no improvement, that it is almost absolutely impossible to give at the Home treatment to advanced cases of this disease from which anything but temporary relief may be expected.

And once more does the management deem it imperative to call attention to the lack of care in the examination of intended inmates. Inmates whose condition on arrival shows an extremely advanced stage are often credited by the local physician with incipient ailment or as being in the first stage. The result of this is to tend to bring upon the Home unjust criticism, as the relatives and friends of the afflicted are misled, in the first place, as to the real condition of the patient, and disappointed, in the second, that he does not make rapid improvement. As has been pointed out time and time again, lack of knowledge as to the possible curative properties of Colorado air and sunshine leads many in the advanced stages of the disease to the belief that they will recover as rapidly as those in the earlier period, but it is borne out by all the records available that extremely advanced cases can hope for only temporary relief, if any. It would therefore, it seems, be the part of wisdom, wherever possible, to see that particular care is exercised by local examining physicians, to the end that many who are sent to the Home buoyed up by the hope of improvement may not be suddenly cast down and their demise hastened by an awakening, after their arrival, to their true condition and the impossibility of recovery.

As has been said before, if it were possible for the membership to witness some of the pathetic scenes occurring at the Home, caused by separating sufferers of this dread disease from their families and friends to take nerve-racking and strength-destroying journeys of thousands of miles, only to grow rapidly worse and die away from their loved ones, they would see to it that thorough attention was given to their examination, and would assure themselves that they were not doing the worst, rather than the best, for the afflicted in advising their admission.

RECORD OF IMPROVEMENT.

Contained in the following tables is a record of those who have vacated since the last report, and whose physical condition has rendered it possible for them to return to work. It is a noteworthy fact that of the total of twenty-nine who regained their strength and departed during the past year, seventeen were afflicted with lung trouble, chiefly, however, in the earlier stages. The following table will show their condition on admission and their time of residence:

VACATED, ABLE TO WORK. TUBERCULAR PATIENTS.

TENT TREATMENT FOR TUBERCULOSIS.

During the past year there were erected, by order of the board of trustees, ten tents of the "Nordrach" pattern. They have proved a valuable acquisition to the hospital service, as nearly 50 per cent of tubercular patients domiciled in them have been restored to a condition of health and strength sufficient to justify their return to work.

The tents are octagonal in shape, to minimize wind resistance. The framework is as substantial as that of a house. All intersections are reinforced with castings. Each tent has a one-piece casting (crown) at the top, with flanges to receive eight beams, forming the top of the tent. The frames will stand a wind blowing one hundred miles an hour. They are anchored on four sides by "T" buried three feet. All have hardwood floors. Ample circulation of air is obtained from ventilators in the floor on four sides of the tent and one in the peak, all so arranged as to be open or closed as desired. These ventilators are kept open except in extreme weather.

The tents are covered with the best 15-ounce double-filler army canvas, which is not affected by snow, rain or wind. These are the only steam-heated tents in the world, being heated by eleven-flange radiators with steam supplied by a system of underground pipes from the boiler-room, 150 feet distant. Each tent is furnished with a built-in clothes closet, drawers, mirror, washstand and comfortable furniture.

All occupants have shown marked improvement in health and strength in from three to six months, and in several cases cough has disappeared almost entirely. The tenters have become accustomed to the cold, and during the recent extreme weather (February, 1905) have made few complaints. The first evidence of improvement in these cases usually comes through increased circulation of blood and better appetite. Raw eggs, milk, roast and broiled meats are usually eaten, and as digestion and assimilation improve a more varied diet is consumed.

First-stage patients improve rapidly in these tents. Those in the second stage advance more slowly, but all show a tendency upward. Every sanitary precaution is taken in hospital and tents to prevent reinfection. Sputum cups are used night and day, and strict attention is paid to the disinfection of clothing.

HOME PHYSICIAN'S REPORT.

Colorado Springs, Colo., June 7, 1905.

Charles Deacon, Superintendent Union Printers' Home:

Dear Sir—In presenting my annual report I wish, first of all, to thank the management of the Home for the cordial good will and confidence reposed in me during the year just closing. I regret that I am unable to report a considerably reduced mortality list over last year. A decreased number in the death list over last year is made impossible by the admission during the period covered of a large number of tubercular patients in the last stages of the disease. I point with satisfaction, however, to the low mortality rate among the older residents, among whom would naturally be expected a constantly increasing death rate in ratio with advancing years.

It will be seen from the mortality list that there have been nineteen deaths, fifteen of them from tuberculosis. Of these latter a few had been at the Home some time, but the great majority had been but recently admitted. Two of the four deaths from other causes than tuberculosis were from paralysis, one from insanity, and one from anemia and old age.

It seems a pity many of the tubercular patients admitted do not come to the Home before they are beyond the possibility of any permanent benefit. Once in a while, however, a patient whose case would seem almost hopeless will show indisputable evidences of improvement, and cases of this sort are known that have vacated in comparatively good condition. Of the patients in the earlier stages that have received the Home treatment, quite a number have gone out in a condition permitting them to work part and in some instances all the time.

The treatment of tuberculosis in tents at the Home has long since passed the experimental stage. I do not know of a single case that has given the treatment a fair trial that has not been materially benefited thereby. A number of patients have gained from ten to twenty pounds in weight by continually living in the pure, dry air. I would strongly urge an increase of the number of tents yearly until every patient admitted to the Home whose condition is not hopeless has an opportunity to get the benefit of the advantages that are indisputably obtained by life in the open air.

Again I would urge that examinations of prospective residents be made more thorough and complete, that the Home physician may better ascertain the real condition of applicants before their departure on a long and perhaps injurious journey. Respectfully submitted,

D. I. Christopher, Home Physician.

PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS.

At the last meeting of the board the superintendent was instructed to have plans made for a general improvement of landscape on the Home grounds. In accordance with the instructions the services of A. B. Westland, formerly superintendent Taj Mahal and Government Gardens, India, later of Botanic and Forest Department, Hong Kong, China, and Botanic Gardens, Kew, were secured, and Mr. Westland has perfected a complete set of plans for laying out the entire Home grounds, heretofore only partly utilized. These plans include provision for extended floral display as well as a general rearrangement of lawns, walks, planting of trees, shrubbery windbreaks, etc. While it will take several years to carry these plans to completion, the Home grounds, when the plans are finally worked out, will be second to none of their size in the west for beauty of landscape and floral attractiveness. Considerable progress has been made thus far this season, under direction of Mr. Westland, who has been aided largely by convalescing residents.

The partition between the dining and reading rooms in the hospital annex has been removed, almost doubling the dining room capacity in that building, giving ample room for the increased capacity of the annex.

Two Kirker-Bender spiral fire escapes have been erected, one at each end of the main building.

A fire alarm system has been installed, with instruments distributed throughout the institution, so that in case of fire one has only to step a few yards to turn in an alarm that will arouse all of the employes, who are drilled in the use of the apparatus, which has also been added to the past year.

The city of Colorado Springs has laid a six-inch water main through the Home grounds, connecting to a Smith-Vaile duplex force pump in the engine room, which can be almost instantly put in operation, thus insuring ample fire protection.

Electric fans have been placed in the billiard room in the main building and in the hospital annex kitchen.

An addition has been made to the greenhouses, which gives ample room for the propagation of bedding plants.

A night watchman's detector has been installed, with stations distributed over all parts of the institution, thus compelling the night watchman to record the exact time of his visit to each station.

An additional plot of ground has been purchased in Evergreen Cemetery. The plot consists of 103 lots, adjoins the Home's present burial ground, and will afford opportunity, when it is deemed advisable, for a rearrangement of the graves of our dead, and for such further improvements as will lend dignity and beauty to the last resting-place of those of our members whose demise occurs at the Home.

CONCLUSION.

It is pleasant to report that the conduct of the vast majority of residents during the past year has been such as to warrant the statement that they have generally co-operated with the management in enforcing the few rules made by the board for the protection of all. During the year eighty have been admitted, forty-five vacated, nineteen died, and two were expelled. Of the latter, one was expelled for intoxication and one for obnoxious conduct.

In conclusion, I wish to thank President Lynch and Secretary Bramwood for the prompt manner in which all correspondence has been answered the past year, and Resident Trustee McCaffery for his cheerful compliance with my request when matters at the Home required his presence.

Respectfully submitted,

CHARLES DEACON,
Superintendent.

In presenting the foregoing report the board of trustees of the Home has endeavored to fully comply with the laws requiring that conventions of the International Typographical Union shall be furnished with a complete account of the transactions of those intrusted with the management of the institution. We also desire to assure the delegates to the Toronto session and the membership in general that it has been our aim to fully carry out the terms of the trust reposed and to administer the affairs of the Home in such a manner as would prove creditable to the International Typographical Union and beneficial to those enjoying the privileges of the institution.

Respectfully submitted,

JAMES M. LYNCH,
THOMAS MCCAFFERY,
L. C. SHEPARD,
H. H. ROGERS,
W. J. WHITE,
THOMAS F. CROWLEY,
J. W. BRAMWOOD,
Board of Trustees.

LABOR TEMPLE, TORONTO, CANADA,
Monday, August 14, 1905.

The convention was called to order at 10 o'clock by Hugh Stevenson, of Toronto, chairman of the committee of arrangements of Typographical Union No. 91, who invited the following gentlemen to the platform:

Reverend Bernard Bryan, an ex-printer.

Hon. J. P. Whitney, premier of the Province of Ontario.

Thomas Urquhart, Esq., mayor of Toronto.

Alderman J. J. Graham, chairman of the civic reception committee.

Prof. Goldwin Smith.

Robert Glockling, president International Brotherhood of Bookbinders.

Edward Randall, first vice-president International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union.

John McVicar, of Detroit, ex-president International Typographical Union.

John Armstrong, ex-president of International Typographical Union, and president of ex-delegates' association of Toronto.

Edward M. Meehan, president of Toronto Typographical Union.

Mr. Stevenson briefly welcomed the delegates in behalf of the local organization, and emphasized the fact that geographical lines were not recognized in International trade unionism. He referred to the session of the International Typographical Union in 1881, and expressed the hope that twenty-five years would not elapse before the convention met in Toronto again.

President Meehan took the chair and invited Rev. Bernard Bryan to offer the invocation.

Premier Whitney received a rousing reception when he rose to address the convention on behalf of the province. He assured the delegates that he was pleased to address a craft that had been honored by such men as Benjamin Franklin, Horace Greeley, and the late E. F. Clarke. "The time has gone past for argument as to the benefits of trade unionism," said the premier. "Its benefits are already recognized. I want to assure you from across the line that you are heartily welcome to the Province of Ontario. It would be a crime to disturb the good feeling that exists between the two nations. We have on this platform one of the greatest publicists of this age and one of the greatest thinkers of this or any other age, and I hope to hear his voice on this platform today. I refer to Prof. Goldwin Smith."

Mayor Urquhart extended the welcome on behalf of the city. He said there was no city on the continent so well organized as Toronto in the trade union movement, and the influence of organized labor was felt in the civic contracts, which provide for the payment of the prevailing or union rate of wages. The typographical union has given to Toronto many useful and prominent citizens, among them the late E. F. Clarke, and there are other members of the organization who will leave behind them monuments to their good work in behalf of humanity. Mayor Urquhart made special reference to the souvenir published by the local convention committee, and stated that it was but an evidence of the development of the printing industry within the past quarter of a century. It was a pleasure for him to announce that in the public schools of Toronto the school books were provided to the pupils free of cost. "I wish to congratulate the International Typographical Union upon the organization of the ladies' auxiliaries," said the mayor, "and I feel that any organization which admits the ladies is not very far astray. The ladies will not give their approbation to anything that does not stand for righteousness and truth, and I am sure the organization will be made better by the association of the ladies."

Alderman Graham, chairman of the civic reception committee, said he had heard it said that a blot of ink made thousands think, and he was quite sure that a line of type just before election time made many an alderman think. Almost every trade and profession in the city was organized, and about the only class of workers that were not organized were the aldermen. There were prospects, however, that even the aldermen would be organized in the near future. "My only duties during this convention," said Alderman Graham, "are to see that your local committee does not run out of funds and to inform the police that if any of the delegates are caught taking what doesn't belong to them they must not be arrested."

The reception tendered Prof. Goldwin Smith was of a flattering character. The delegates rose from their seats and waved their handkerchiefs and cheered. He said in part: "As an emeritus professor of an American university, though still an Englishman, I have a special interest in welcoming Americans here. There are amongst us a few persons who seem to think it is a necessary part of Canadian patriotism to cherish jealousy of the designs of our neighbors across the line. Now, let me say that for more than thirty years I have been conversant with Americans of every class and party, with politicians, commercial men, military men, and those young students who always give free expression to their sentiments, and in the course of all those years I have never heard a single expression of ill-feeling against Canada or of desire in any way to aggress upon her independence. If ever those imaginary lines, as a speaker called them, disappear, if ever sentimental union should come to pass, it will not be by the action of force or in the form of annexation (a name which I abhor), but with the free consent of both parties and with the blessing of their common mother country."

Robert Glockling, president of the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, referred to the solidarity of the trade union movement in Toronto and stated that the local union men had fully measured up to their responsibilities and had built up a movement that was a credit to the city.

Edward Randall, vice-president of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, congratulated the delegates upon the great victory in the establishment of the eight-hour day in the city of San Francisco, where all the allied printing trades had combined to protect their interests.

E. M. Meehan, president of Toronto Typographical Union, presented the welcome of the organization over which he presides. He marked the progress of the printing industry in Toronto, and stated that it ranked fifth among the cities of the continent. He emphasized the significance of the convention meeting in the Labor Temple, and said that the local union was proud to be able to invite the International organization to hold its convention in a building owned and managed by the trade unionists of the city.

John Armstrong and John McVicar, ex-presidents of the International Union, extended words of welcome.

President Meehan then presented the gavel to President Lynch, who took the platform to respond to the words of welcome. He said that printers were naturally modest, and did not expect all the nice things that had been said about them. It was fitting that a great organization should hold its great convention in a great nation, among a great people. He said that during the past twenty-four years the membership of the International Typographical Union had increased to 50,000, and there were fully 75,000 union men allied with the printing industries. Fully 25,000 members of the International Typographical Union were working under the eight-hour day, and the organization was moving irresistibly towards a universal eight-hour day. "I would like to ask the premier of the province and other leading citizens on this platform to kindly speak to the customs officers just before we make our departure," said President Lynch. "We don't want them to be too rigorous in examining our baggage, and we ask this leniency especially on behalf of the ladies."

The president announced that the first order of business was the report of Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood.

Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood read his report, as follows:

Respectfully submitted,
J. W. BRAMWOOD,
Secretary-Treasurer.

The report of the secretary-treasurer was received, and the recommendation concurred in.

President Lynch called upon the delegates to rise, and administered the obligation.

It was moved that the sessions of the convention be from 10 A. M. to 1 P. M. and from 3 P. M. to 6 P. M.

Delegate Draper (Ottawa, Canada) moved to amend by making the hours from 9 to 12 A. M. and 2 to 5 P. M.

The motion as amended was adopted.

Delegate Smith (Philadelphia) asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution granting the privilege of the floor to officers, ex-officers and organizers; but objection was made, and the president ruled the matter was not in order until a permanent organization was effected by the appointment of officers and committees.

The chair announced that in accordance with precedent established by previous conventions he would appoint the following convention officers:

The president announced that in accordance with instructions contained in the resolutions submitted at the fiftieth session of the International Typographical Union in St. Louis, relating to the appointment of a committee to consider the mutual interests between the International Typographical Union and the telegraphers, he had appointed as such committee: William E. Orser, of Rochester Typographical Union No. 15; A. H. Blain, of Seattle Typographical Union No. 202; T. F. Kane, of Boston Typographical Union No. 13; Emmett Whealan, of Chicago Typographical Union No. 16, and Charles J. Buehler, of Milwaukee Typographical Union No. 23.

The president also stated that by request of the several delegates from Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2 they had been excused from duty on any of the committees.

Delegate Smith (Philadelphia) again asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution granting the privilege of the floor to officers, ex-officers and organizers of the International Typographical Union. Objection being made, the president ruled that it would require an amendment of the by-laws to accomplish the purpose sought.

Delegate Smith (Philadelphia) moved that the rules be suspended.

The president declared the motion out of order.

Delegate Smith then offered the following proposition to amend the by-laws:

Proposition No. 65—By Delegate Smith (Philadelphia):

Insert before the word "shall," in line 2, section 4, article i of the by-laws, the words: "Officers and officers-elect of the International Typographical Union, ex-presidents and ex-vice-presidents of the International Typographical Union, and organizers commissioned by the president of the International Typographical Union."

The proposition was referred to the committee on laws.

The following proposition was introduced by the Philadelphia delegation:

Proposition No. 64—By the Philadelphia delegation:

Whereas, Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2 has for over fifteen months been engaged in a life-and-death struggle with the Philadelphia Inquirer; and,

Whereas, The success of the eight-hour day in a competitive district comprising over 60 per cent of the total membership of the International Typographical Union is dependent, to a great degree, on maintaining the integrity of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2, which can be accomplished only by sustaining the fight which Philadelphia Union is now carrying on;

Resolved, By the International Typographical Union, in fifty-first annual convention assembled, That we emphatically endorse the fight now being waged by Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2 against the Philadelphia Inquirer; and be it further

Resolved, That the executive council be and the same is hereby instructed to place at the disposal of the Philadelphia Union, immediately after return to headquarters, the sum of $7,800, this sum being due Philadelphia Union under a fair and equitable construction of both the Washington and St. Louis agreements between the executive council and Philadelphia Union, provided that Philadelphia Union out of this sum shall reimburse those of its sister unions who have contributed financial support; and be it further

Resolved, That the executive council be and the same is hereby instructed to continue financial assistance to Philadelphia at the rate of $200 per week until the Inquirer fight is won or until the next convention, provided, that Philadelphia Union contribute at least an equal amount and that the fight be conducted under the supervision and direction of the executive council, itemized vouchers being furnished that body by the local union for all moneys expended, and the work to be in charge of an International representative to be selected under the terms of the Washington agreement; and be it further

Resolved, That the executive council be and the same is hereby instructed, in case the eight-hour fight or any other circumstances drain the International Typographical Union treasury to such an extent as to endanger the continuation of the Philadelphia campaign or the regular work of organization, to submit to a vote of the referendum a proposition for an extra assessment in such amount and for such length of time as may be deemed necessary by the executive council to meet the contingency.

The foregoing was referred by President Lynch to the committee on appeals.

Delegate Kreft (Philadelphia) submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the committee to which the Philadelphia resolutions are referred be directed to report the resolutions back to the convention, favorably or unfavorably, not later than Tuesday, 2 P. M., and that this hour be fixed for the consideration of the resolutions.

Chairman Draper, of the committee on appeals, requested an extension of time, and after some discussion on the subject the resolution was lost.

President Lynch called Vice-President Hays to the chair.

President Lynch then took the floor as the representative of the executive council, and stated that the executive council had been charged with "stabbing No. 2 in the back;" "rendering aid and succor to the rats in their fight against the union;" with being "in league with the rat employers and rat printers of Philadelphia," etc. If the charges were true as made, the executive council was not fit to carry on the eight-hour movement, nor fit to conduct the business of the union; there was no middle course; they were either union or non-union; and if not union they had no business in the chairs. He said the papers in this case were in the hands of the delegates, and embraced in Proposition No. 1, an appeal by the council. On behalf of the council he earnestly requested an early disposition of the appeal presented.

Delegate Johnson (Washington, D. C.) moved that the committee on appeals be instructed to take up Proposition No. 1, the appeal of the executive council, and report on Tuesday morning, if possible.

[Proposition No. 1, the appeal mentioned, will be found under the heading "Communications and Propositions," following the first day's proceedings.]

After some debate by Delegates Smith (Philadelphia), Steele (Washington) and Faries (Philadelphia), Delegate Faries (Philadelphia) moved to amend that the Philadelphia case be taken up prior to the appeal of the council embraced in Proposition No. 1.

Delegate Kreft (Philadelphia) argued in favor of considering the Philadelphia matter first and the Smith matter afterward.

A rising vote was taken, and the amendment was lost by a vote of 74 ayes to 135 nays.

The original motion, that the committee on appeals report on Proposition No. 1 on Tuesday, or as early as possible, was then placed before the convention. The motion prevailed.

Delegate McLogan (Detroit) moved that the officers be allowed the privilege of the floor, but objection was made by Delegates Kreft and Smith (Philadelphia).

The chairman of the arrangements committee asked that when the convention adjourn it be until Tuesday morning, in order that entertainment furnished for the afternoon might be enjoyed.

It was moved that when the convention adjourn it be until Tuesday morning. The motion prevailed.

The president announced that members of the executive committee of the United Typothetæ were in the city and that the eight-hour committee would meet them this (Monday) afternoon; that President Ellis, of the United Typothetæ, would address the convention Tuesday, and Commissioner Driscoll, of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, would address the convention Wednesday.

Delegate Freeman (Binghamton) moved that the secretary of this convention be instructed to send a telegram of congratulation to the International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union in convention assembled at Chicago, Ill.

The motion prevailed, and the following telegram was forwarded:

TORONTO, CANADA, August 14, 1905.

J. J. Freel, President International Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union, care L. P. Straube, Room 302, 134 East Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.:

The International Typographical Union, in convention assembled, congratulates your organization upon its progress and expanding power. Convey to your officers and delegates the heartiest fraternal greetings and sincere wishes for your continued prosperity.

J. W. BRAMWOOD, Secretary-Treasurer.

After the announcement of the time and place of the meetings of the several committees, the president declared the convention adjourned until Tuesday at 9 A. M.

COMMUNICATIONS AND PROPOSITIONS.

The following communications and propositions were presented and referred to the appropriate committees:

Proposition No. 1—By the executive council:

Appeal of the executive council from the action taken by Philadelphia Union No. 2 in relation to the enforcement of section 81, general laws of the International Typographical Union, in an instance of violation of the law called to the attention of No. 2 by the council. The papers in this case will also be found on the desks of the delegates in printed form, entitled "The Smith Case."

A BRIEF RESUME.

To the Delegates to the Fifty-First Session of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—It will be remembered that during the month of February, 1905, an article appeared in the Trades Union News, published at Philadelphia, Pa., and edited by Shelby Smith, a member of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2, containing certain charges or statements reflecting upon the public and private character of the members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union.

On February 25, 1905, the executive council of the International Typographical Union addressed an official letter to the president and executive committee of Philadelphia Union No. 2, quoting some of the charges or denunciatory statements which appeared in the Trades Union News, and briefly commenting thereon. The council, in this letter, also quoted section 81 of the general laws of the International Typographical Union, and called upon the local officials above mentioned "to comply with the provisions of the law"—section 81—the terms of which are specific as to procedure and mandatory in effect.

On March 18, 1905, Philadelphia Union appointed a trial board in the Smith case.

On April 15, 1905, the trial board submitted its report, finding the defendant, Shelby Smith, not guilty.

The foregoing is only a brief synopsis of the documents in this case. In addition, we submit correspondence between the officers and members of the trial committee of No. 2 and the executive council, and also between Shelby Smith and the executive council. The editorials dealing with this subject which have appeared in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL—written by its editor, one of the members of the executive council—are also submitted, in order to complete the case.

It will be observed that the executive council at the outset requested the trial committee (see letter dated March 23, 1905) to furnish the council with "a copy of the minutes of the trial committee, including the testimony, and of the minutes of the meeting of No. 2 at which the report of the trial committee is acted upon." A reading of the correspondence will show that this request has not been complied with, notwithstanding its reiteration at different times.

A perusal of the correspondence will show further that Philadelphia Union, through its president, requested that the report of the trial committee be published in THE JOURNAL. The editor of THE JOURNAL brought this request to the attention of the executive council, and, under date of April 26, advised the president of No. 2 as follows: "The papers relating to the case are so bulky that there is some doubt as to the advisability of publishing the documents in THE JOURNAL. The council has, however, decided to give this matter publicity, but the manner and time of publication has not as yet been determined." At a later date the council decided to publish the documents in pamphlet form, for distribution to the delegates and presentation at the Toronto convention.

The executive council of the International Typographical Union herewith submits the documents in this case to the consideration of the delegates to the fifty-first session. The position of the executive council—individually and collectively—is very clearly presented in its letters to the officers and members of the trial board of Philadelphia Union No. 2, and also in THE JOURNAL editorial reproduced herewith. Fraternally yours,

JAMES M. LYNCH,
HUGO MILLER,
J. W. BRAMWOOD,
Executive Council of the International Typographical Union.

THE DOCUMENTS.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL REQUESTS PHILADELPHIA UNION TO ENFORCE SECTION 81 OF THE GENERAL LAWS.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 25, 1905.

Mr. Alfred D. Calvert, President, and the Executive Committee, Typographical Union No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

GENTLEMEN—We desire to draw your attention to section 81 of the general laws, reading as follows:

"Sec. 81. Any member or members of any subordinate union circulating or causing to be circulated in any way malicious or untrue statements reflecting upon the standing or character, private or public, of any officer or member of the International Typographical Union, or impugning the motives or reflecting upon the honesty of any officer or member of the International Typographical Union, shall be deemed guilty of ununionlike conduct, and upon conviction before a trial board shall be suspended or expelled, as two-thirds of the members may determine. It shall be the duty of the executive committee of each subordinate union to investigate and prosecute all violations of this law occurring within its jurisdiction. It shall also be the duty, and it is hereby imperatively ordered, that any subordinate union, or any member of a subordinate union, shall prefer charges before the proper authorities against all violators of this section."

There is issued in Philadelphia a labor publication entitled "The Trades Union News," published by "The Trades Union News Publishing Company, Shelby Smith and T. J. McCaffrey, Managers."

From the contents of this publication, the executive council of the International Typographical Union is amply justified in the assumption that Mr. Shelby Smith is the editor of the Trades Union News. Consulting the records of this office, we also find that Mr. Shelby Smith is a member of the International Typographical Union and of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2. We do not believe that the before-mentioned facts will be disputed, or attempted to be disputed, by the officers of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2, inasmuch as between honest men there should be no question as to absolute fact.

In the issue of the Trades Union News of Thursday, February 9, 1905, Volume 2, No. 17, the following heading and paragraphs appear:

"Executive Council of I. T. U. Again Stabs No. 2 in the Back.

"Renders Aid and Succor to the Rats in Their Fight Against the Union."

"Had anything been lacking to convince the membership of the I. T. U. of the deliberate intention of the executive council to destroy Typographical Union No. 2, it is supplied by the 'open letter' of the council, printed below."

"Had there been any proof needed that the executive council is in league with the rat employers and rat printers of Philadelphia against Typographical Union No. 2, that proof is found in their 'open letter' of February 7th."

The above quotations, if founded on fact, mean that the International officers constituting the executive council are not worthy to fill the positions they occupy. If not founded on fact, or if malicious or untrue, the provisions of section 81 apply. Inasmuch as the accuser, unless cowardice prevents his acknowledgment of the fact that he is the accuser, is a member of Typographical Union No. 2, we call on you as president, and also on your executive committee, to comply with the provisions of the law.

The executive council will wait for a reasonable time for compliance with the law as quoted herein.

Fraternally,
JAMES M. LYNCH,
HUGO MILLER,
J. W. BRAMWOOD,
Executive Council of the International Typographical Union.

DASTARDLY ATTACK UPON THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

[Editorial in The Typographical Journal, March, 1905.]

Several of the recent issues of the Trades Union News, published at Philadelphia, Pa., have contained leading articles severely criticizing and censuring the members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union, individually and collectively.

Though in a position to show by the official records that these strictures were in each instance founded upon base misrepresentation and gross perversion of facts, the International officers have refrained from publicly noticing the attacks.

This position was taken because the members of the council were and are now firmly of the belief that the proper place to discuss questions affecting the good faith and integrity of union officials is in meetings of the local union and on the floor of a convention of the International Typographical Union, where opportunity can be afforded to carefully weigh all the facts in the premises.

The members of the council have been and are at present averse to discussing such affairs, or matters of disagreement with its official decisions, either in THE JOURNAL or the labor press, as the pursuance of such methods can be of no benefit and may result in incalculable injury to the organization as a whole.

For this reason the utterances of THE JOURNAL on the Philadelphia subject have hitherto been confined to publishing the official acts and decisions of the council, as provided by law, while the regular Philadelphia correspondents have been permitted to extensively review conditions in that city.

The members of the council have been content to allow the aspersions upon their character and integrity as union officials—emanating from the Trades Union News and other sources—to rest until the subject could be brought to the attention of the Toronto convention of the International Typographical Union next August.

Though virulent abuse has been heaped upon the council, and it has been denounced as incompetent, and with being actuated by malice in its decisions in the Philadelphia case, it has refrained from replying.

Even the threat made by the editor of the Trades Union News that the members of the council, presumably through Philadelphia influence, would lose their cards, and be branded as non-unionists if they did not take certain action, has received only passing notice.

While attempts have been made and are being made to belittle and to nullify the acts and decisions of the council in the case mentioned, and its wishes have been met with defiance, no official cognizance has thus far been taken, though our laws plainly make it the duty of the council to interpret and enforce the International statutes, and set forth that such interpretations and decisions shall be final, until reversed by the delegates in convention assembled.

But there is a limit to all things. These attacks by the Trades Union News have reached such a point that the interests of the International Typographical Union demand that the membership be fully informed of their purport. Continued silence may be misconstrued.

The editor of THE JOURNAL is aware that copies of the Philadelphia Trades Union News, containing the charges referred to in the preceding paragraphs, have been circulated throughout the jurisdiction, but he is convinced that some of these charges have not received the kind o circulation to which they are justly entitled.

For that reason THE JOURNAL especially calls the attention of every member of the organization to the following excerpts from a leading article which appeared in the issue of said Trades Union News dated February 9, 1905, and requests careful perusal thereof at the hands of all members. The extracts should be carefully read and thoroughly digested:

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF I. T. U. AGAIN STABS NO. 2 IN THE BACK.

RENDERS AID AND SUCCOR TO THE RATS IN THEIR FIGHT AGAINST THE UNION.

Had anything been lacking to convince the membership of the I. T. U. of the deliberate intention of the executive council to destroy Typographical Union No. 2, it is supplied by the "open letter" of the council printed below.

Had anything been necessary to prove the interest of the executive council in neutralizing the effective fight of No. 2 against the scab Inquirer, it is here supplied.

Had any evidence of the criminal refusal of the council to obey the plain letter of the law supposed to govern its action been missing, that evidence is here.

Had there been any proof needed that the executive council is in league with the rat employers and rat printers of Philadelphia against Typographical Union No. 2, that proof is found in their "open letter" of February 7.

John McNeal, president of the International Boilermakers' Union, was expelled for offenses less infamous than that committed by the executive council of the I. T. U. in the issuance of this "open letter."

So dastardly an attempt to injure a local union by the officers of a national organization charged with its protection and support has never been known. It is inconceivable that it can ever be repeated.

THE COUNCIL REQUESTS PHILADELPHIA UNION TO ENFORCE THE LAW.

After due consideration of the charges quoted above, the executive council decided to request the officers of Philadelphia Union to follow the provisions of section 81 of the general laws of the International Typographical Union. This law is mandatory in its nature. The action of the council is given in the following communication:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 25, 1905.

Mr. Alfred D. Calvert, President, and the Executive Committee, Typographical Union No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

GENTLEMEN—We desire to draw your attention to section 81 of the general laws, reading as follows:

"Sec. 81. Any member or members of any subordinate union circulating or causing to be circulated in any way malicious or untrue statements reflecting upon the standing or character, private or public, of any officer or member of the International Typographical Union, or impugning the motives or reflecting upon the honesty of any officer or member of the International Typographical Union, shall be deemed guilty of ununionlike conduct, and upon conviction before a trial board shall be suspended or expelled, as two-thirds of the members may determine. It shall be the duty of the executive committee of each subordinate union to investigate and prosecute all violations of this law occurring within its jurisdiction. It shall also be the duty, and it is hereby imperatively ordered that any subordinate union, or any member of a subordinate union, shall prefer charges before the proper authorities against all violators of this section."

There is issued in Philadelphia a labor publication entitled "The Trades Union News," published by "The Trades Union News Publishing Company, Shelby Smith and T. J. McCaffrey, Managers."

From the contents of this publication, the executive council of the International Typographical Union is amply justified in the assumption that Mr. Shelby Smith is the editor of the Trades Union News. Consulting the records of this office, we also find that Mr. Shelby Smith is a member of the International Typographical Union and of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2. We do not believe that the before-mentioned facts will be disputed, or attempted to be disputed, by the officers of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2, inasmuch as between honest men there should be no question as to absolute fact.

In the issue of the Trades Union News of Thursday, February 9, 1905, Volume 2, No. 17, the following heading and paragraphs appear:

"Executive Council of I. T. U. Again Stabs No. 2 in the Back."

"Renders Aid and Succor to the Rats in Their Fight Against the Union."

"Had anything been lacking to convince the membership of the I. T. U. of the deliberate intention of the executive council to destroy Typographical Union No. 2, it is supplied by the 'open letter' of the council, printed below."

"Had there been any proof needed that the executive council is in league with the rat employers and rat printers of Philadelphia, against Typographical Union No. 2, that proof is found in their 'open letter' of February 7th."

The above quotations, if founded on fact, mean that the International officers constituting the executive council are not worthy to fill the positions they occupy. If not founded on fact, or if malicious or untrue, the provisions of section 81 apply. Inasmuch as the accuser, unless cowardice prevents his acknowledgment of the fact that he is the accuser, is a member of Typographical Union

No. 2, we call on you as president, and also on your executive committee, to comply with the provisions of the law.

The executive council will wait for a reasonable time for compliance with the law as quoted herein.

A similar letter has been sent to the president and executive committee of St. Paul Union No. 30, dealing with the reproduction of the charges in the Minnesota Union Advocate, edited by Cornelius Guiney, a member of that organization.

The editor of THE JOURNAL, speaking for the International officers, desires to most emphatically assert that the executive council does not intend to rest quietly under the accusation that it at any time, or in any manner, "stabs No. 2 in the back," or "renders aid and succor to the rats in their fight against the union," or that it has taken any action whatever in the case at issue, or in any other case, that is not fully warranted by the laws it has sworn to obey and uphold.

The "open letter" referred to was founded upon the printed statement of the president of Philadelphia Union that "there were thousands of non-unionists in Philadelphia." Copies of this open letter were sent to the officers and members of No. 2, and also furnished all International officers, organizers and members of committees, as well as the presidents and secretaries of our subordinate unions and members of eight-hour committees. The circular has also been sent to a number of members requesting it. Attention is directed to the closing sentence of this "open letter," to wit: "The council again expresses itself as willing to aid in the work of organization under the conditions set forth in its letter of November 9, 1904. And for the protection of the members of No. 2, and for the protection of the members of the International Typographical Union in adjacent territory, the council demands that your union act at once."

Attention is also directed to the further decision of the council, published in this number, dealing with Philadelphia Union's request for an endorsement of an appeal to local unions for financial aid.

The council in this last decision, which bears the heading "Further Action of the Executive Council in the Philadelphia Case," again draws attention to the fact that it has not declined to appropriate money for work in Philadelphia, and reiterates its desire to assist in organizing that city, and again announces that it is willing to make such an appropriation as in its opinion is necessary to carry on the work in question. The council does insist, however—and this has not hitherto been denied by any local union—that the council and not the local union shall from time to time determine the amount of International money necessary to be expended, and that its wishes must prevail as to the conduct of a campaign in which International funds are disbursed. Reference to the proceedings will show that the International conventions of later years have invariably stipulated that the council shall exercise such authority. The International constitution and by-laws are also exceedingly plain on this point.

Inasmuch as the editor of THE JOURNAL has been charged by representatives of No. 2 with assuming dictatorial powers, we concluded to print in this number the letter containing the declination to publish No. 2's circular in the February issue. This letter appears elsewhere. It means what it says, and is self-explanatory. The other misstatements alluded to in this letter can be so proven by the official records, or by affidavit, when necessary.

It is true that the editor declined to permit a discussion of the council's decision in the columns of THE JOURNAL, but there was good reason for this action, and it was not taken because of a desire to throttle debate. At the rate these reviews were being forwarded, the columns of the official paper would have proven inadequate to the demand, even if nothing else were printed, and the majority of the articles received and returned upheld the position of the council, though our detractors appear to think otherwise.

The merits of this deplorable controversy, initiated by Philadelphia Union, may not be thoroughly understood until after the Toronto convention, and hasty judgment should be avoided by local unions and the membership.

The members of the executive council, individually and collectively, fully believe that their acts and decisions in this case are in accordance with the laws of the International Union, enacted for their guidance and that of the members, and also in accord with the universal custom that has obtained. Every step has been carefully considered, and unanimity has prevailed at each meeting of the executive body.

Yet the members of the council are accused of seeking to destroy a union; of rendering "aid and succor to rats in their fight against the union;" of criminally refusing "to obey the plain letter of the law;" of being "in league with the rat employers and rat printers of Philadelphia," etc.

The council is composed as follows: James M. Lynch, president, who has been a member of the union over eighteen years and a member of the council over six years; Hugo Miller, second vice-president, who has been a member of the union thirty-two years, secretary-treasurer of the German Typographia nineteen years, and a member of the council over ten years; John W. Bramwood, secretary-treasurer, who has been a member of the union nearly thirty-three years, and a member of the council over eight years. The interpreting and enforcing of union law has been the daily task of these men since they became International officials. And not one of their decisions has been reversed on appeal to a convention of the organization. The council members are but human, and thus liable to err, but in that case there is a legal and orderly method provided in the law for the review of any act of the council that may be called in question.

The charges against these officials, as published in the Trades Union News and quoted elsewhere in this article, are presumably made by Shelby Smith, a member of the International Typographical Union and editor of the paper mentioned. At different periods during the Philadelphia contest, Mr. Smith and the Trades Union News have been the recipients of a portion of the funds allotted by the executive council for the conduct of organization work in that city. Vouchers on file at this office will verify this statement. At that time the Trades Union News was issued and circulated in the interest of Typographical Union No. 2. Presumably that is the case now, but will the officers of No. 2 admit such to be the fact?

If the charges against the International officers are true, they should not only be impeached, but expelled from membership.

On the other hand, what should be done with those who, directly or indirectly, make absolutely unfounded charges of this character, or aid or abet in the circulation of such charges?

The members of the council prize their official reputations and union membership very highly, and have endeavored to faithfully execute every duty required of them. Whatever has been said of them otherwise, their fealty to union principles has never before been questioned.

The readers of THE JOURNAL will be kept informed of the steps taken to enforce International law, as requested in this case.

Will the interested unions do their duty in an impartial manner?

If not, a higher court will be appealed to.

And the council will, in the meantime, continue its efforts to enforce International law, be the outcome what it may.

And the editor of THE JOURNAL will continue to conduct the magazine in accordance with International law, and pursuant to his conception of the trust reposed in him by the membership, until such time as contrary instructions are given by those legally competent to so instruct.

TRIAL BOARD APPOINTED BY PHILADELPHIA UNION.

PHILADELPHIA, March 24, 1905.

Mr. J. W. Bramwood, Secretary-Treasurer International Typographical Union, Indianapolis:

DEAR SIR—The executive committee presented the charges against Shelby Smith at the regular meeting of No. 2, March 18, and the following members were appointed as a trial board: Walter Faries, T. George Middleton, W. S. Donat, William B. Fitzpatrick, A. K. Voorhees.

I understand that the committee immediately organized and the secretary notified you of said action.

Yours fraternally,
C. S. CLAYTON,
Secretary-Treasurer Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 27, 1905.

C. S. Clayton, Secretary No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

DEAR MR. CLAYTON—I have your favor of March 24, giving me the names of the trial board appointed by No. 2 to handle the charges against Shelby Smith. A letter was received from the secretary of the board several days ago.

Very truly yours,
J. W. BRAMWOOD.

LETTER FROM SECRETARY OF THE TRIAL BOARD.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., March 20, 1905.

J. W. Bramwood, Secretary International Typographical Union, Indianapolis, Ind.:

DEAR SIR—In accordance with a communication from the executive council of International Typographical Union, drawing attention of the president and executive committee of Philadelphia Union No. 2 to section 81, of general laws, and preferring charges against Shelby Smith, of the Trades Union News, the following members of No. 2 were appointed a trial board at the meeting on the 18th inst.: Walter W. Faries, Winfield S. Donat, T. George Middleton, William B. Fitzpatrick, A. K. Voorhees.

As a member of the executive council of International Typographical Union you are hereby notified that the trial board will hold its first session to hear testimony on Saturday, April 1, at 6 P. M., in room 514 Odd Fellows' Temple, Philadelphia.

Please notify the trial board if it is your intention or desire to appear personally or by counsel in this case.

Awaiting an early reply, I am,
Fraternally yours,
T. GEORGE MIDDLETON,
Secretary of Trial Board.
514 Odd Fellows' Temple, Philadelphia, Pa.

[Duplicates of this letter were also forwarded to James M. Lynch and Hugo Miller, the other members of the executive council.]

LETTER TO THE SECRETARY OF THE TRIAL BOARD.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 23, 1905.

Mr. T. George Middleton, Secretary Trial Board No. 2, 514 Odd Fellows' Temple, Philadelphia, Pa.:

DEAR SIR—We beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 20th inst., which has had careful consideration. In your letter you say:

"In accordance with a communication from the executive council of the International Typographical Union, drawing attention of the president and executive committee of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2 to section 81 of the general laws, and preferring charges against Shelby Smith, of the Trades Union News, the following members of No. 2 were appointed a trial board."

You then notify us, as members of the executive council, that the trial board will hold its first session on Saturday, April 1, and continue:

"Please notify the trial board if it is your intention or desire to appear personally or by counsel in this case."

In the first instance, the executive council has not preferred charges against Shelby Smith, or any other member of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2. The council did draw the attention of the president and executive committee of No. 2 to section 81 of the general laws, which provides that:

"Any member or members of any subordinate union circulating, or causing to be circulated in any way, malicious or untrue statements reflecting upon the standing or character, private or public, of any officer or member of the International Typographical Union, or impugning the motives or reflecting upon the honesty of any officer or member of the International Typographical Union, shall be deemed guilty of ununionlike conduct, and upon conviction before a trial board shall be suspended or expelled, as two-thirds of the members may determine."

And at this time the council wishes to again draw your attention to the balance of the law in question:

"It shall be the duty of the executive committee of each subordinate union to investigate and prosecute all violations of this law occurring within its jurisdiction. It shall also be the duty, and it is hereby imperatively ordered, that any subordinate union, or any member of a subordinate union, shall prefer charges before the proper authorities against all violators of this section."

The executive council desires to say that it is for your executive committee and your union to act. The council has pointed out the violations of the law, and its duty ends therewith, for the time being. Under the law the member who made the charges must prove them or take the consequences.

The executive council reserves the right to attend, either personally or by counsel, the hearings conducted by your committee.

The council desires a copy of the minutes of the trial committee, including testimony, and of the minutes of the meeting of No. 2, at which the report of the trial committee is acted upon.

Fraternally,
JAMES M. LYNCH,
HUGO MILLER,
J. W. BRAMWOOD,
Executive Council of the International Typographical Union.

For the protection of these records the council may erect such safeguards as to it seems necessary. A member of the council may bring them to Philadelphia and retain charge of them, they may be sent to any officer of No. 2 the council may select, to the chairman or any member of the committee, or to any member of No. 2 or other person the council may desire to designate as its attorney in the case. My demand is that I be permitted to examine them, and to present such of them as I may desire in evidence.

Fraternally,
(Signed) SHELBY SMITH.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the letter of Shelby Smith, dated Philadelphia, March 20, 1905, addressed to James M. Lynch, Hugo Miller and John W. Bramwood, constituting the executive council of the International Typographical Union.

THE COUNCIL'S REPLY TO SHELBY SMITH.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 23, 1905.

Mr. Shelby Smith, Trades Union News Publishing Company, 1231 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.:

DEAR SIR—We desire to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of March 20, and to say:

The gratuitous and uncalled-for insults which you are heaping upon the executive council, both in your publication and in your letter of the 20th—these instances occurring since the council drew the attention of the president and the executive committee of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2 to the violation by you of section 81 of the general laws—lead us to believe that you are not at all concerned as to any punishment that may be meted out to you by the local trial committee which has been appointed, or later by Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2.

We decline to take further cognizance of your letter except to say that we are furnishing a copy of it, together with a copy of this reply, to the secretary of the trial committee, T. George Middleton, for the consideration of that committee.

Fraternally,
JAMES M. LYNCH,

LETTER FROM COUNCIL TO SECRETARY OF TRIAL BOARD.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 23, 1905.

T. George Middleton, Secretary Trial Board No. 2, 514 Odd Fellows' Temple, Philadelphia, Pa.:

DEAR SIR—For the information of the committee, of which you are secretary, we are enclosing herewith attested copy of a communication received from Shelby Smith, a member of Typographical Union No. 2, and also an attested copy of our reply to that letter.

We further desire to emphatically assert that each step taken by the council in the Philadelphia case under review has been based solely upon the correspondence in relation thereto that has passed between your officers and the organization committee and the executive council.

As union men and officials, we again most strongly resent any imputations to the contrary, or insinuation that unfair employers or representatives thereof, or non-members of the organization, have been consulted on this or any other matter relating to union affairs in Philadelphia.

Fraternally,
JAMES M. LYNCH,
HUGO MILLER,

LETTER ACCOMPANYING REPORT OF TRIAL BOARD.

PHILADELPHIA, April 17, 1905.

Mr. J. W. Bramwood, Secretary Executive Council International Typographical Union, Indianapolis, Ind.:

DEAR SIR—I enclose herewith copy of the report of the trial committee appointed to hear the charges against Shelby Smith preferred by the executive committee of this union on request of the executive council.

This report was presented to the regular meeting held on Saturday evening, April 15. On motion the report of the committee was received and its findings endorsed.

I forward this for your information.

Fraternally yours,
C. S. CLAYTON,
Secretary Typographical Union No. 2.

REPORT OF THE TRIAL BOARD OF PHILADELPHIA UNION.

PHILADELPHIA, April 15, 1905.

To the Officers and Members of Typographical Union No. 2:

The trial board, to whom was referred the charges against Shelby Smith, a member of this union, for violation of section 81, general laws, would report as follows:

Immediately after its appointment, the board organized and resolved to notify the executive council—whom it regards as the real instigator of the charges—of the time and place of meeting for the hearing of testimony, to the end that they might be represented, either personally or by counsel, at their pleasure. In accordance with this decision the following correspondence between the executive council and your board took place. As this correspondence has been published in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, its reading is unnecessary here.

Not being in receipt of any positive information as to the intention of the council, your board met at the time and place arranged for, room 514 Odd Fellows' Temple, Saturday evening, April 1, at 6 o'clock, for the purpose of hearing such testimony as might be presented. The entire board was present, also G. W. Williams, Charles S. Clayton and Joseph C. Gibbs, representing the executive committee, which has the prosecution in charge, together with a number of members of the union who were interested in the proceedings.

The chairman of the executive committee stated that he was not in possession of anything bearing on the case beyond the publication on which the charges were based.

The charges having been read to Mr. Smith, he pleaded not guilty of violation of section 81, general laws, admitted the responsibility for the publication complained of, claimed justification for them, and offered the following statement as explaining his position and what he proposed proving:

"Trial Board of Typographical Union No. 2:

"GENTLEMEN—The publications complained of by the International Typographical council are not, and do not purport to be, statements of facts, but are editorial conclusions based on open letter of International Typographical Union council, which I shall endeavor to show are justified thereby.

"The article published should be considered in its entirety. The prosecution has no right to pick out a paragraph here and there and ask to have it considered apart from the balance.

"The information as to the existence of the circular came to me after the copy for the paper had been sent away; the comments were written in haste and without the care which would have been given had time permitted.

"I shall endeavor to show to the committee that the comments touching the council's open letter were justified by the letter itself, and shall only present documents for the purpose of establishing the general hostility of the council to Typographical Union No. 2.

"I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that as to certain paragraphs there is a possibility of a construction different from that intended. These cases I shall point out.

"To take up the paragraphs of the article on which the charges are brought, we will consider first, the heading to the article 'Executive Council of the International Typographical Union Again Stabs No. 2 in the Back.' This, of course, is a figure of speech. Its meaning, fairly interpreted and rightly interpreted, is that the executive council has used the position of a professed friend to commit an act of hostility.

"This conclusion, I think, is incontrovertible. The only possible effect of the council's open letter would be to create division and dissatisfaction in the ranks of the local union, to destroy the influence and prestige of the local officers and committees with the membership thereof, and to create a feeling of distrust and coldness of No. 2 in the minds of the members, not only of No. 2, but in the minds of the members of every local union in the country who received the 'open letter.'

" 'Renders Aid and Succor to the Rats in their fight against the Union.'

"The only explanation of this paragraph necessary is to say that whatever weakens or destroys the efficiency and the prestige of the union is an aid to its enemies. If the committee believes the natural result of the 'open letter' was to injure or hinder, or harm the local union, then it must find that the expression is justified.

" 'Had anything been lacking to convince the membership of the International Typographical Union of the deliberate intention of the executive council to destroy Typographical Union No. 2, it is supplied by the "open letter" of the council printed below.'

"Some difference of opinion may exist as to what would constitute the destruction of the local union. I concede that it might be literally construed to mean that it would be compelled to surrender its charter, and leave Philadelphia without a typographical union at all. But while the law provides that seven members may hold a charter, that construction would, of course, be ridiculous. The committee will readily recognize that no such meaning could have been intended. The proper interpretation of the paragraph taken in connection with the balance of the article, is that the executive council, by the issuance of this 'open letter' gave evidence of its purpose to destroy the prestige and influence of the local union. That is in truth the case, as has already been shown. It is impossible to conceive a reason for International officials assuming this attitude without strong motives. A search for a possible motive is confronted at every turn with the hostile attitude of the executive council toward the chosen officers and committees of No. 2 in everything touching certain controversies heretofore arising in the administration of the affairs of No. 2.

"Since the local, some year and a half ago, sought to purge itself of an organized conspiracy existing within the union, and affiliated with the national organization maintained in defiance of International law, the attitude of the council has been one of active or covert hostility. I shall submit certain documents for the purpose of showing the existence of this organized conspiracy and the connection of at least one member of the executive council therewith.

"The failure of the executive council to produce before this committee certain correspondence between its members and certain members of No. 2, and with certain members of other unions in the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, which I demanded of them, is called to the attention of the committee. The council's letter to the committee, it will be noted, does not even attempt to deny that these documents—which I believe would conclusively prove the existence of this conspiracy and so deeply incriminate the council as to render their impeachment certain—are in their possession.

"I submit to the committee a copy of the demand I made on the council and their answer thereto.

" 'Had there been any proof needed that the executive council is in league with the rat employers and the rat printers of Philadelphia against Typographical Union No. 2, that proof is found in their "open letter" of February 7.'

"To constitute a league between two or more parties it is not necessary that a formal agreement should exist, or even that there should be a definite understanding between them as to the particular acts each shall perform to accomplish a given result. If the end aimed at is the same; if the acts of the one party are in harmony with the acts of the other party; if the final result of the acts of the one are in consonance with the aims of the other, that constitutes, to all practical intents and purposes, a community or league of interests.

"I think there will be no question that the aim of the rats and rat employers of Philadelphia today, so far as they may be said to have any aim in relation to the typographical union, is to render nugatory the fight being waged for the organization of the printers of this city. And for the purpose of showing how the non-union employers have seized upon the 'open letter' of the council and their other hostile acts, and used them to nullify the efforts of Typographical Union No. 2, I present the circular of the typothetæ showing the 'open letter' photographed, and will introduce certain witnesses who will testify to the advantage given the Inquirer by the different hostile acts of the council and the uses that unfair publication has made of them.

"For the purpose of showing that the executive council has been consistently and persistently hostile to No. 2, especially since October 9, 1904, I call the attention of the trial board to certain correspondence between the executive council or the president or secretary of the International Typographical Union on the one side, and the organization committee, the representative of International Typographical Union in charge of the campaign, and the officers of No. 2 on the other side. For the purpose of expediting the hearing and the business of this committee, I shall ask that a member of the organization committee be placed on the stand and requested to explain the documents which I purpose to present. I desire further to call the attention of the committee to numerous hostile publications by the executive council in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL. I ask special attention first, to the 'decision' dated December 30, 1904, sent as a circular to officers and others throughout the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, the only possible effect of which was to prejudice the action of sister unions to the petition of No. 2 for the submission to the referendum of the question as to whether the executive council should furnish money for the campaign against the Inquirer.

"For the purpose of establishing the existence of the organized conspiracy to which I have referred, and connection of at least two members of the executive council therewith, I submit certain documents.

"I ask that these original documents be held subject to my order after this board shall have made its report.

"I formally deny that the publication complained of was malicious. I have shown that it was not untrue. I have not impugned the motives of the council. Their motives may have been pure in their own conception. I have denounced their methods and pointed out the damnable results which, in my opinion, would naturally follow their acts.

"I shall show, by competent witnesses, that the executive council has never, since the fight on the Enquirer was commenced, encouraged the officers or committees of No. 2 by a single suggestion. That they have repeatedly been requested to advise with the organization committee as to the campaign, and to come to Philadelphia for the purpose of making a thorough investigation, but have utterly failed so to do. I shall show that they have been persistently hostile to the progress of the fight, although sanctioning it in the first place. (Signed) SHELBY SMITH."

The board, recognizing the serious nature of the charges, and the fact that the unfortunate differences between the executive council and the local union were largely involved; also that any member whose card was placed in jeopardy was entitled to every consideration in proving his innocence, allowed some latitude in the presentation of evidence, but none, it believes, beyond what was demanded by fairness to all and necessary to arrive at an understanding of the merits of the controversy.

The first witness called by the defense was Mr. Wallace, who is in the employ of the organization committee, having had charge of the canvassers since October 15, 1904. Mr. Wallace has been engaged in this particular line of work for nine years, having been connected with the Public Ledger, North American, Philadelphia Times and the New York Journal.

Witness stated that the effect of the "open letter" upon the contest would have been disastrous had it not been met promptly by circulars from the organization committee. His men report that canvassers of Inquirer were circulating the report that the strike had been called off.

Another gentleman, whose name the board withholds for what it deems sufficient reasons, he being engaged in business of such a nature with all the newspapers that the publication might work him great injury, testified that while in the Inquirer office, in connection with his own business, he overheard a conversation between Circulation Manager Munday and a man whom he took to be a carrier, to the effect that the fight against the paper had been declared off by the International officers, who had been deceived by the local union and when apprised of the true state of affairs had repudiated the whole business.

President Calvert, the next witness, stated that his work as business agent had been made more onerous by the publications of the council, and one result had been to practically stop the acquisition of new members.

That the literature of the council is being used through the state to show that the strike is off for the purpose of offsetting the work done by our men. He identified a photographic copy of the "open letter" and the "organize" circular (which were sent out simultaneously by the council) as having been made and circulated by the typothetæ.

Ernst Kreft, a member of the organization committee, testified that the strike was authorized by the executive council, and submitted documents and letters to prove that the fight was undertaken with the sanction of the council, and had been pursued strictly and entirely on lines outlined by them—"that it should be local in its nature, directed first against the circulation and afterward against the advertisers." The correspondence submitted in this connection commences with the instruction to Mr. Hawkes on December 1, 1903, to proceed to Philadelphia with the plan which had already been submitted by No. 2, investigate the situation and report to council what steps were necessary to straighten out the town. The first provision of this plan, which was also furnished your board, is for a fight against the non-union newspapers, taking them one at a time.

On December 26, 1903, follows a full and complete report of Mr. Hawkes to the council.

On December 29, 1903, follows a letter from Mr. Bramwood, in which he states that "report on Philadelphia situation was laid before the council yesterday, no further action likely until return of President Lynch, who was going east on business connected with typefounders' strike."

A telegram to Hawkes dated April 7, 1904, was submitted, in which "the executive council declines to consider any single phase of the Philadelphia situation except on written report. It can then determine the necessity for interview with you."

On April 27, 1904, follows a statement to the chairman of the organization committee signed by J. W. Bramwood that President Lynch had laid before the council the letter of the organization committee dated April 22. "I have been instructed by the council to notify you that your committee, acting in conjunction with the International representative, may select the paper against which the proposed boycott is to be levied, etc."

On November 9, 1904, when the serious part of the trouble seems to have commenced, the executive council sent a communication to the organization committee of No. 2, declining further financial assistance, except under impossible conditions, and even then such amount as would render the fight farcical, and even this subject to termination at any moment they, the executive council, saw fit.

On November 12, 1904, the following answer in reply to the proposition of the executive council was sent Secretary Bramwood, and as the council's proffer has been repeatedly published, in connection with the statement that they have never refused to stand ready at any time to assist Philadelphia, it is, perhaps, well to give the organization committee's reply in full, the council, up to this time, not having printed the answer to their financial proposition.

November 12, 1904.

"Mr. J. W. Bramwood, Secretary Executive Council, Indianapolis:

"DEAR MR. BRAMWOOD—Your communication of the 9th inst., containing proposition of executive council as to future financial assistance for the work of organization in Philadelphia, was received yesterday, and the committee, after carefully reading and thoroughly discussing the same, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"'That Philadelphia's representatives are not conscious of ever having suggested that the appropriation of a certain sum of money by the International Typographical Union would win the Inquirer fight or complete the work of organizing the city.

"'That the committee can not accept the proposition because it is conscientiously of the belief that the amount of money at its disposal thereunder will not be sufficient to conduct an effective campaign.

"'That the committee believes it would be suicidal to change efficient leadership under fire.

"'That we believe an expenditure of only $200 per week in a fight like this would be nothing short of a criminal waste of money, and we insist that the executive council, either in a body or represented by one of its members, come to Philadelphia and investigate the conduct of the fight before finally deciding future assistance, and that the committee, one and all, stand ready to step down and out of position if the executive council can suggest an effective campaign with a different personnel at the figure stated in its proposition.'

"The organization committee is desirous of hearing from the executive council at its earliest opportunity.

"With best wishes, I am

"Fraternally yours,

"(Signed) W. C. MACPHERSON,

"Secretary Organization Committee."

On November 14, 1904—please observe the date—the secretary of the organization committee received the following communication, in reply to the letter just read:

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., November 14, 1904.

"W. C. Macpherson, Secretary Organizing Committee No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

"DEAR MR. MACPHERSON—Your letter of November 12, replying to the communication of the executive council, is before me. President Lynch, as you perhaps know, is now en route to San Fancisco to attend the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor. The executive council will take no further action in the Philadelphia matter until his return.

"With best wishes, I am

"Fraternally yours,

"J. W. BRAMWOOD, Secretary."

On December 14, 1904, exactly one month after the above, the following was received:

"INDIANAPOLIS, IND., December 14, 1904.

"W. C. Macpherson, Secretary Organization Committee No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

"DEAR MR. MACPHERSON—Referring to your letter of November 12, which was submitted to the executive council immediately upon its receipt, I beg to advise you that the council has instructed me to inform you that it reaffirms its decision on the question of further financial assistance for No. 2. The decision reaffirmed was set forth in my letter of November 9.

"Fraternally yours,

"(Signed) J. W. BRAMWOOD,

"Secretary Executive Council."

On January 19, 1905, a letter was received by President Calvert from the editor of THE JOURNAL declining to print an answer to the article which had appeared under the caption of "The Philadelphia Situation," because of alleged misstatements, one—not an essential one—being cited, the letter closing with the statement that "it is not the intention of the council to discuss this matter through THE JOURNAL, hence I must decline to reproduce the circular in our official paper."

Then, on March 23, 1905, follows the most interesting letter, but which we are not privileged to use, for reasons which will be explained later.

This correspondence is cited to show that Philadelphia has taken no step in this whole matter without the full knowledge and consent of the constituted authorities.

Mr. Kreft, continuing, stated that no other plan had ever been submitted, no suggestions made, no word of encouragement, advice or criticism offered.

They—the executive council—nor any member of it have accepted the invitation to come to Philadelphia and investigate.

Their various publications, in THE JOURNAL and otherwise, have been of a nature to hinder the work of the committee.

Mr. Kreft, in order to show the reports current, based on the action of the council, related his experience at a meeting of Rug Weavers' Union No. 1, as follows:

After he was through with his statement as to the present fight against the Inquirer, he was asked by a member if the strike had or had not been sanctioned by the International body. Had it not been started by a few disgruntled individuals? He said a rumor of its irregularity was current in Kensington, where the paper had succeeded in recouping a large portion of its losses.

As to the effectiveness of the fight, and the statement of the executive council that it is no nearer a conclusion than at its initiation, the witness states that one result was a decrease in circulation of 65,000. Since the effort has been directed against the want advertisements the loss in one month has been between 5,000 and 6,000 lines—actually more, when you allow for padding.

The paper to which this business has been turned shows an increase of about 100 per cent.

It was also stated that Mr. Smith had observed the request of the organization committee and refrained from comment on the treatment which Philadelphia was receiving until after the refusal of the council to permit the committee the privilege, or right, of reply in our official JOURNAL, stating that he regarded it as a wise committee and would willingly comply with its request; that the defendant in this case had never betrayed any desire to the organization committee other than to protect the interest of the union against what he considered its unfair treatment at the hands of the executive council.

Secretary Clayton was introduced to show that the "open letter" had made use of a circular instead of his official report, as to the number of non-unionists.

The executive committee, not desiring to make any argument, the defendant disclaimed any malice in the publication complained of, and relied for its truthfulness on the facts presented.

The board then went into executive session for the purpose of considering the testimony.

The board deplores the lamentable condition existing between the executive council and No. 2, but holds that the facts show the trouble was initiated by the council, and is fanned and kept alive by each issue of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL despite the statement made that it would not be discussed therein. It is not discussed, it is true, but No. 2 escapes few reflections which can be judiciously made. The committee regrets the necessity of republishing all this detail of internal trouble, but No. 2 has no responsibility in bringing these charges and the publication of the facts which they have elicited. They were brought under stress of the covert threat contained in "we will wait a reasonable time," etc., "will the interested unions do their duty in an impartial manner?" "If not, a higher court will be appealed to." This fixes, we think, the responsibility for this republication of matter which had better have been forgotten. Typographical Union No. 2 has what it deems sufficient reason for righteous indignation at its treatment at the hands of the council, some of which may be mentioned. That the executive council's attack on No. 2, in its article on the "Philadelphia Situation," in which it presumed to decide a case which had not been submitted to it, the evident purpose of the quickly-rendered and unasked-for decision being to discourage the endorsement by sister unions of Philadelphia's request that they be one of fifty unions to petition the executive council to submit a proposition, as provided for by section 3, article xvii, of the constitution, this was distinctly hostile.

That the action of the council in refusing Philadelphia the right of answer in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL was unfair and ungenerous, the right of reply not being denied even a criminal in the dock. The reason assigned for this refusal was that the reply contained misstatements. Perhaps, had the article published by the council been censored by the officers of No. 2, it would have been rejected for the same reason.

That the refusal to allow No. 2 the privilege of petitioning sister unions for financial assistance, after having refused adequate support, was far from friendly, especially so when the reason given was that the council possessed sufficient funds. This seems unnecessarily severe.

That the publication of the "open letter" could have had no other purpose than to create dissension among the membership of the union and cause dissatisfaction with the conduct of its affairs. Happily this was averted, the personal character of the president, to whom it was addressed, and the work performed by the organization committee, both being such that they successfully withstood this gratuitous attack. It is hard to convince men who have seen their wages increase $2 per week without the loss of an hour's time, that the people who brought this about are ignorant of or derelict in their duty. Nevertheless, you could not strictly call it a friendly act. The reproduction of this "open letter" by the Typothetæ shows that it was a high price to pay for another fling at Philadelphia.

That the executive council's communication of March 23, 1905, in which the mask of friendship is thrown off and the work in Philadelphia repudiated and the desertion of the council declared, is so thoroughly incomprehensible that we do not wonder that it is the only decision of the council which has escaped publication in THE JOURNAL. We can not give it in full as we will not furnish desired information, which even the council hesitates to print. In it, however, they declare they can not consistently ally themselves with the Philadelphia boycott in any way and decline Philadelphia's request, stating that it is presumptious, to say the least, to expect the council to do as it wishes in the Philadelphia case, etc., alleging that No. 2 declines to be guided by the laws of the International Union, but does not state what laws. All this after sanctioning the present fight, outlining the course to be pursued and spending $7,400 in its prosecution.

This fight was started on June 1, 1904. On July 13, 1904, the executive council first refused to continue assistance, advancing the reason, alleged facts which they could not sustain at St. Louis, where, in August, they entered into the ten-week agreement. This time limit alone was sufficient ground for the paper being fought to presume that something favorable to them might happen at the end of that time, and something did happen. At no time since then has there been a month when something has not been advanced by the council to encourage the paper in its fight and cause it to believe that we stood alone, and nothing but a realization of the importance of the fight and the determination that it must be a finish fight on the part of No. 2 has prevented its collapse, though always in a healthful and encouraging condition.

This report is not, and does not pretend to be a full statement of Philadelphia's grievances against the council. It merely scratches the surface, leaving much that can better be said than written, to be threshed out later.

There are other acts which might be pointed out as indicating animosity on the part of the council, but the board thinks these are sufficient to show that, however praiseworthy and unionlike the intentions of the council may have been in this matter, their results have been continuously, one after another, of a nature to discourage the enthusiasm of the members of No. 2 and to make trouble for its officers. Their publications, even if entirely true, as they may have been in their estimation, have been of such a character as to be readily seized upon, and have been utilized by the enemy for the purpose of offsetting the efforts of the organization committee and to make its work harder, more expensive and requiring explanation at times, which was certainly an aid and comfort to the enemy, as about the only effective ammunition it has had has been thus procured.

Beginning with November 9, 1904, when the council seems to have passed from the stage of passive obstruction to aggressive hostility, the fight has been made harder, compelling us to fight to hold the advantage already gained. More expensive, causing a recanvass to be necessary and work to be done over which has been well done. In view of the facts shown, and on the evidence produced, the board believes that while the language used in the paragraphs complained of, standing alone and interpreted literally, could not be justified, yet when taken in connection with the whole matter, are no violation of section 81, general laws, and that the charges are not sustained. The board distinctly does not mean by this that the executive council, or any member of it, is in actual league with rats or is intentionally aiding or abetting them, and such actual meaning was disclaimed by the defendant. On March 29, 1905, in the editorial column of the Evening Telegraph of this city, in speaking of the effect of bad cooking, this quotation of a scientist is used: "The bad cook is in league with the saloonkeeper." No one supposed that the two persons cited are in actual league, but that the work of one aids the other. This explains the present situation. The repeated publications of the council have certainly been an aid to the paper which we are engaged in fighting. And such was the meaning intended by defendant. He used an ax, he might have used a stiletto, either being equally effective. In November our fight was at its best, and had we been able to keep it up, and not suffered the unexpected desertion and hostility of the council, just when the battle was hottest, it is well within the range of probabilities that the fight would have been concluded before this.

The board believes that, despite the statement of the council that the results did not warrant the spending of so much money, that like loss of circulation and such inroads as can be shown in the small want ad business of the paper, can not be shown to have been accomplished in any other city by any other union, within the same time and with the expenditure of the same amount of money.

The board holds that the executive council is responsible for the results of its acts, however good their intention, particularly when action was continued after its results had been pointed out.

We desire to make it clear that the fight in Philadelphia is progressing favorably, and that good results are being accomplished. We believe it will be won—a little longer, a little harder than it looked last November.

Philadelphia's position in relation to the eight-hour day is as favorable as any city along the Atlantic coast, all its agreements being made with that end in view. But the way to organization and to the eight-hour day is through a victory in the contest already inaugurated.

There has been quite a volume of matter submitted to the board in reference to what is popularly spoken of as the "inside;" the board recognizes the importance of this subject and also the significance of some of the evidence presented. It thinks, however, that as that subject is not specially before it, the evidence, some of which is of so recent date as February, 1905, should be impounded and retained by No. 2 for use at Toronto, should it be needed. It may, as has been contended, furnish a motive for the inexplicable action of certain officials, but in the present case, where we have facts supported by documents, we do not have to and do not assign any motive. If you go out in the street and see one man shoot another, you do not have to search for a motive. The fact stands by itself. It is only in cases of suspicion and circumstantial evidence that motives must be produced.

Your board knows little and cares nothing for the exigencies of International Union politics, but does earnestly protest against Typographical Union No. 2 being made to suffer in consequence thereof. It does know, however, that we are engaged in a desperate and well-conducted fight for unionism in Philadelphia, and insists that if the council will not, or conscientiously can not, assist, it shall no longer make the way more difficult. We need our energy, our money and our time for the fight in hand, and have not an international journal in which to present our side of the controversy.

Your board believes that the officials of No. 2 have ceased expecting or even hoping for further financial aid from the executive council of its own volition, but contends that it has the right to expect the hearty and earnest moral support of its International officers. It has been deprived of assistance of both kinds—financial and moral—for the last six months.

The board is of opinion that the trouble would not have arisen had the executive council come to Philadelphia, as requested, and investigated affairs for itself. Full reports have been sent, but much can be explained and understood with the evidence in sight in addition, which can not be properly conveyed in a report, and we would suggest that no set of men at a distance of 800 miles can consistently set themselves up as infallible, and fall back on "We reaffirm our former decision."

TO SUM UP.

We find the defendant not guilty and the charges not sustained, inasmuch as the articles complained of are, in the minds of your committee, neither malicious nor untrue.

That there was no malice is shown by the fact that the defendant refrained from commenting on the various hostile acts of the council until that body refused to allow the publication of No. 2's answer to its misleading statement of the Philadelphia situation, published in the TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL of January, 1905.

Both the manner and the matter of the publication complained of by the executive council was, in the opinion of the committee, intended to defend the local union and its membership from unwarranted attacks and to place before the membership at large the other side of the points at issue. If the language was somewhat strong, the provocation was great.

The publication was not untrue for the reasons set forth at length in this report, showing the persistent hostility of the executive council and its constant interference with the successful carrying on of the fight, beginning with its inexcusable withholding of funds in July, 1904, up to and including its latest refusal to in any way assist the fight against the Inquirer. The actions of the council in this respect have been such as to lead the Inquirer and the enemies of the union to believe at all times that the fight would collapse within a few weeks through the inability of the local union to carry it on alone and the probability of the International Union refusing further support.

In conclusion, we hope this long-range discussion will close, and if Mahomet will not come to the mountain, the mountain may go to Mahomet and settle the matter, face to face, at Toronto.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

PUBLICATION OF REPORT IN THE JOURNAL REQUESTED.

PHILADELPHIA, April 17, 1905.

Mr. J. W. Bramwood, Editor TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, Indianapolis, Ind.:

DEAR SIR—A motion was made and adopted at the regular meeting of Typographical Union No. 2, held Saturday evening, April 15, instructing the president and secretary to forward to you, under seal of the union, the report of the trial committee appointed to hear the charges against Shelby Smith; and to request you, under seal of the union, to publish this report in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL.

In accordance with this motion the report is herewith enclosed and this request made of you.

Thanking you for your compliance therewith, I am

Fraternally yours,
ALFRED D. CALVERT,
President Typographical Union No. 2.
Attest: C. S. CLAYTON, Secretary.

(The report referred to in Mr. Calvert's letter was similar to that reproduced above.)

REPLIES TO REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 19, 1905.

A. D. Calvert, President No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

DEAR MR. CALVERT—I have your favor of April 17, and accompanying copy of the report of the trial committee appointed to hear the charges against Shelby Smith. In response, permit me to say that your request that the report of the committee be given space in THE JOURNAL is under consideration. I will advise you as to the decision reached as early as possible. Fraternally yours,

J. W. BRAMWOOD.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 26, 1905.

A. D. Calvert, President No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

MY DEAR CALVERT—Supplementing my letter of April 19, permit me to say that, acting under instructions from the executive council, I have written Secretary Clayton, of your union, for the necessary papers to complete the record of the trial of Shelby Smith. These documents, when received, will be laid before the executive council.

The papers relating to the case in question are so bulky that there is some doubt as to the advisability of publishing the documents in THE JOURNAL. The council has, however, decided to give this matter publicity, but the manner and time of publication has not as yet been determined. Fraternally yours,

J. W. BRAMWOOD,
Secretary Executive Council.

COUNCIL ASKS FOR COPIES OF DOCUMENTS, RECORDS, ETC., IN CASE.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 24, 1905.

C. S. Clayton, Secretary No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

DEAR MR. CLAYTON—The executive council has instructed me to call your attention to the fact that the report of the trial of Shelby Smith, as filed by you, does not include a copy of the minutes of the trial committee, the testimony taken, or the minutes of the meeting of No. 2 at which the report was acted upon. You also failed to forward a copy of the records of the executive committee, showing its investigations and prosecution of this case. The council desires these documents at the earliest possible moment.

Hoping that you will forward them to me, I remain,

Fraternally yours,
J. W. BRAMWOOD,
Secretary Executive Council.

REPLY TO REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTS, ETC.

PHILADELPHIA, April 26, 1905.

Mr. J. W. Bramwood, Secretary Executive Council International Typographical Union, Indianapolis, Ind.:

DEAR MR. BRAMWOOD—Your letter of April 24 received, containing request for minutes of trial committee and other records in the case of Shelby Smith. What I forwarded you did not purport to be minutes of the trial committee, but was simply the report of the trial committee and record of action of the union thereon.

I was instructed by the union to forward you a copy of this report, with request for its publication in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL. This was all I had authority to do. Your request will be placed before the union at its next meeting.

Fraternally yours,
C. S. CLAYTON,
Secretary Typographical Union No. 2.

COUNCIL AGAIN REQUESTS COPIES OF DOCUMENTS, RECORDS, ETC., IN THE CASE.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 28, 1905.

C. S. Clayton, Secretary No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

DEAR MR. CLAYTON—Your letter of April 26 is before me. In response I desire to say that the executive council has instructed me to call attention to the closing paragraph in its letter of March 23, addressed to Secretary Middleton, of the trial committee of No. 2. The paragraph reads as follows: "The council desires a copy of the minutes of the trial committee, including testimony, and of the minutes of the meeting of No. 2 at which the report of the trial committee is acted upon." President Calvert, of your union, was furnished with a copy of the communication in question, addressed to Mr. Middleton. The officers of your union were, therefore, aware of the desires of the council in this matter. Acting under instructions from the council, I therefore again desire to request that you furnish me an attested copy of the minutes of the trial committee, the testimony taken, and one of the minutes of the meeting at which the report of the committee was acted upon. The council also wishes an attested copy of the records of the executive committee showing its investigations and the prosecution in this case.

Trusting that this matter will have your prompt attention, I remain, Fraternally yours,

J. W. BRAMWOOD.

PHILADELPHIA UNION REFUSES TO COMPLY WITH REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTS, ETC.

PHILADELPHIA, May 26, 1905.

Mr. J. W. Bramwood, Secretary-Treasurer International Typographical Union, Indianapolis:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Your communication of April 28 was presented to the membership at the regular meeting of the union, held Saturday, May 20, 1905. After considerable discussion it was decided to refer the entire matter to the delegates-elect to the next convention of the International Typographical Union. Fraternally,

C. S. CLAYTON, Secretary.

ORDERED PRINTED.

On receipt of the above the executive council ordered that the history of the Smith case be printed, together with all documents, and including the editorials in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL referring thereto and commenting thereon.

AN ANTICIPATED VERDICT.

[Editorial in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, May, 1905.]

Members of the organization will recall that the executive council of the International Typographical Union recently directed the attention of the officers of the Philadelphia Typographical Union to the violation of section 81 of the general laws of the International Typographical Union by Shelby Smith, a member of that organization, and editor of the Trades Union News. Mr. Smith, in the columns of the paper mentioned, charged the members of the executive council with "stabbing No. 2 in the back," "rendering aid and succor to the rats in their fight against the union," with being "in league with the rat employers and rat printers in Philadelphia," etc. A review of the case appeared in the March number, while further correspondence on the subject was given in the April issue.

The trial committee appointed by the union found "the defendant not guilty and the charges not sustained, inasmuch as the articles complained of are, in the minds of your committee, neither malicious nor untrue. * * * If the language was somewhat strong, the provocation was great." In his statement to the trial committee, Smith maintained that the "publications complained of * * * are not and do not purport to be statements of fact, but are editorial conclusions," etc. In another portion of his defense Smith avers that his statements were "a figure of speech," and maintains that his conclusions were justified by the acts of the council. The committee apparently acquiesced in Smith's view of the matter, for its report is mainly an attack upon the members of the council. Not an atom of evidence is produced—or can be, for that matter, as none exists—that the council was in any way guilty of the acts charged. The report also contains several vague references to an "inside," doubtless intended to arouse passion and prejudice, to the exclusion of consideration of the facts.

That Smith would be exonerated was expected by the members of the council. A conviction in his case would likewise have convicted the officers and members of No. 2 who are responsible for the position in which that union now finds itself, for it is unlikely that Smith printed the statements complained of without the knowledge of these parties, as his paper is their mouthpiece. The International officers are not in the least surprised at the verdict, but it is somewhat amazing that five members of any union could be found who were willing to subscribe their names to a document embracing the matter contained in this report.

In concluding its report the committee expressed the hope that "this long-range discussion will close, and if Mahomet will not come to the mountain, the mountain may go to Mahomet, and settle the matter face to face at Toronto." Yet it asked the union to request the publication of its report—about 7,000 words—in THE JOURNAL. And it will be recalled that "this long-range discussion" was initiated by No. 2 in a circular to the membership, and continued by that union when it declined to obey the laws of the parent body as construed by the council. The report of the committee was adopted by the union.

The report will be published either in THE JOURNAL or in pamphlet form, but the manner and time of its publication has not yet been determined by the council. When published the case will be in complete form.

It may be said at this time that the procedure so far has been merely with a view to presenting the case in legal form to the Toronto convention, where a hearing can be had at the hands of unprejudiced unionists. Even an appearance of justice was not expected from the rulers of No. 2.

In view of the methods pursued by No. 2, as evidenced by the report of its trial committee, is it any wonder that "there are thousands of nonunionists in Philadelphia," as claimed by the president of that union?

And in the meantime the members of the executive council will continue to work for the inauguration of the shorter workday, fully convinced of its ultimate success, in spite of the petty hindrances that have been thrown in the way. As far as THE JOURNAL is concerned, this issue terminates its use as a vehicle for the discussion of the Philadelphia incident. Correspondents will kindly comply with this notice.

Referred to committee on appeals.

Proposition No. 2—By Delegate Kennedy (Minneapolis):

Amend article 1, constitution—"Jurisdiction," as follows:

Section 1. This body * * *. In it * * * printers (proofreaders who are practical printers, or who have served an apprenticeship of four years as copy holders in a union printing office, machine tenders * * *.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 3—By Delegate Kipp (Columbus Newspaper Writers):

Amend section 1, article i, of the constitution, and all other sections of the book of laws containing the name "International Typographical Union of North America," by striking out the words "of North America."

Note—The International Typographical Union is fast becoming a world power. Its jurisdiction is no longer restricted to the confines of North America. It has spread to the Orient, and is destined soon to assume jurisdiction of much wider scope. The name, as it now stands, is a misnomer. With the restriction removed, the name would convey a much more adequate idea of the strength of the organization. Cut it out and see us grow.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 4—By Delegate Kipp (Columbus Newspaper Writers):

Amend section 4, article i of the constitution, so as to read as follows:

"Section 4. The distinctive names of the several subordinate branches shall be: Of the printers, Typographical Union; of the stereotypers and electrotypers, the Stereotypers' and Electrotypers' Union; of the mailers, Mailers' Union; of the writers, Newspaper Writers' Union; of the typefounders, Typefounders' Union; of the allied crafts, Allied Printing Trades Council, and of other allied crafts or trades, if such there be, the distinctive name of each branch."

Note—It's a queer mother who mentions her children as "Willie, my firstborn, and the rest of the bunch." Mother International Typographical Union has named all her children, and should not be ashamed to print the names.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 5—By Delegate Dirks (St. Louis):

Amend section 6, article vi, "The Executive Council," to read as follows:

Section 6. There shall be an executive council, consisting of the president, the first vice-president and secretary-treasurer, which body shall have general supervision of the business of the International Union and of subordinate unions.

Amend article vi, section 6, constitution, "The Executive Council," by adding to bottom of section the words:

"The president shall be disqualified to sit with the council in the consideration of appeals from his decisions. In such cases the second vice-president shall constitute the third member."

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 6—By Delegate Kennedy (Minneapolis):

Amend article viii, constitution—"Salaries and Expenses," as follows:

Section 1. The salary of * * *
For the president, $2,500 per annum *.
Secretary-treasurer, $2,500 per annum.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 7—By Delegate Kipp (Columbus Newspaper Writers):

Amend section 1, article viii, constitution, by inserting the words "fourth vice-president $50 per annum" in the next to the last line of the section after the words "per annum."

Note—I intend to make an effort at Toronto to form a temporary organization for a newspaper writers' trade district. Recognition such as is contemplated by the above amendment would be of great assistance in the organization of local newspaper writers' unions. It would emphasize the importance of the organization. I feel that the time is now ripe for pushing the organization of the writers.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 8—By Delegate Dirks (St. Louis):

Amend article xvii, section 3, constitution, by adding to bottom of section the words:

"This section contemplates the exercise of the principles of initiative and referendum absolutely and unrestricted."

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 9—By Delegate Dirks (St. Louis):

Resolved, That the president is hereby requested to appoint a committee of three, who shall thoroughly investigate and report to the next convention a plan for the inauguration of a system of pensions and relief for aged and sick members.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 10—By Delegate Kennedy (Minneapolis):

Resolved, That the executive council be prepared to present a plan of compulsory life insurance of the members at the convention of the International Typographical Union to be held in 1906.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 11—By Delegate Lovett (Charleston, W. Va.):

A resolution to make provision for the establishment of a protective or insurance society for printers, to be under the direction of the president and secretary of the International Typographical Union. The object of this society to be for the benefit of those printers who are desirous of making provisions for old age. No member to be entitled to benefits until he shall have been a member of such society at least three years. The object of this provision is to prevent any one from drawing benefits until he shall have paid in for a reasonable time. Benefits to commence after the member shall have reached the age of forty-five years, and not to exceed the sum of $10 per week. That a committee be appointed looking toward the devising of ways and means to launch this society and the necessary help to be secured for this system to be conducted properly; that the president and secretary be made the president and secretary of this society, and that said committee have power to modify and amend as in their judgment seems best for the success, and that the matter be referred to a vote as are other amendments should it prevail in the convention.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 12—By Delegate Sullivan (Nashville):

Amend section 10, general laws, by striking out the words "for the three (3) months ending July 31, October 31, January 31, April 30," and substitute therefor the words "once a year, ending July 31;" the amended section to read:

Section 10. Subordinate unions are required to elect three (3) auditors whose duty it shall be to examine all the books and records of the financial officers once a year, ending July 31, and report," etc.

Add new section to general laws as follows:

Section —. Secretaries of all subordinate unions shall compile a report for the three (3) months ending October 31, January 31, April 30, and submit to the secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union within fifteen (15) days thereafter a statement of the condition of the funds and accounts, the members in good standing, members initiated, admitted or withdrawn by cards for each month, together with such other information as the executive council may deem necessary.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 13—By Delegate Moore (Shreveport):

Amend section 32, general laws, by substituting $5 in place of $2, so as to read:

"* * * Each application shall be accompanied by an initiation fee of $5. * * *"

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 14—By Delegate Moore (Shreveport):

Amend section 36, general laws, by striking out the proviso now in force and substituting the following:

"Provided, That bona fide proprietors, who are members of the union, shall be required to pay International Typographical Union dues only, and shall be eligible to International Typographical Union benefits only."

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 15—By Delegate Sullivan (Lafayette):

Amend section 36 of the general laws to read as follows:

"Section 36. All persons performing the work of a foreman or journeyman, at any branch of the printing trade, in offices under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, must be active members of the local union of their craft and entitled to all the privileges and benefits of membership: Provided, Any member becoming a proprietor after the time of his initiation into the union shall be transferred to the honorary list unless he is employed daily at the case or similar work."

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 16—By Delegate Dawson (New Kensington):

Amend section 35, general laws, by striking out all after the word "provided" in the sixth line, and substituting therefor the words:

"Employers who do not work more than eight (8) hours in one week shall not be required to become members of a local union, but shall be entitled to the use of the label upon signing the contracts as approved by the local and International Union."

making the section read:

"Section 36. All persons performing the work of a foreman or journeyman, at any branch of the printing trade, in offices under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, must be active members of the local union of their craft and entitled to all the privileges and benefits of membership; Provided, Employers who do not work more than eight (8) hours in one week shall not be required to become members of a local union, but shall be entitled to the use of the label upon signing the contracts as approved by the local and International Union."

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 17—By Delegate Woody (Richmond, Va.):

Substitute for section 65, general laws, the following:

Section 65. Machine operators may accept a bonus, based on setting so many thousand ems over a prescribed amount, provided such bonus be mutually agreed on by employer and employe, and such agreement is not made to operate to the detriment of any operator or is not in conflict with the scale of prices of the union under whose jurisdiction such agreement is made.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 18—By Delegate Buehler (Milwaukee):

Amend section 71 of the general laws to read as follows:

"Section 71. In cities and towns where more than one craft is organized, labels shall be loaned to offices by the allied printing trades council, acting as the agent of the International Typographical Union, and it is imperatively ordered that no office shall be permitted to use labels unless the rules and regulations of the respective unions, subordinate or affiliated, are complied with:

Provided, That all propositions looking toward the revoking the right of use of such label be first submitted to a referendum vote of the crafts allied under and with the allied printing trades council in any city or town.

Provided further, That in cities where the German label has been in use heretofore and is known as the eight-hour label, the German unions shall have the right to use this label on all work done under the eight-hour system, subject to the discretion of the executive council."

Note—The fact that in many instances labels have been withdrawn from various offices connected with the allied printing trades council without sufficient cause, both in Milwaukee, and, as I understand, in many other cities under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, prompts me to present the above amendment.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 19—By Delegate Seaman (Cincinnati):

Amend section 80, general laws, to read as follows:

Section 80. Not more than fifty-four hours shall constitute a week's work. No member of a subordinate union shall work more than six days in any one week, nor more than the number of hours constituting a day's work in any jurisdiction multiplied by six, where a substitute can be obtained. Should any member holding a regular six or seven-day situation work, through inability to secure a substitute, a greater number than six days in any one week, or more than the number of hours specified in this section, said member must give to the first available substitute all such extra days (or hours, to be specified by the local union) and shall work a correspondingly less number of days in the succeeding week, so as to bring the average number of days within a maximum of six days per week. All violations or evasions of this law shall be punished by a fine of not less than one day's minimum pay for each violation. And it shall be obligatory upon the part of the local union in whose jurisdiction said violation occurs to impose and collect such fine. Six-day papers publishing Sunday editions shall be classed in the category of seven-day morning papers.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 20—By Delegate Knapp (Washington, D. C.):

Amend section 80, general laws, by inserting after the word "union," in the second line, the words "holding a regular situation."

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 21—By Delegate Bandlow (Cleveland German-American):

Add to section 87 of the general laws the following:

"Nor shall German composition in English offices be done at a lesser rate or longer hours than in vogue in offices under jurisdiction of the Typographia."

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 22—By Delegate Bandlow (Cleveland German-American):

Add preamble to the constitution as follows:

DECLARATORY.

The International Typographical Union, being distinctly a class organization, embracing workers following kindred crafts in the printing industry, which seeks to improve the economic and social condition of its members, emphasizes the necessity of concerted action upon the industrial as well as political field. To accomplish the purpose for which it has been called into existence its members must keep in mind that private ownership of the tools and machinery required in their calling is inimical to the interest of the organization, as the antagonism of the employers ever manifests when demands for better conditions, higher wages or less hours of labor per day are presented, and the aim and object of the International Typographical Union therefore is, in common with all industrial combinations of the working class, to wrest from the exploiting class the power to oppress. We therefore declare it consistent with the ethics of unionism and the sacred duty of every honorable member of this union to sever his or her affiliation with all political parties upholding capitalism, whose representatives are using the powers of government to encroach upon the liberties of the working class, thus annulling all the advantages that are momentarily gained upon the industrial field by organized labor and thwarting all the efforts for the emancipation of the wealth producers.

This proposition was endorsed by German-American Union No. 6 at its meeting, July 10, 1905.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 23—By Delegate Croft (Boston):

Amend section 94, general laws, to read as follows:

Section 94. Foremen of printing offices have the right to employ help, and may discharge (1) for incompetency, (2) for neglect of duty, (3) for violation of office rules (which shall be conspicuously posted) or of rules of the chapel or union, and (4) to decrease the force, such decrease to be accomplished by discharging first the person or persons last employed, either as regular employes or as extra employes, as the exigencies of the matter may require. Should there be an increase in the force, the person or persons displaced through such cause shall be reinstated in the order in which they were discharged, before other help may be employed. Upon demand, the foreman shall give the reason for discharge in writing. Persons considered capable as substitutes by foremen shall be deemed competent to fill regular situations, and shall be given preference in the filling of vacancies in the regular force. This section shall apply to incoming, as well as outgoing foremen.

NOTE—The words "within sixty days after a decrease" are stricken out.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 24—By Delegate Cahill (St. Paul):

Amend section 95, general laws, by inserting the following sentence after the word "force," in the second last line:

"The importing of help by foremen, when competent members of a local union are obtainable, is strictly prohibited."

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 25—By Delegate Nock (Birmingham):

Amend section 96, general laws, to read:

"Section 96. The selection by foremen of their forces from day to day, or not having any regular situation in an office, is prohibited. Foremen must give out such minimum number of situations as are needed to meet office requirements. Employment other than a regular situation shall be classed as extra work."

Referred to committee on laws.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 29—By Delegate Nock (Birmingham):

Amend section 100, general laws, to read:

Any member in an office, seven-day paper or otherwise, is entitled to employ in his stead, whenever so disposed, any competent member of the International Typographical Union, without consultation or approval of the foreman of said office. A fine of $25 shall be imposed upon foremen for violation or evasion of this law. Any chairman failing to report the violation of this section shall be fined $25.

Proposition No. 33—By Delegate West (Brockton):

Substitute for section 149, page 79, under "Recommendations," the following:

Section 149. All apprentices employed on daily or weekly newspapers, magazines or publications of any description, under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, where machine or typesetting devices are in use, must be employed the last two years of their apprenticeship on the case, and at all the intricate handiwork of the craft, excepting the last three months of said apprenticeship, which time must be devoted exclusively to work on linotype or typesetting devices in use in the office where said apprentice is employed. Any violation of this law will be punished by a fine of one hundred dollars ($100) or forfeiture of charter. Four years to constitute an apprenticeship term.

Strike out section 165, page 81, as follows:

A subordinate union not enforcing the above law shall be punished by forfeiture of its charter.

Proposition No. 36—By Delegate West (Brockton):

Whereas, It is well known by dire experience that two trade unions of the same craft that oppose each other are worse than none, and especially the experiment of the now defunct Socialistic Trade and Labor Alliance has clearly proven that such dual organizations lead to organized scabbery and to the poisoning of the labor movement, and

Whereas, It is clear to every thinking workingman that the trade union movement must work out its own salvation, and must bring about such reforms in its tactics, methods and organization, as are made necessary by the progress of the time, and are the result of the understanding of the rank and file, and that especially the question of organization by industrial groups must be solved by the trade unions themselves, and can not be solved for them by outsiders, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we consider the recent formation of the so-called Industrial Workers of the World, formed by outsiders under the pretext of "industrialism" as a slightly disguised effort to revive the treacherous and scabby Socialist Trades and Labor Alliance and as an hostile act against bona fide trade unions, calculated to split up and ruin the forces of labor; furthermore, be it

Resolved, That the delegates of the fifty-first annual convention of the International Typographical Union hereby warn all the trade unions affiliated with our body and every honest union man in the country, that the giving of any help, aid or comfort to the so-called "Industrial Workers of the World" means giving help, aid or comfort to the enemies of organized labor, and whether done with good intention or not, can only result in great damage to the general labor movement of America.

Add to general laws, under the head of "Membership," the following new section:

Section 32a. For the purpose of a thorough organization of organized territory the organizer shall proceed as provided in section 32. Provided, That if in his judgment the occasion demands he shall apply to the nearest local union to said organized territory for dispensation, and upon same being granted, can accept applications for membership at a minimum initiation fee of $2. But in all cases the time limit shall be set out in the application of the organizer.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 86—By Delegate Coffey (Lincoln):

Add the following new section under the head "Typesetting Machines," general laws:

In offices operating two or less linotype machines an operator-machinist may be employed, but where three or more machines are in operation in any office a machinist shall be employed, at a salary to be fixed by the local union. Provided, That where more than one shift is worked the employment of a machinist on one shift and a machinist-operator on the other shift (or shifts) shall be deemed a compliance with the law.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 87—By Mr. Wynne (Chicago):

Amend section 131 of the general laws by adding the following:

No member holding active membership in any local union shall sign an individual or private contract, with any employer, agreeing to work for any stated length of time, wages or conditions. The union alone has the power to contract for conditions, wages and hours.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 88—By Delegate Barnes (Chattanooga):

Amend section 60, page 54, general laws, as follows:

Members who are proprietors, wholly or in part, of printing offices shall take out withdrawal cards. Provided, This shall not apply to publishers of labor publications.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 89—By Members of Joliet Union:

To the Convention and Laws Committee of the International Typographical Union:

GENTLEMEN—The undersigned members of the Joliet Typographical Union No. 194 desire to present to you for your consideration the following amendment, with the hope that you will give it your endorsement and favorable recommendation before the convention for adoption:

"No person shall be admitted to membership in any local who holds a card in any other allied printing trades craft, except upon surrender of same to the local in which he seeks membership."

The object of the above is to do away with the two-card membership, which is a detriment and drawback to any union practicing it. Joliet has been struggling with the problem for several years, but the situation has been growing steadily worse until at our last regular meeting an amendment similar to the above was presented for adoption. An effort is being made to knock it out, and, knowing that the membership have a wholesome respect for the International Typographical Union, we desire that this amendment be adopted by the convention, thereby giving us the necessary leverage to adopt the same here.

We can see no reason why the International Typographical Union should not protect its locals the same as the International Printing Pressmen's Union does in this respect, as you will note in the following laws quoted from the constitution and by-laws of the International Printing Pressmen's Union:

"Section 10. Any person making application for membership in a subordinate union who holds a card in any other organization claiming jurisdiction in pressrooms shall surrender said card to the union in which he seeks to become a member before being admitted; and said card shall become the property of the union where deposited."

"Section 15. No man shall be allowed to operate a press or assume charge of any office under the jurisdiction of the international union who is not at the time a member in good standing of a subordinate union; and any subordinate union that accepts as a member any man who has ever been a journeyman at any other trade shall be fined $500 for the first offense, and their charter revoked on second offense."

When the pressmen's union was organized here in Joliet, No. 194 sought to help them out by taking a number of their members into our union. This practice was kept up until now we have eight or nine members holding two cards and in the smaller offices two situations.

The local pressmen's union, acting under the laws above quoted, refuse to admit our members to their union, but are continually proposing their members for admission into our union. These two-card members, and especially the secretary of the local pressmen's union, take an active part in the affairs of our union, always looking to the best interests of the pressmen's local, carrying back to them all business transacted by us. This condition of affairs is manifestly unfair to No. 194. We therefore urge upon you the necessity of prompt action by the International Typographical Union at the coming convention, thereby putting a stop to the two-card practice in all locals, and permitting us to adopt similar laws that will exclude from our councils the members of the pressmen's union, who are continually proposing legislation for their benefit and using No. 194 as a catspaw to pull their chestnuts out of the fire. A union, such as the local pressmen, whose officers and members have not the moral courage to formulate and adopt a regular scale of wages and have it signed, but permits its members to work under individual arrangements, is not the kind of a union to be upheld by the typographical union. Fraternally yours,

M. J. Milhouse,
Chairman Executive Board.
F. I. Weishaar,
Member Executive Board.
H. E. Wiers,
Ex-President No. 194.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 90—By Delegate O'Connor (Louisville):

Whereas, The International Typographical Union is at present conducting an aggressive organizing campaign in Louisville, and this campaign is meeting with considerable success, holding forth promise of complete returns within a very short time, thus placing Louisville again in the ranks of the thoroughly organized cities; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the International president be instructed to continue the work in Louisville until such time as in his judgment No. 10 is again in control or further effort is unnecessary.

Referred to committee on organization.

Proposition No. 91—By Delegate Sherman (Denver):

Resolved, That the secretary-treasurer shall send a circular letter to the secretary of each local union embodying the following extract from the International Typographical Union laws of 1905, page 58, section 76: "All local unions must pass laws defining the grade and classes of work apprentices must be taught from year to year of their apprenticeship, with the aim in view that they may have the opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the printing trade."

Also the following from page 73, section 139: "It is the sense of the International Union that subordinate unions shall make every effort possible to secure the proper training and instruction of apprentices in offices under their jurisdiction to the intent that they may become competent workmen."

Referred to committee on miscellaneous business.

REPORT OF CREDENTIALS COMMITTEE.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

GENTLEMEN—Your committee on credentials respectfully submits the following report:

The delegates named below have been irregularly elected as to the day of election; upon hearing the evidence we find the objections to be of a purely technical nature, and we feel bound by precedents established by former conventions to recommend that the following be regularly accredited delegates to the fifty-first convention of the International Typographical Union, and be seated:

174. Los Angeles, Cal.—T. D. Fennessy.
152, Manchester, N. H.—F. T. Irwin.
424, Orange, N. J.—Thomas F. Nihill.
452, New Kensington-Tarentum—B. C. Dawson.
93, Macon, Ga.—W. T. Anderson.

Your committee finds the credentials of R. J. Birch, of Union No. 460, Chatham, Ont., in due form, but the union delinquent, and recommends that he be not seated.

We also recommend that William R. Lucas, of Batavia (N. Y.) No. 511, and J. Neven Huber, of Greensburg (Pa.) No. 575, regularly elected delegates, be seated. Respectfully submitted,

W. H. Comerford, Chairman,
James H. Godkin,
O. N. Marcy,
William Birkedahl,
Committee on Credentials.

The report of the committee on credentials was received and recommendations concurred in.

The delegates thus seated were then obligated.

The committee on eight-hour day submitted the following:

REPORT OF EIGHT-HOUR COMMITTEE.

To the Officers and Members of the International Typographical Union:

Ladies and Gentlemen—In compliance with a request made, your eight-hour committee, on August 14, 1905, met a committee representing the United Typothetæ of America, composed of President Ellis, of Boston; Secretary Macintyre, of New York, and Messrs. Green, of New York, Donnelley, of Chicago, and Nunemacher, of Louisville, members of the executive board of the United Typothetæ of America, and after a thorough discussion of the eight-hour question, received the following proposition from the representatives of the United Typothetæ:

August 14, 1905.

Mr. Max S. Hayes, Rossin House, City:

Dear Sir—As agreed at the joint committee meeting held today, I herewith send you the suggestions as outlined.

The committee from the United Typothetæ of America suggests to the eight-hour committee from the International Typographical Union that it recommend to the International Typographical Union convention, now in session, that it vote in favor of a reconsideration of the referendum vote taken last fall on the eight-hour day, and authorize a new referendum vote to be taken with the object of rescinding the resolution to make the eight-hour day effective January 1, 1906; or if the convention is unwilling to vote affirmatively on the above, that the convention shall empower the executive council to call for such referendum vote if, at any time between now and January 1, 1906, the executive council shall consider it advisable. Sincerely yours,

John Macintyre, Secretary.

We would request that the matter be recommitted to the committee for further consideration.

Fraternally yours, Max Hayes, Chairman.

The request of the committee was granted.

President Lynch announced that George H. Ellis, president of the United Typothetæ of America, and William Green, chairman of the executive committee, were in waiting and ready to address the convention. There being no objection, the gentlemen were escorted to the platform. The president of the United Typothetæ of America then addressed the convention as follows:

Mr. President and Gentlemen—I wish to thank your executive council for the invitation to speak to you this morning on behalf of the United Typothetæ of America, to present as best I may the employer's side of the eight-hour question.

Before doing so I wish to say a personal word. In the last number of The Typographical Journal is a report of a meeting of employing printers, held a short time since in Milwaukee, at which I am credited with the following:

"Mr. Ellis said it was a crime and against the constitution to make a contract with organized labor. It was detrimental to the willing non-union workers, and tended to deprive them of making a living. That he hoped they would never be under obligation to sign any agreement in the future."

This is absolutely and unequivocally false, and such meaning could not be twisted out of anything that I said. To those of you who know me I hardly need to say that I not only said no such thing, but that I hold no such views.

I wish also to correct another misstatement. It has been repeatedly stated in print and in various public meetings that the officers of the United Typothetæ of America have refused to confer with your officers on the eight-hour question. This is not true. The officers of the United Typothetæ of America have not received, directly or indirectly, any request for a conference until within the last week, since the meeting of the United Typothetæ of America in St. Louis in June of last year. At that time a conference was held, and the result of the discussion in our convention, as embodied in its preamble and resolutions, was reported to your committee. It is true that the stand taken by the United Typothetæ of America in these resolutions was so decided as to lead your president to remark that he supposed there was no use in further conference, but I think those resolutions have not been fully understood, and I would like to read them here.

"Whereas, The International Typographical Union has asked the United Typothetæ of America to declare its position upon the proposed eight-hour day; and,

"Whereas, Under existing conditions any attempt to reduce the hours of labor in the printing trade would be disastrous to the employer and employe alike; be it

"Resolved, That the United Typothetæ of America declares that it is opposed to any reduction of the fifty-four-hour week; and be it further

"Resolved, That the United Typothetæ of America will resist any attempt on the part of the International Typographical Union to reduce the present hours of labor."

That the typothetæ is not opposed to conferences is, I think, fully proved by the action of the local typothetæ of Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Detroit, who themselves proposed the so-called Detroit conference, at which, beside the local committee, your executive council and the committee of the United Typothetæ of America were present.

As president of the United Typothetæ of America it has been my duty, with other members of the executive committee, to attend the meetings of employing printers held to consider this question during the past few months in different parts of the country; not, as has been frequently stated, to stir up opposition to the ultimatum of the International Typographical Union, but to learn the sentiment of the employing printers on this question, and of course to assist in organizing such opposition if it existed; and almost without exception we found the conviction expressed that it would be ruinous to undertake to put the printing offices on an eight-hour basis in the immediate future.

This is not guess work on the part of the employers, for they had an experience with the reduction from ten hours to nine. This reduction, as many of you will remember, was advocated by members of the Boston Typothetæ, to which I happened to belong, for several years before it was brought about by the Syracuse conference; and yet today, not only is every member of the Boston Typothetæ opposed to this further reduction of hours, but every man will stand out against it; and while they now have no less sympathy with their employes and would be glad to meet their wishes if possible, they are convinced through experience that the reduction is not so simple a matter as appears on the surface; that its effects are far reaching.

The theory that about as much would be accomplished in nine hours as in ten was a delusion. Not only is no more work done per hour, but the better work which it was prophesied would result has not been forthcoming, while the reduction was not merely one hour in ten, but the actual working time on a ten-hour basis being not more than nine and one-half hours on the average, with the shorter day the whole hour comes off the working time.

The claim that the introduction of machinery into the composing room makes the shorter day possible is fallacious. Not only is it impossible to do a large part of the work coming to the general office today on machines, but even on such work as can be done on them it must be remembered that the work of operatives on machines is but a part of the necessary cost of the completed composition; proofreading, make-up and general expenses are not reduced by them, while every department of the business will be affected.

The claim that the nine-hour day is excessive on sanitary grounds is hardly worthy of consideration; the physical condition of our employes is sufficient answer to that.

The decrease in hours and increase in wages since 1898 amount on the average to at least an increase of 33⅓ per cent in wages per hour, and the increased cost of a further reduction to eight hours will result in an additional increased labor cost of from 18 to 25 per cent, depending upon conditions and locality. For it should be remembered that this reduction must be followed either by increasing the size and cost of plant, with attendant increase in rents, etc., or the work must be done on overtime and at overtime prices—elements too often overlooked in the computation.

The building trades, so often cited as on eight hours, form no basis for comparison, as the invested capital per employe is but a small percentage of that in the printing business, and their work must be done on the premises, while much printing can be done anywhere; and such an increase in cost as is contemplated, which must inevitably be borne by the customer, will result in driving no inconsiderable amount of work out of the country. This is no idle dream, it is a cold fact as stated by reputable publishers in the city of New York.

The increase in cost will inevitably result in a reduction of the total amount of work to be done, for the large purchasers of printing are counting the cost as never before, and competition is not alone between men, but between methods as well, and any considerable increase in cost will change the current, which has been for some years so largely in the direction of catalogue work and other printing, into other channels.

Comparison is sometimes made between the working hours in newspaper and in book and job offices. I do not need in this assembly to call attention to the difference in conditions. In the newspaper offices the demand is for the greatest possible output in the shortest possible time, and the nervous strain to which a newspaper man is subjected when compared to that of the book and job man is, I believe, even now disproportionate to the difference in working time. Then the work must be done, not only in a specified time, but in a specified place, and is not in any sense a subject of competition.

Gentlemen, if you carry out your program and insist on eight hours or a strike next January, sorry as we shall all be (and we shall be sorry, as we always are at any differences between employers and employes), there is no alternative for us. We must meet you in a fight which will mean much to both of us, but in which WE are fighting with our all at stake, and we MUST fight to win.

This is not a matter of principle, but a practical question of dollars and cents. In our convention, in the many meetings of employing printers throughout the country, and during the year in constant interviews and correspondence with the employing printers of the country, I find there is an almost unanimous feeling that it is impossible for them to increase the price of their product to their customers; and under these circumstances it means, should they accept the eight-hour day, certain ruin.

By your demand you are presenting to the employing printers of the country the two horns of a dilemma: Either to accept the eight-hour day and face certain ruin, or to fight your demand to the very limit of their resources. I recognize that both your officers and many of your rank and file honestly differ with the belief of the employing printers that the eight-hour day would bring to them ruin. Yet you must accept their honesty of mind in believing the contrary, and give due weight to their experience in the conduct of their business.

The situation then narrows itself down to the following: If you insist upon the eight-hour day the printers of America must fight you. We have no idea that in every place we will be successful, but we are confident that in the majority of cases we will win, and that the present relationship between your union and the United Typothetæ of America will be broken up—a relationship which has been to the benefit of both parties—and that, from now on, throughout this country most of the large book and job offices will operate in disregard of your organization, if not in hostile opposition to it.

The insistence on the eight-hour day on January 1, 1906, will result in a disastrous warfare; and the object of my presence here today is to assure you, gentlemen, in spite of the many reports to the contrary, that the employing printers of the United States are sincere in their opposition to this movement and will resist it to the last ditch.

One thing more: It has been stated that if there is a strike, we, the employers, will be held responsible. We deny this responsibility. Employing printers as a class were never more anxious for co-operation with their employes than now. Never did they realize more fully that their interests are largely identical, that prosperity for one means prosperity for both—look back over the past few years and see how fairly your demands have been met—but when their business sense and experience tell them that you are asking what can not be granted, they must refuse at any cost.

I sincerely hope that your more mature judgment will rescind a resolution, which, if acceded to by your employers, will mean ruin to many of them and no financial advantage to yourselves.

William Green, chairman of the executive committee of the United Typothetæ of America, said he had nothing to add to President Ellis's address, he assuming the position of the fifth wheel.

The gentlemen then retired amid great applause.

President Lynch announced that if there was no objection the address of President Ellis would be made a part of the records and referred to the eight-hour committee. There being no objection, it was so ordered.

The following telegrams were received and ordered made a part of the records:

CHICAGO, August 14, 1905.

Resolved, That the president is hereby requested to appoint a committee of three, who shall thoroughly investigate and report to the next convention a plan for the inauguration of a system of pensions and relief for aged and sick members.

Proposition No. 10—By Delegate Kennedy (Minneapolis):

Resolved, That the executive council be prepared to present a plan of compulsory life insurance of the members at the convention of the International Typographical Union to be held in 1906.

Proposition No. 11—By Delegate Lovett (Charleston, W. Va.):

A resolution to make provision for the establishment of a protective or insurance society for printers, to be under the direction of the president and secretary of the International Typographical Union. The object of this society to be for the benefit of those printers who are desirous of making provisions for old age. No member to be entitled to benefits until he shall have been a member of such society at least three years. The object of this provision is to prevent any one from drawing benefits until he shall have paid in for a reasonable time. Benefits to commence after the member shall have reached the age of forty-five years, and not to exceed the sum of ten dollars per week. That a committee be appointed looking toward the devising of ways and means to launch this society, and the necessary help to be secured for this system to be conducted properly; that the president and secretary be made the president and secretary of this society; and that said committee have power to modify and amend as in their judgment seems best for success; and that the matter be referred to a vote as are other amendments, should it prevail in the convention.

Committee considered Propositions No. 9, 10 and 11 collectively, and reports unfavorably.

Delegate Dirks (St. Louis) and others spoke in favor of increased beneficial features.

Delegate Tolan (New York) asked for division of the propositions.

The propositions were divided, and Proposition No. 9 was taken up separately.

Delegate Creager, a member of the laws committee, explained the position of the committee.

After a lengthy debate, participated in by Delegates Sherman (Denver), Barnes (Chattanooga), Green (Atlanta), Bandlow (Cleveland German-American), Hayes (Cleveland), Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood, and Kreft (Philadelphia), a call was made for the reading of the report submitted on this subject at the Washington and St. Louis conventions. The report of the special committee on the establishment of benefit features (consisting of James M. Lynch, Charles E. Hawkes, Hugo Miller, John W. Bramwood and David Hastings) was then read from the proceedings of the St. Louis session.

A vote was then taken on concurring in the adverse report of the committee on Proposition No. 9, and the report was non-concurred in.

The proposition was adopted.

Proposition No. 10 was withdrawn by unanimous consent.

The unfavorable report of the committee on Proposition No. 11 was adopted.

"Provided, That all propositions looking toward revoking the right of use of such label be first submitted to a referendum vote of the crafts allied under and with the allied printing trades council in any city or town.

"Provided further, That in cities where the German label has been in use heretofore and is known as the eight-hour label, the German unions shall have the right to use this label on all work done under the eight-hour system, subject to the discretion of the executive council."

Committee reports unfavorably.

Proposition No. 18 was withdrawn, by unanimous consent.

Proposition No. 19—By Delegate Seaman (Cincinnati):

No member of a subordinate union shall work more than six days in any one week, nor more than the number of hours constituting a day's work in any jurisdiction multiplied by six, where a substitute can be obtained. Should any member holding regular six or seven-day situations work, through inability to secure a substitute, a greater number than six days in any one week, or more than the number of hours specified in this section, said member must give to the first available substitute all such extra days (or hours, to be specified by the local union) and shall work a correspondingly less number of days in the succeeding week, so as to bring the average number of days within a maximum of six days per week. All violations or evasions of this law shall be punished by a fine of not less than one day's minimum pay for each violation. And it shall be obligatory upon the part of the local union in whose jurisdiction said violation occurs to impose and collect such fine. Six-day papers publishing Sunday editions shall be classed in the category of seven-day morning papers.

Committee reports unfavorably.

Proposition No. 21—By Delegate Bandlow (Cleveland German-American):

Add to section 87 of the general laws the following:

"Nor shall German composition in English offices be done at a lesser rate or longer hours than in vogue in offices under jurisdiction of the Typographia."

Committee reports unfavorably.

The committee asked that the proposition be recommitted to the committee. The request was granted.

Proposition No. 22—By Delegate Bandlow (Cleveland German-American):

Add preamble to the constitution as follows:

DECLARATORY.

The International Typographical Union, being distinctly a class organization, embracing workers following kindred crafts in the printing industry, which seeks to improve the economic and social condition of its members, emphasizes the necessity of concerted action upon the industrial as well as political field. To accomplish the purpose for which it has been called into existence, its members must keep in mind that private ownership of the tools and machinery required in their calling is inimical to the interest of the organization, as the antagonism of the employers ever manifests when demands for better conditions, higher wages or less hours of labor per day are presented, and the aim and object of the International Typographical Union therefore is, in common with all industrial combinations of the working class, to wrest from the exploiting class the power to oppress. We therefore declare it consistent with the ethics of unionism and the sacred duty of every honorable member of this union to sever his or her affiliation with all political parties upholding capitalism, whose representatives are using the powers of government to encroach upon the liberties of the working class, thus annulling all the advantages that are momentarily gained upon the industrial field by organized labor and thwarting all the efforts for the emancipation of the wealth producers.

This proposition was endorsed by German-American Union No. 6 at its meeting July 10, 1905.

Committee reports unfavorably.

After considerable discussion of this proposition by Delegates Bandlow, Steele, Green, Hayes and others, the hour for adjournment arrived, and further consideration of the matter was postponed till the next session.

President Lynch announced that Frederick Driscoll, commissioner of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, and Martin Higgins, president of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, would address the convention Wednesday morning.

Adjourned till Wednesday at 9 a. m.

COMMUNICATIONS AND PROPOSITIONS.

The following communications and propositions were presented and referred to the appropriate committees:

Proposition No. 92—By Delegate Donnell (Cincinnati):

Strike out that part of paragraph "C," section 3, page 27, Book of Laws, 1905, commencing with fifth line, quoted below:

"A list of all rejections, expulsions, suspensions and reinstatements made and reported by subordinate unions."

Proposition No. 93—By Delegate Forbes (Jersey City):

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 94—By Delegate Damer (Mobile):

Amend section 12 of the allied trades agreement so as to read as follows:

council may be formed by common agreement of the several organizations.

Referred to committee on allied trade relations.

Proposition No. 95—By Delegate Dawson (New Kensington and Tarentum):

Add the following proviso to section 36, page 48, general laws:

Provided, Employers who do not work more than eight hours in one week shall not be required to become members of a local union, but shall be entitled to the use of the label, upon signing the agreement as approved by the local and International Typographical Union.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 96—By Delegate Mayer (Hamilton, Ohio):

Be it Resolved, By the fifty-first convention of the International Typographical Union, That the executive officers of the International Union devise ways and means to make a permanent fight against the foreign work of the non-union offices of Hamilton, Ohio.

Referred to committee on organization.

Proposition No. 97—By Jacksonville (Fla.) Union No. 162:

Whereas, The Home for Union Printers is located in Colorado Springs, Colo., one of the healthiest and most beautiful sections of the country; and,

Whereas, The headquarters of the International Typographical Union is located at Indianapolis, Ind., a great distance from the Home; and,

Whereas, By being so located in different sections of the country, large and unnecessary expense is thereby incurred; and,

Whereas, It is believed that much money could be saved to the membership at large, and the affairs of the International Typographical Union conducted much more advantageously than at present, were the two located at the same place, especially in the matter of the publication and printing of THE JOURNAL; therefore,

Resolved, That the executive council is hereby instructed to have printed and submit the proposition to a referendum, the question of locating the headquarters of the International Typographical Union at Colorado Springs, Colo., and they are hereby instructed, if such measure should carry, to make all necessary arrangements for the transfer of the headquarters, and the printing and publication of THE JOURNAL at said Home for Union Printers, within sixty days after the passage of such measure.

Resolved, That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated in the general treasury, to carry into effect the provisions of this measure.

Resolved further, That the executive council is hereby authorized to levy an assessment of 25 cents per capita upon the entire membership, if the funds in the treasury are not adequate for the above purpose, the same to be used for the purpose above specified.

Referred to committee on returns and finances.

Resolved, That the name of A. T. Proctor, late of Cleveland, be placed upon the list of deceased members.

Referred to committee on resolutions.

Proposition No. 99—By the St. Louis Delegation:

Whereas, The Inland type foundry has locked out members of St. Louis Typographical Union No. 8 by employing a non-union man and has refused to adjust the matter; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the attention of members of this organization is hereby directed to this fact; and be it further

Resolved, That the American Federation of Labor is requested to take cognizance thereof.

Referred to committee on organization.

Proposition No. 100—By Delegate Klaus (by request of St. Paul No. 30):

Resolved, That the executive council be instructed to work out a feasible scheme of having all scales of subordinate unions within the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union expire on a certain date. For example: All book and job scales to expire on the last day of December of each year; all newspaper scales to expire on the last day of June of each year; or both to expire jointly.

Referred to committee on subordinate unions.

Proposition No. 101—By Delegate McLogan (Detroit):

Whereas, The imposition upon travelers by transportation companies of requiring so-called contracts upon passage tickets to be signed by the original purchaser, and the placing upon such tickets of the description of such purchaser, for the purpose of preventing the transfer of such tickets to any other person, is causing the loss of many millions of dollars yearly to the traveling public and a like gain of millions of dollars in unearned profits to these corporations, from the forfeiture to them of such unused tickets; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the imposition and outrage of these practices has become a nuisance that should no longer be tolerated by the people, and the time is now ripe for a move to throw off this burden of graft and oppression by the enactment of national laws.

Resolved, That the International Typographical Union, in convention assembled, hereby declares in favor of an act by the United States congress, and by the Canadian parliament to make all railroad and steamboat passage tickets good to bearer, and respectfully requests all labor organizations, and all other good citizens of the United States and of Canada to join with us in petitions to our lawmakers to wipe out by appropriate legislation this infamous system of robbery.

Referred to committee on resolutions.

Proposition No. 102—By Mr. Sterling (Boston):

Resolved, That the following question be submitted to the referendum:

Do you favor an assessment of ten cents per month for the purpose of providing a pension of $10 per month for needy members of the International Typographical Union who have been in good standing for twenty-five years and who are not less than 65 years of age?

Referred to committee on returns and finances.

Proposition No. 103—By Mr. Sterling (Boston):

Resolved, That the executive council be instructed to consider and report at the next session of the International Typographical Union on the advisability and feasibility of so arranging the duration of future book and job scale agreements that at some future date they may all terminate simultaneously.

We are authorized by No. 42 to appeal to the convention of the International Typographical Union from the decision of the board of trustees in the case of William Myrick, of Minneapolis No. 42.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 108—By Delegate Johnson (Washington, D. C.):

Amend article viii, section 3, to read as follows:

Section 3. When any officer or member is required to perform service away from his home, he shall be allowed, in addition to the amounts set forth above, first-class railroad fare by the shortest route to and from his destination, and actual hotel expenses: Provided, That an itemized bill shall in all cases be rendered.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 109—By Delegate Steffen (Cleveland):

Amend section 3, article iii, by-laws, by striking out the words "alphabetical order" and inserting in lieu thereof the words: "Arranged in the order of receiving the highest number of nominations (when a tie occurs the name to be drawn by lot)," etc.

The following communication was read:

TORONTO, August 15, 1905.

Mr. J. W. Bramwood, Secretary International Typographical Union:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—By resolution of Toronto Local Union No. 28, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders, passed at regular meeting Monday evening, August 14, the undersigned are directed to convey through you to the fifty-first session of the International Typographical Union their fraternal greetings and heartiest wishes for success. Especially do we desire to offer our congratulations for the many successes already achieved in their efforts to establish the eight-hour day, and that the seemingly resistless force for the achievement of this most humane condition for the workers may go on to complete consummation is our sincere wish. We realize to the full the mutual interest of each branch in the allied printing crafts. We fully appreciate what advantage your success portends to the bookbinders and sister crafts. The Toronto bookbinders feel

(we trust) a pardonable pride in their record as shorter workday advocates. In 1872 they joined forces with your old 91, in a struggle for the nine-hour day. For the past ten years we have been in the vanguard of the fight, working only fifty-two hours per week. We hope in the near future that circumstances will so shape themselves that the allied printing crafts in this city will be found engaged in a solid, compact effort to achieve that which we aim for—the eight-hour workday.

Trusting that this feeble echo of congratulations will be met in the spirit in which it is sent, on behalf of local union No. 28, International Brotherhood of Bookbinders. Faithfully and fraternally yours, WILLIAM J. WALLACE, Secretary.
W. M. GILL, President.

The following communication was also read:

TORONTO, August 16, 1905.

To the Officers and Delegates of the Fifty-first Annual Convention of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—At the first session of the Woman's International Auxiliary, held in the parlors of the Rossin House yesterday morning, the attention of the delegates was called to the fact that, through courtesy to the ladies in the gallery, a resolution was offered that the Typographical Union delegates refrain from smoking during sessions.

While we recognize and acknowledge the never-failing deference which has been extended to us by the delegates of the fifty-first convention, we desire to remind them that we are in Toronto not to curtail a single one of their pleasures, but to aid, if possible, in making this convention the most enjoyable session ever held.

While we imagine that in the passing of this resolution, we can recognize the spontaneous outburst of old knightly southern chivalry which would likely emanate from Mr. Anderson, of Macon, Ga., and Mr. Green, of Atlanta, still we insist that the gentlemen smoke anywhere, any time and any place that they desire.

"It is better to smoke here than in the hereafter."

MRS. FRANK A. KENNEDY, President,
MRS. ED D. DONNELL, Secretary-Treasurer.

No objections being offered, the communications were ordered spread upon the records.

Delegate Anderson (Macon), speaking in reply to the communication from the woman's auxiliary, said the ladies by their action had demonstrated that they are as much ladies today as the gentlemen were gentlemen yesterday.

The following communication was read:

TORONTO, August 15, 1905.

J. W. Bramwood, Esq., Secretary-Treasurer International Typographical Union, City:

SIR—At a meeting of the allied printing trades council of this city, held this evening, a resolution was unanimously adopted heartily endorsing the movement inaugurated by the International Typographical Union, looking to the inauguration of the eight-hour day, and pledging its hearty and earnest support to the movement. This council, mindful of the great pioneer work of the International Typographical Union for shorter hours, and also of the early efforts of Toronto Typographical Union in that connection, confidently hopes for a united stand and a successful outcome of the coming struggle.

With great respect I am,
Yours fraternally,
R. R. ELLIOT, Secretary.

The above communication was ordered made part of the records.

Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood made a supplementary report on credentials received, as follows:

237, Sandusky, Ohio—Charles E. Gillard.
81, Bay City, Mich.—William A. Clark.
460, Chatham, Ont.—R. J. Birch.

The delegates were obligated.

President Lynch announced that the first order of business would be the resumption of consideration of the report of the committee on laws.

REPORT OF LAWS COMMITTEE.

Proposition No. 22 being under consideration, Delegate Hayes (Cleveland) moved as a substitute that the convention reindorse Resolution No. 1 (Book of Laws of 1905), which is as follows:

1. That the International Union strongly urges upon its subordinate bodies the necessity of providing in their respective "orders of business" for the discussion of the various phases of the labor question and other matters of public moment having a direct bearing upon the welfare of wage earners.

The substitute offered by Delegate Hayes was adopted.

Delegate Bandlow (Cleveland German-American) asked to be recorded as voting in the negative, and it was so ordered.

Chairman Johnson, of the committee on laws, asked for reconsideration of the action taken on Proposition No. 4.

The request was granted.

The laws committee offered the following as a substitute for Proposition No. 4:

Proposition No. 4—By Delegate Kipp (Columbus Newspaper Writers):

Amend section 4, article i, of the constitution, so as to read as follows:

Section 4. The distinctive names of the several subordinate branches shall be: Of the printers, Typographical Union; of the mailers, Mailers' Union; of the writers, Newspaper Writers' Union; of the typefounders, Typefounders' Union; and of other allied crafts or trades, if such there be, the distinctive name of each branch.

The substitute of the committee was adopted.

Proposition No. 23—By Delegate Croft (Boston):

Amend section 94, general laws, to read as follows:

Section 94. Foremen of printing offices have the right to employ help, and may discharge (1) for incompetency, (2) for neglect of duty, (3) for violation of office rules (which shall be conspicuously posted) or of rules of the chapel or union, and (4) to decrease the force, such decrease to be accomplished by discharging first the person or persons last employed, either as regular employes or as extra employes, as the exigencies of the matter may require. Should there be an increase in the force, the person or persons displaced through such cause shall be reinstated in the order in which they were discharged, before other help may be employed. Upon demand, the foreman shall give the reason for discharge in writing. Persons considered capable as substitutes by foremen shall be deemed competent to fill regular situations, and shall be given preference in the filling of vacancies in the regular force. This section shall apply to incoming as well as outgoing foremen.

NOTE—The words "within sixty days after a decrease" are stricken out in the amendment.

Committee reports favorably.

The report of the committee was adopted.

Amend section 95, general laws, by inserting the following sentence after the word "force," in the second last line:

Committee reports unfavorably.

Committee reports unfavorably.

After some debate the previous question was ordered. The report of the committee was adopted.

President Lynch announced that Commissioner Driscoll, of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, was in waiting, and desired the privilege of the floor. There being no objection, Mr. Driscoll was escorted to the platform.

President Lynch introduced Commissioner Driscoll, who addressed the convention as follows:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—I take great pleasure today in being present on this occasion, and in greeting the delegates of the International Typographical Union convention, for the sixth time, as the representative of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. And this pleasure is much enhanced by the fact that the relations between our two International organizations are constantly improving.

I say "International" because we, like you, cover Canada, as we have many members in this great empire representing the largest and most influential newspapers in the chief cities of Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver; as for instance, in this flourishing city, we have the Globe, the Mail and Empire, and also the Telegram enrolled in our membership.

I have read with the greatest interest the annual report of President Lynch to this convention. I most heartily endorse all he has stated concerning the experience of the International Union the past year with the members of our association. As one of the two permanent members of the National Board of Arbitration, I speak from personal knowledge when I repeat the president's statement that this experience has been both pleasant and profitable the past year.

It is well that the president has brought to your attention the matter of taking the initiatory steps to provide for a new arbitration agreement to take effect on the expiration of the existing agreement. I do not deem it wise for me to discuss, in advance, the particular terms of a new contract. It is in every way desirable, however, for this convention, before it adjourns, and, after full consideration, to authorize your executive council to meet in joint conference with the special standing committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association during the coming year and formulate an agreement which will be submitted to both organizations for their approval at the succeeding conventions.

It is sincerely to be hoped we will all favor a renewal of some kind of an agreement, which will secure the manifest advantages of arbitration in settling our differences and also determine a policy based on equity and stability in our relations one with the other.

I quite agree with President Lynch when he states in his report that the conditions imposed upon the publishers concerning the use of magazine or comic supplements is one that requires attention at your hands. The burden imposed under the present law requires the publisher, after paying the party supplying these supplements the full cost of the same, to also in addition pay the cost of recomposition, which, if done, is useless, and if not done but settled for by payment of cash to the chapel or the members thereof, is an unfair exaction for which the publisher receives no consideration.

These supplements, which so many publishers use, and which a great many others would like to use, are, in their modern up-to-date form, originated and prepared in large offices by the most skilled artists, who have made this specialty their life work and whose numbers are comparatively few. The sale of these supplements, by matrices thereof and otherwise, aids in reducing the large expense incident to their preparation. The great majority of the publishers using these supplements have neither the requisite plant nor the means to originate such matter in their own offices. If they have enterprise enough to buy and use these supplements, should that enterprise be throttled with an additional tax imposed by the present union law? Relieved of this tax, will it not prove in many cases that the enterprise of the publisher of a relatively small paper will improve his business by increasing his subscription list, followed by increased advertising, and with this increased business be able to furnish an increasing amount of labor for additional members of your unions?

The strong presentation of this matter by your president will undoubtedly elicit the fullest discussion and consideration at your hands, out of which I trust will be evolved a new law that will be equitable and fair to both the parties in interest.

I take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks to your general officers for their kindly cooperation in assisting to preserve industrial peace in the offices of our members. I have always found them prompt and courteous in our correspondence, and manifesting a desire to be fair in all decisions. After reading the reports of officers for the past year, I am sure the delegates to this convention, and the nearly 50,000 members they represent, must appreciate the great ability, industry, zeal and efficiency shown by President Lynch and his associate executive officers in safeguarding the interests of the International Typographical Union. It gives me the highest pleasure to pay this just tribute at this time.

In closing these brief remarks, I desire to express the sincere hope that the deliberations and conclusions which will be determined by this convention will result in promoting the best and highest interests of all your membership, and that nothing will be done to disturb the pleasant relations now existing between the International Typographical Union and the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

There being no objection, the address was ordered made part of the records, and referred to the committee on arbitration.

Delegate Green (Atlanta) moved that speeches be hereafter limited to two minutes.

The motion prevailed.

Delegate Klein (Pittsburg) took the floor and said it afforded him great pleasure to ask the convention to meet in Pittsburg in 1906, and read two letters in support of his invitation. The letters were as follows:

PITTSBURG, PA., August 3, 1905.

To International Typographical Union Convention, Toronto, Canada:

GREETING—The Iron City Central Trades Council takes pleasure in joining Typographical Union No. 7 in extending to your organization an invitation to hold your convention in the city of Pittsburg in 1906, believing that the meeting of your body in this city will be a stimulus, not only to the interests of No. 7, but to organized labor in general. Fraternally,

C. C. DOUGLAS, President.

CHARLES A. LAND, Secretary.

PITTSBURG, PA., July 10, 1905.

To the International Typographical Convention, Toronto, Canada:

GREETING—The United Labor League of Western Pennsylvania hereby extends to your honorable body an invitation to hold your convention in this city in 1906, assuring you of a most hospitable welcome on the part of organized labor of Pittsburg and vicinity. Fraternally,

JOHN FERNAN, President.

GEORGE H. DRIVER, Secretary.

Delegate Klein stated further that there were few strictly union job offices in Pittsburg, and only one strictly union newspaper. The union had been devoting its time to organization work, and had increased the membership over two hundred in the last few years. He asserted that the local union needed the next convention as a stimulus in the work.

Delegate Hayes (Cleveland) seconded the nomination of Pittsburg. He stated that Pittsburg was in a deplorable condition as compared with other cities. Personally he would prefer Colorado Springs, but he thought the convention should take a common-sense view of the matter. The Pittsburg Union, as well as other trades in that city, needed encouragement.

Delegate Barnum (Washington, D. C.) heartily seconded the nomination of Pittsburg, and said the selection of the next meeting place should be a business proposition. The great body of the membership of the International Typographical Union resides in the east. The union treasuries in 1906 may not be in the condition they are today. As a matter of economy the convention should be held near the center of population.

Delegate Snyder (Colorado Springs) took as an inspiration the claim that the convention should meet at the Home city as often as once in ten years, and said it was a plain duty to meet there in 1906, as ten years had elapsed since the last time. He stated that there was not an unfair man in the jurisdiction. The climate, scenery and hospitality are unequaled. Entertainment would be furnished for breakfast, dinner and supper time—in fact, all the time. The delegates should see the Home where old age finds rest and comfort. Architects had studied the design of the Home, artists had pictured it, horticulturists had made it a heaven of trees, velvety lawns and flowery gardens. He invited the delegates to the glorious land of sunshine, and said that they should bring sunshine to the occupants of the Home, who were for years the bulwark of unionism. On behalf of Colorado Springs No. 82, and every citizen of Colorado Springs, he invited the convention, and assured all that they would receive a hearty western welcome.

Henry Russell Wray, secretary of the chamber of commerce of Colorado Springs, on behalf of the municipal government, the board of trade and the municipal council, extended a further invitation. The letters read by Mr. Wray were as follows:

DENVER, COLO., July 20, 1905.

To the International Typographical Union in Convention Assembled:

GENTLEMEN—The Colorado State Commercial Association, representing, as it does, the business men of the entire state of Colorado, begs to extend to you a most cordial invitation to hold your next annual convention at Colorado Springs.

The state of Colorado is today the greatest state in the Union, just as the International Typographical Union is the greatest labor organization in the United States and Canada, and Colorado will feel honored in greeting you. Very truly yours,

D. C. PACKARD, President.

DENVER, COLO., July 18, 1905.

International Typographical Union in Convention Assembled, Toronto, Canada:

GREETING—We heartily endorse the invitation of our sister city, Colorado Springs, extended to you by its chamber of commerce, through its secretary, Henry Russell Wray, to hold your next annual meeting in the beautiful city at the foot of Pike's Peak, where your International Home is located.

It will certainly be a pleasure for those who were here thirteen years ago, at the opening of the Home, to revisit the Springs, and for those who have not seen the Rockies it will be an added pleasure. Most cordially yours,

THE DENVER HOTEL AND RESTAURANT KEEPERS' ASSOCIATION,
J. F. DUTTON, Secretary.

DENVER, COLO., August 4, 1905.

We have every facility for entertaining you, and we also have natural advantages of climate and scenery that are not possessed by any other locality.

We would ask that you represent us, and that you use this letter as credentials to that effect. We trust that you may be able to secure the 1906 convention, and can assure you that, in that event, every member of this exchange will do all in his power to make the meeting a successful and pleasant one. Very truly yours,

THE COLORADO SPRINGS REAL ESTATE EXCHANGE,
By HENRY LEB. WILLS, President.
R. R. WRIGHT, Secretary.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., August 7, 1905.

Henry Russell Wray, Esq., Secretary Colorado Springs Chamber of Commerce, Colorado Springs, Colo.:

MY DEAR SIR—The Merchants' Association, representing the merchants and business men of Colorado Springs, are greatly interested in the effort to secure the International Typographical Union convention for 1906 for this city, and desire to express their heartiest co-operation in every effort made.

The International Typographical Union convention will find not only a most cordial welcome awaiting them, but I am assured that the merchants and business men of the city will contribute, in every possible way, to the success of the convention, and to the comfort and enjoyment of its members, while in Colorado Springs. Faithfully yours,

FRED S. TUCKER,
President Merchants' Association.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., August 10, 1905.

Ten years have elapsed since the International Typographical Union convention was held in Colorado Springs—a city that has become famous in all parts of the United States and Canada through the munificence of the International Typographical Union in maintaining within its confines a haven where the disabled and infirm members of our craft may regain their health, and the aged pass their declining years in peace and comfort, within the shadow of Pike's Peak and the snow-capped hills of Colorado.

Believing that the International convention should be held here at least once in every ten years, Colorado Springs has again invited the representatives of the International Typographical Union to be its guests in 1906, and that this invitation should be unanimously accepted must impress itself upon all who are familiar with the magnitude of the humane work that is being successfully carried on in this far western city, by the generosity of the union printers of North America.

But few members of the International Typographical Union fully appreciate the importance of holding an International Typographical Union convention in Colorado Springs, where its Home for disabled members is located and where it has expended nearly $600,000 in the erection and maintenance of this institution, which is the admiration of all who see it, and which should be the pride of every union printer under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union. At such times the representatives of the various local unions not only come in direct contact with the residents of the Home and its management, but are enabled to see for themselves the needs of the institution, and thus become more competent and willing to enact liberal and intelligent legislation for its maintenance and control.

In this connection, it should be borne in mind that the present flourishing condition of the Home was, in great measure, attributable to the fact that the International convention of 1896 was held in Colorado Springs, and there can be no room for doubt that the convention of 1906 will still further add to its prosperity and prestige, and be the direct means of increasing in worth our already valuable asset.

Aside also from this, the dedication of the Cummings Memorial Library Hall, by the 1906 convention, is not at all improbable, and certainly would be a most fitting consummation of the efforts of the membership to perpetuate the memory of their illustrious fellow craftsman, Amos J. Cummings.

Believing that the delegates to the Toronto convention fully appreciate the claims of Colorado Springs for recognition at this time, and wishing you and our other representatives success, I remain,

Yours fraternally,
THOMAS MCCAFFERY,
Trustee Union Printers' Home.

Delegate Brown (Topeka) seconded the nomination of Colorado Springs.

Delegate Anderson (Macon) seconded the nomination of Colorado Springs.

Delegate Sherman (Denver) seconded the nomination of Colorado Springs.

Delegate Nock (Birmingham) seconded the nomination of Colorado Springs.

President Lynch stated the vote would be taken Thursday by printed ballot, as provided in the laws.

The convention then adjourned till Thursday at 9 A. M.

Whereas, The present and future welfare of the International Typographical Union and its subordinate bodies will be best and most materially benefited in the better instruction and technical education of individual members and apprentices; and,

Whereas, Past experience has shown such work must be done wholly by the International Typographical Union and local unions; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the executive council of the International Typographical Union be and is hereby instructed to submit to the next annual convention of the International Typographical Union such recommendations and detailed plans as may seem most practicable in the work of establishing a better and still more efficient workmanship in the International Typographical Union membership.

Resolved, That the subordinate unions of the International Typographical Union be encouraged, assisted and urged to establish technical libraries, and otherwise work for a still more efficient workmanship among their members and apprentices.

Referred to committee on miscellaneous business.

Proposition No. 131—By Delegate Burlington (St. Joseph), by request:

Add to the general laws, immediately after section 28, the following new sections:

(1) Subordinate unions may establish and maintain a loan fund for the purpose of giving aid to traveling printers who are members in good standing of the International Typographical Union, and to aid their own members who desire to leave their jurisdiction, such amounts to be endorsed on their current working cards, traveling cards, certificates of membership, etc. Provided, That 10 per cent of a member's first earnings thereafter shall be required to be repaid until the loan or loans are paid, together with an amount sufficient to pay the expense of returning said loan to the issuing union by bank draft or postoffice money order.

(2) No union shall loan to a member more than enough to travel by railroad more than 200 miles, plus $1. Provided, That the aggregate of sums borrowed by any one member from the different subordinate unions shall not exceed $25 at any one time.

(3) Subordinate unions, through their secretaries, are required to consider all sums due on loans, shown on traveling cards, certificates of membership, etc., as dues, and to collect the required per cent thereof and forward to the issuing union, first loan having precedence, together with an amount sufficient to pay the expense of returning said loan to the issuing union by bank draft or postoffice money order, and may refuse to issue traveling cards until such sums due are paid, if in their opinion such measure be necessary to the safeguarding of the loan funds.

(4) Subordinate unions, through their secretaries, failing to enforce all sections of the International Typographical Union laws relating to loans shall be held to the payment of all sums delinquent, and shall be fined not less than $5 nor more than $25 for each offense.

General laws, new section to be added immediately after section 35:

Any member who shall obtain a loan or benefit from any subordinate union under false pretenses shall be suspended or expelled, or fined not less than $5 nor more than $25, as the subordinate union may deem proper.

Amend section 44, general laws, by adding immediately after the line, "This certificate expires in six months from date," the following sentence:

On the reverse of the above certificate space shall be provided for the record of loans made by subordinate unions.

Referred to committee on laws.

Proposition No. 132—By Delegate Tolan (New York):

To the President and Members of the International Typographical Union:

GENTLEMEN—It is a well-established fact that the members of our craft are not technically educated up to what they should be in matters relating to the printing business, and gradually outsiders are making strong inroads into the trade, thus depriving the printer of the opportunity he rightly deserves.

How many printers of today know the history of the art from its infancy? how many can tell how type, stereotype, electrotype, photo-engravings, paper, etc., are made? Not one out of a hundred.

Again we have the printer whose knowledge ends in setting straight matter or a plain reprint "ad" or "job." He would willingly devote some of his spare time in learning something more in this line were the opportunity placed in his way. He can not get it where he works, as his employers keep him engaged on just such matter as he has the knowledge of.

In my experience as a close student of the art of printing I have constantly come in contact with men who have admitted that they were very derelict in matters which they were expected to know, and could not execute a piece of work which was given to them.

Every printer certainly seeks a position in life where he can better himself financially, and the educated man gets the first.

It is a matter of fact that today there are technical schools throughout the country devoted to various branches of our trade, such as "ad-writers," estimating on work, photo-engraving, and various other branches which are affiliated with printing. The "graduates" of these schools are today filling the positions which rightly belong to the members of the union.

Why not educate them? In good faith I can say that now is the time to consider this matter thoroughly.

In view of these conditions, I desire to offer to your honorable body a few suggestions which I have had in mind for a number of years, and which, I believe, will have a tendency to overcome these wrongs.

I would suggest that some means be devised at this convention by which at least four of our members—who are thoroughly familiar with every detail—be elected or appointed as lecturers or instructors; one to cover each section of the country. The duties of these instructors would be to prepare a number of lectures, with illustrations for the stereopticon, covering every detail from the invention of printing down to the present time. Each lecture could be given in turn, gradually educating the printer up to date. Illustrations could be shown as to the proper display of "ads," "jobs," etc.; the harmony of colors; spacing, margins and any number of other details. Designing and estimating on all classes of printing would be another valuable feature. In fact, there seems to be no end to the good which could be derived in this way.

I earnestly believe that every local union throughout the country would heartily co-operate with an innovation of this kind, thus bearing the greater portion of the expense connected with it.

In conversation with a number of our members upon this subject, I have been convinced that it is no "idle dream," but something which would be of tenfold benefit to all seeking a better knowledge of "the art preservative of arts."

The good printer works his way up; he is promoted ahead of the other fellow simply because he has had the opportunity of learning the things which his less fortunate friend did not have the opportunity of doing.

Why not place us all on a more equal basis, so that when work is "given out" John can "deliver the goods" just as well as Bill?

Gentlemen, I trust you will give this suggestion your earnest consideration. Fraternally yours,

New York, July 26, 1905. CHARLES T. PEYTON.

Referred to committee on miscellaneous business.

President Gompers will arrive Toronto 11:15 tomorrow, Wednesday morning. Kindly extend to the delegates in convention assembled my hearty greetings and well wishes for a most successful and profitable convention. FRANK MORRISON, Secretary American Federation of Labor.

President Lynch announced that consideration of the report of the committee on appeals in the Smith case had been made the special order immediately after roll call. He then called Vice-President Hays to the chair.

On motion the reading of the report of the committee on appeals was dispensed with, it being in the possession of the delegates in printed form, and having been read on the previous day.

The report is as follows:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON APPEALS.

TORONTO, August 15, 1905.

To the Officers and Delegates of the Fifty-First Convention of the International Typographical Union.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—The committee on appeals, to whom you referred Proposition No. 1 (by the executive council) as follows:

Appeal of the executive council from the action taken by Philadelphia Union No. 2 in relation to the enforcement of section 81, general laws of the International Typographical Union, in an instance of violation of the law called to the attention of No. 2 by the council. The papers in this case will be found on the desks of the delegates in printed form, entitled "The Smith Case."

Your committee summoned before it Messrs. James M. Lynch and J. W. Bramwood, two members of the executive council, appellants in this case, and Mr. Shelby Smith, the respondent. Upon request, Mr. Bramwood stated the case for the executive council, basing the ground for appeal on section 81, International Typographical Union constitution and general laws, which reads:

SEC. 81. Any member or members of any subordinate union circulating or causing to be circulated in any way malicious or untrue statements reflecting upon the standing or character, private or public, of any officer or member of the International Typographical Union, or impugning the motives or reflecting upon the honesty of any officer or member of the International Typographical Union, shall be deemed guilty of ununionlike conduct, and upon conviction before a trial board shall be suspended or expelled, as two-thirds of the members may determine. It shall be the duty of the executive committee of each subordinate union to investigate and prosecute all violations of this law occurring within its jurisdiction. It shall also be the duty, and it is hereby imperatively ordered, that any subordinate union, or any member of a subordinate union, shall prefer charges before the proper authorities against all violators of this section.

1. Mr. Bramwood then charged Shelby Smith, a member of Philadelphia Typographical Union No. 2, and editor of the Trades Union News of that city, with publishing derogatory statements regarding the members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union, individually and collectively, the most violent of which he read as follows:

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF I. T. U. AGAIN STABS No. 2 IN THE BACK.

RENDERS AID AND SUCCOR TO THE RATS IN THEIR FIGHT AGAINST THE UNION.

Had anything been lacking to convince the membership of the International Typographical Union of the deliberate intention of the executive council to destroy Typographical Union No. 2, it is supplied by the "open letter" of the council printed below.

Had anything been necessary to prove the interest of the executive council in neutralizing the effective fight of No. 2 against the scab Inquirer it is here supplied.

Had any evidence of the criminal refusal of the council to obey the plain letter of the law, supposed to govern its action, been missing, that evidence is here.

Had there been any proof needed that the executive council is in league with the rat employers and rat printers of Philadelphia against Typographical Union No. 2, that proof is found in their "open letter" of February 7.

John McNeal, president of the International Boilermakers' Union, was expelled for offenses less infamous than that committed by the executive council of the I. T. U. in the issuance of this "open letter."

So dastardly an attempt to injure a local union by the officers of a national organization charged with its protection and support has never been known. It is inconceivable that it can ever be repeated.

2. The above appeared in the Trades Union News of February 9, 1905. On February 25, 1905, the executive council of the International Typographical Union, in a letter to the president and executive committee of Philadelphia Union, called attention to the provisions of section 81 of the general laws of the International Typographical Union, recited the charges and derogatory statements that were particularly offensive, and called upon the union, through its president and executive committee, to comply with the provisions of the section in question, which specifically applies to cases of this character.

3. The question was subsequently brought to the attention of a meeting of Philadelphia Union, and a trial committee was appointed on March 18th.

4. Under date of March 20, the secretary of the trial board notified the individual members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union, of the board's appointment, informing them that the first session to hear testimony would be held on Saturday, April 1, at 6 P. M., at Odd Fellows' Temple, Philadelphia, and requested that the committee be notified if it was the intention or desire of the executive council of the International Typographical Union to appear personally or by counsel.

5. The members of the executive council replied to this letter in a joint communication, drawing attention to the error of the committee in assuming that the council had presented charges against Shelby Smith, and again citing the provisions of section 81. The council, in this letter, emphasized the application of section 81 to this case, and contended that it was for the executive committee of No. 2 to act; that the council having pointed out the violations of the law, its duty ended therewith, for the time being; and asserted that, under the law, the member who made the charges must prove them, or take the consequences. The executive council in this letter further reserved the right to attend hearings of the committee, either personally or by counsel, and expressed a desire that it be furnished with a copy of the minutes of the meetings of the trial board, including the testimony, and the minutes of the meeting of No. 2 at which the report of the trial committee was acted upon.

6. In a further communication to the secretary of the trial committee, dated March 23, and with which was transmitted an attested copy of a communication received from Shelby Smith, and also an attested copy of the reply of the executive council to Mr. Smith, the members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union expressed themselves under oath as follows:

We further desire to emphatically assert that each step taken by the council in the Philadelphia case under review has been based solely upon the correspondence in relation thereto that has passed between your officers and organization committee and the executive council.

As union men and officials, we again most strongly resent any imputations to the contrary, or intimation that unfair employers or representatives thereof, or non-members of the organization, have been consulted on this or any other matter relating to union affairs in Philadelphia.

7. Under date of April 17 the secretary of Philadelphia Typographical Union transmitted to the executive council of the International Typographical Union the report of the trial board of Philadelphia Union in the case at issue. Briefly stated, Mr. Smith's main defense was that the article written by him and published in the Trades Union News, was justified by reason of the action of the council in declining to extend Philadelphia Union all the financial aid it had requested in its fight with the Inquirer. Special pleading was indulged in by Mr. Smith to excuse the statements in the article complained of, and in the headings thereto, and apparently the trial board ignored the real facts in the controversy.

8. From a reading of the report of the trial board, it is evident that the views expressed by the defendant, Smith, met with its approval. The report is replete with extraneous matter, not relating to the case at issue, and the committee attempts to prove that the statements made by Mr. Smith in the Trades Union News are not malicious or untrue, and that they were justified by the action of the council in not according Philadelphia Union all the support it had requested in the Inquirer fight; that its issuance of an "open letter," and the attitude assumed by it in its official communications, was further evidence of the hostility of the members of the council, and further justification for the statements made in the Trades Union News by Mr. Smith.

Before closing our side of this case permit me to draw particular attention to the various documents in the Smith case, including the report of the trial board, and to direct particular attention to the failure of Union No. 2 to furnish the members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union with copies of certain papers in this case, as requested in various communications. As copies of the pamphlet entitled "The Smith Case," were furnished the delegates prior to this convention, and as additional copies are at this time in the hands of the delegates, the executive council deems it unnecessary to deal further with the points at issue, being satisfied to rest their case on the facts submitted.

In reply to a question by your committee as to why he, Mr. Bramwood, as editor of THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL, used or permitted the use of the columns of that paper to give their side of the case and refused the same privilege to Mr. Smith and the members of the Philadelphia Union No. 2, he stated that the Trades Union News had unfairly attacked and attempted to blacken his and the character of the other members of the executive council, and as that was the only channel through which he could defend himself before the membership and the public, he believed he was justified in doing so.

STATEMENT OF THE RESPONDENT, MR. SHELBY SMITH.

Upon the chairman of the committee requesting Mr. Smith to submit testimony in substantiation of the article which appeared in the Trades Union News of Feb. 9, 1905, under the caption "Executive Council of International Typographical Union Again Stabs No. 2 in the Back," he, Mr. Smith, declined to answer, stating that he wished to demur for the following reasons: "He considers the committee on appeals has no jurisdiction in his case, and that they have no right to try same. That there is no law to uphold it. He further submits that he has been tried once according to the laws of the International Typographical Union; that there is no authority in the laws of the International Typographical Union for the re-trial of a member by a convention or by a committee of a convention. That it is a guarantee of the constitution of Great Britain and the United States that in the procedures of their courts a man shall not be twice placed in jeopardy for the same offense. He also believes his case is parallel to criminal cases tried in our courts of law—his union life being at stake. Mr. Smith, in addition, submitted that the executive council had forfeited their right to appeal when they failed to appear at the trial conducted by Philadelphia Union No. 2, after having been notified.

The committee after considering the demurrer came to the unanimous decision that: (1) The case could not be construed as parallel to a criminal case; (2) The committee having been created by the convention, which is the supreme and governing body of our International Typographical Union, we were within our jurisdiction in adjudicating upon any matter or matters that might be submitted to us; (3) The fact that the case had been tried by a local union did not preclude the right of this convention to re-try or review this or any other case affecting the discipline, or otherwise, of the members of the International Typographical Union.

Mr. Smith requested that the committee allow his co-delegates to be present during the hearing. Request granted.

Messrs. Kreft and Faries, delegates from Philadelphia Union No. 2 were then admitted, and remained throughout the hearing of the case.

Mr. Smith was then asked to make a statement or submit evidence, written or oral, in support of the following extract from his article:

Had anything been lacking to convince the membership of the International Typographical Union of the deliberate intention of the executive council to destroy Typographical Union No. 2, it is supplied by the "open letter" of the council printed below.

He then cited the following open letter in justification of the above statement contained in the Trades Union News:

AN OPEN LETTER.

"Philadelphia, with its thousands of non-unionists, is most dangerous to a large portion of our membership."—Extract from circular issued by Philadelphia Union No. 2, under date of December 22, 1904.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 7, 1905.

Mr. Alfred D. Calvert, President No. 2, Philadelphia, Pa.:

DEAR SIR—Again referring to the necessity for organization work in Philadelphia, the executive council desires an early and comprehensive outline of the methods that are to be followed by Philadelphia Typographical Union, as to the book and job branch.

We have had nothing definite relative to organization work since our communication to your organization committee, dated November 9, 1904. We are aware, however, that there has been an effort put forth by representatives of No. 2 to nullify International law, as interpreted by the executive council.

The Philadelphia work, as considered by and outlined to the Washington convention, provided for ORGANIZATION solely, and the executive council then expressed itself, through the International president as willing to continue to make appropriations until Philadelphia was "thoroughly unionized." The Philadelphia delegation, speaking through one of its members, said that the position of the council was entirely satisfactory to the Philadelphia delegates.

In a circular issued to the membership under date of December 22, 1904, it is stated by your union, over the signatures of its president and secretary, that there are "thousands of non-unionists" in Philadelphia. It is not apparent that any continued and determined effort has been made to organize these non-unionists. On the contrary, the main part of the effort thus far put forth is represented by a newspaper boycott that has been ineffective to date as to the result sought for. Even though the Inquirer fight may be won, it will then be necessary to take up and prosecute boycotts against the Press, the Record, the Item and the Bulletin, and it is only reasonable to suppose, with the Inquirer experience to guide us, that these boycotts will occupy many months, extending in fact far beyond January 1, 1906.

According to the data given in the non-unionist report of Philadelphia Union No. 2, received at International headquarters on July 8, 1904, there were 270 non-unionists employed in the five non-union daily newspaper offices in your city. We desire to call your attention to the fact that even though your union succeeded in bringing all these newspapers within the fold, such a result would only affect a small percentage of the "thousands of non-unionists" which you say are "most dangerous to a large portion of our membership."

As is herein pointed out, the work thus far undertaken in Philadelphia has not followed the plan placed before the Washington convention, and has not been along the lines of least resistance considered by that convention—the organization of the Philadelphia non-unionists. The council now demands that the work of organization shall be taken up, and that no effort shall be spared to thoroughly unionize Philadelphia in the book and job branch. If further time is wasted in opposing the executive council, so much less of value will be accomplished, and the continuance of present conditions will mean that the situation of every union book and job printer in Philadelphia will be jeopardized on January 1, 1906. If the eight-hour fight is lost in Philadelphia (and that is the prospect confronting us now), the result can not but disastrously affect the union newspaper printers and newspaper conditions. Also, the recruiting field represented by the "thousands of non-unionists" in Philadelphia will affect sister unions—New York, Washington, Boston and many others.

The council again expresses itself as willing to aid in the work of organization under the conditions set forth in its letter of November 9, 1904. And for the protection of the members of No. 2, and for the protection of the members of the International Typographical Union in adjacent territory, the council demands that your union act at once.

Fraternally yours,
JAMES M. LYNCH,
HUGO MILLER,
J. W. BRAMWOOD,
Executive Council of the International Typographical Union.

Mr. Smith argued that this open letter of the executive council was photographed by the local typothetæ and sent broadcast throughout the entire jurisdiction; used by the Inquirer solicitors in their canvass; and also tended to create dissension amongst the membership of No. 2, thereby rendering nugatory the effective fight being waged by No. 2, and pleaded that the action of the executive council was one of gross provocation. He then referred the committee to his defense before the trial board of Typographical Union No. 2 which will be found on pages 11 and 12 of the "Smith Case."

Mr. Smith was then requested to explain his reason, or submit documentary or oral evidence in support of the language in the undermentioned paragraph:

Had there been any proof needed that the executive council is in league with the rat employers and rat printers of Philadelphia against Typographical Union No. 2, that proof is found in their "open letter" of February 7.

Mr. Smith said: "To constitute a league between two or more parties it is not necessary that a formal agreement should exist, or even that there should be a definite understanding between them as to the particular acts each shall perform to accomplish a given result. If the end aimed at is the same; if the acts of the one party are in harmony with the acts of the other party; if the final result of the acts of the one are in consonance with the aims of the other, that constitutes, to all practical intents and purposes, a community or league of interests.

"I think there will be no question that the aim of the rats and rat employers of Philadelphia today, so far as they may be said to have any aim in relation to the typographical union, is to render nugatory the fight being waged for the organization of the printers of this city. And for the purpose of showing how the non-union employers have seized upon the 'open letter' of the council and their other hostile acts, and used them to nullify the efforts of Typographical Union No. 2, I present the circular of the typothetæ showing the 'open letter' photographed."

(Exhibit "A" consists of a photographic reproduction of the open letter.)

Mr. Smith then asked the committee to note the following points: (1) Offer to cite extracts from Shakespeare placing a construction on the words "in league"; (2) Directs attention of the committee to the fact that the findings of the trial committee were approved by the members of Philadelphia Union No. 2, about 300 members being present, with only two negative votes; (3) That the executive council did not publish the "open letter." (4) That he made five requests on pages 9 and 10 of the "Smith Case," which the executive council did not comply with, as follows:

1. All letters, telegrams, or other communications received by the executive council or any member thereof, officially or personally, from representatives or employes of the Philadelphia Inquirer since June 1, 1904, and certified copies of the answers thereto.

2. All letters, telegrams, or other communications received by the executive council or any member thereof, officially or personally, from non-union printers in Philadelphia since June 1, 1904, and certified copies of the answers thereto.

3. All letters, telegrams, or other communications received by the executive council or by James M. Lynch, or John W. Bramwood, officially or personally, from members of No. 2—who are not members of the organization committee or elective officers of the local union—since June 1, 1904, and certified copies of the answers thereto.

4. All letters, telegrams, or other communications received by the executive council, or by James M. Lynch, or John W. Bramwood, officially or personally, which in any manner bear on or refer to the "Philadelphia situation," from the persons named below, and certified copies of the answers thereto, to wit:

L. C. Shepard, Grand Rapids, Mich.
George Dabney, Pittsburg, Pa.
V. B. Kinney, Omaha, Neb.
William Klinger, Chicago, Ill.
Michael Colbert, Chicago, Ill.
Ed C. Thrift, Detroit, Mich.

Fred H. Brown, Syracuse, N. Y.
Elmer Throssell, Newark, N. J.

5. Copies of all letters from the council or any member thereof to any of the above parties or persons, whether in answer to letters from them or not.

He claimed the executive committee had evaded his requests in their letter of March 23 to the secretary of the trial board, in which they say:

We further desire to emphatically assert that each step taken by the council in the Philadelphia case under review has been based solely upon the correspondence in relation thereto that has passed between your officers and organization committee and the executive council.

As union men and officials, we again most strongly resent any imputations to the contrary, or intimation that unfair employers or representatives thereof, or non-members of the organization, have been consulted on this or any other matter relating to union affairs in Philadelphia.

The committee agreed that the executive committee be requested to give direct answers to the Questions 1 and 2, as to whether they were dealing or corresponding with employes of the Philadelphia Inquirer, and as to whether they had had correspondence or dealings with non-union printers in Philadelphia.

Mr. Lynch was summoned, and in answer to Question No. 1 stated specifically and emphatically that he had had no communication with any one connected with the Inquirer.

To Question No. 2 he answered that he had had no dealings or correspondence with any non-union printers of Philadelphia.

Mr. Bramwood was then called, and stated in answer to Question No. 1 that he had had no communication with the Inquirer either before or after the date mentioned; and to Question No. 2 he also stated that he had had no correspondence with any non-union printers of Philadelphia.

In re requests 3, 4 and 5, your committee decided that inasmuch as any correspondence that might be transmitted between the members of the executive council and the parties mentioned would be between members of the International Typographical Union, that the propriety of such, if it did exist, could not be legitimately questioned.

Mr. Smith was then asked if he had anything further to submit, to which he gave a negative reply.

This closed the case for both sides.

FINDINGS OF THE COMMITTEE.

In the minds of your committee, this is one of the most important questions that has ever been brought before an International convention. The laws of the International Typographical Union prescribe the duties of the executive council. Among these duties is the disposition of the defense fund. Certain rules are laid down, as to its disposition, by the laws of the organization, while its administration is placed in the hands of the executive council. The council, in exercising its rights and prerogatives under the law, as construed by the council, decided upon a certain course of action in the Philadelphia case. Its adherence to that plan is claimed by Mr. Smith and the trial board of the Philadelphia Union—and, in fact, by the union itself, through its adoption of the report of the trial board—to have been sufficient ground for the charge of being "in league with the rat employers and rat printers of Philadelphia against Typographical Union No. 2," of "rendering aid and succor to the rats in their fight against the union," and other statements of like character. We submit that this is an unjustifiable assumption on the part of any member or local union connected with this organization. If the unionism of the officers of the International Union, charged with the performance of certain duties, is to be thus grossly attacked and besmirched because official action may not meet with the approval of certain members or officers of a local union, or the local union itself, and the provisions of existing law are not strong enough to cope with such cases, it is high time that a law was enacted that will end, for all time, such flagrant procedure by those who wish to remain enrolled under the banner of the International Typographical Union. But your committee believes that section 81, properly enforced, is ample to cover the case in question. Its provisions are exceedingly plain, and the course of procedure is mandatory. We agree with the members of the executive council that the charges as outlined above, "if founded on fact, mean that the officers of the International Typographical Union constituting the executive council are not worthy to fill the positions they occupy; if not founded on fact, or if malicious or untrue, the provisions of section 81 apply." And those provisions set forth in a mandatory manner the punishment that shall be administered to one violating its provisions. In the case at issue not one scintilla of evidence—direct, documentary or oral—was produced before your committee tending to substantiate the charges made by Mr. Shelby Smith. The only defense put in by Mr. Smith is the one which he made before the trial board of Philadelphia Union, which we submit is not evidence at all. On the other side, the appellants (the members of the executive council) in the case defy the production of any such testimony, and they emphatically state, collectively and individually, that no such testimony existed. Your committee, therefore, believes that it is warranted by the facts as disclosed by both sides in coming to the decision that section 81 was deliberately violated by Shelby Smith, and that the trial board of Philadelphia Typographical Union purposely evaded the provisions of section 81 in handling this case, and rendered a verdict that had no evidence to sustain it. We therefore recommend as follows:

Digitized by Google

1. That Shelby Smith, who is now seated as delegate from Philadelphia Typographical Union, be expelled from the convention and his seat be declared vacant.

2. That Philadelphia Typographical Union be instructed by this convention to immediately expel Shelby Smith from membership in that organization, and it is the verdict of this convention that such expulsion shall remain in effect until such time as Shelby Smith shall make a full and ample public apology to the members of the executive council of the International Typographical Union, such apology to be published in THE TYPOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL and Trade Union News of Philadelphia, and given such other publicity as may be deemed necessary. By the term "full and ample apology," we mean one that will be acceptable to the members of the executive council, whose personal and official characters have been thus wantonly assailed. If No. 2 fails to enforce this verdict within thirty days its charter to be revoked by the executive council.

In concluding its report, your committee desires to say that the problem before it was not one of sentiment, but one of rendering justice under our laws and according to facts. A question of the character covered in this report—involving the integrity of its chosen representatives—should not be passed lightly by. It is necessary for the International Typographical Union to take its place among the labor organizations which protect their officers and members from gross and malicious attacks of this nature. We further believe that a concurrence in the recommendations of this committee will show conclusively that the laws of the International Union are enacted for the guidance of its members and officers, and will be enforced without fear or favor.

Respectfully submitted,

P. M. DRAPER, Chairman.
H. B. AMES, Secretary.
W. H. JORDAN.
E. F. KENNEDY.
JOSEPH C. LARSON.

Vice-President Hays announced that the question before the convention was the adoption of the committee's report.

Delegate Green (Atlanta) moved the principals in the case be allowed one hour, and that the other debaters be confined to the two-minute rule.

Delegate Kreft (Philadelphia) moved as a substitute that the two-minute rule be suspended during the discussion of the report of the committee on appeals.

Delegate Green (Atlanta) supported his motion.

Delegate Kreft (Philadelphia) supported the substitute.

The substitute of Delegate Kreft (Philadelphia) was adopted.

Delegate Smith (Philadelphia) then took the floor and made a lengthy statement in his own behalf, similar in character to that covered in the report of the appeals committee. He also characterized the actions of the committee as of the star chamber variety, and said that a cunningly arranged trap had been laid. At no time had he been permitted to face his accusers during this so-called investigation. He asserted that the union which had honored him stood in desperate peril, and he declined to further place her interests in jeopardy. He would accept the disgrace which attached to his humiliation if thereby his union would receive fair consideration. "The demand has been made for my card in order that the vengeance of the council may be satisfied, and I offer myself to the sacrifice, in order that the cause of the Philadelphia Union shall not suffer."

President Lynch, in the course of his reply, said he believed Delegate Smith was striving for effect. The trial committee of Philadelphia Union, in dealing with this case, had asserted that "if Mahomet will not come to the mountain the mountain may go to Mahomet and settle the matter, face to face, at Toronto." The president concluded: "The situation is this: A labor editor—or one sailing under those colors—had gone a little too far. Now he was face to face with the men he accused, and he must make good his charges or take the consequences."

Delegate Kreft (Philadelphia) argued that no adequate defense could be made in the Smith case unless the entire Philadelphia case was dealt with. He also complained of the unfairness of the appeals committee in handling this case.

Delegate Faries (Philadelphia) said in part that the trouble was that the executive council could not control Philadelphia Union, as at present constituted, and for that reason sought the revocation of its charter in order that one could be issued to a little coterie which the council could control. He further asserted that, while this convention would probably expel Smith, Philadelphia Union would never do so, even if Smith went down on his knees and requested that such action be taken. The speaker concluded his remarks by saying: "However, we don't regard our charter as highly as we once did."

This remark aroused a storm of hisses, which were promptly suppressed by the presiding officer.

Delegate White (San Francisco) said he thought the expulsion of Smith was unnecessarily severe, and moved, "as a substitute for the recommendations of the committee on appeals, a vote of censure for the unwise and immoderate language of Shelby Smith in the Trades Union News of February 9, 1905."

The substitute of Delegate White was declared before the convention for consideration.

Delegate Kipp (Columbus Newspaper Writers) offered a substitute bearing on the matter, but was ruled out of order.

Delegate Faries (Philadelphia) asked for authorities governing the presenting of the Smith case at the convention, after the local union had acted.

Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood cited the International laws on the subject of appeals.

Delegate Faries (Philadelphia) claimed that the laws had not been complied with, no notice of appeal having been given.

Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood said it should be remembered that the members of the executive council were members of the organization as well as officers, and thus entitled to like privileges. He held that the pamphlet issued by the council and other procedure in the case was all that was necessary to enable the convention to act both intelligently and legally.

Delegate Faries (Philadelphia) asserted that the pamphlet mentioned could not be considered as an appeal.

Delegate Steele (Washington) made an extended plea for harmony and for eradicating the vengeance idea. He seconded the substitute of Delegate White, as he considered the penalty of expulsion too severe.

Delegate Hayes (Cleveland) said he looked upon the refusal of Smith to submit evidence as prima facie evidence of his guilt. He favored the committee's report. The speaker continued: "If it has come to this, that every disgruntled individual is to be allowed to charge that the executive council is 'in league with rats,' then the sooner the organization goes to pieces the better it will be for all members. A reprimand or vote of censure is not sufficient, for it afforded no guarantee that Delegate Smith would not return home and repeat these charges, taking the chance that the convention next year would let him down easy again. The issue could be avoided by Delegate Smith making a frank and manly apology. Lacking that, the report of the committee should be adopted."

Delegate Donnell (Cincinnati) favored the adoption of the report of the committee, and said "if Philadelphia Union persisted in acting like a spanked child and refusing to play, the International Typographical Union would have to proceed without it."

SELECTION OF NEXT CONVENTION CITY.

Vice-President Hays announced that the hour of 11 having arrived, the printed ballots would be distributed and delegates would select the place of meeting of the next convention.

Delegate Klein (Pittsburg) and Snyder (Colorado Springs) were appointed tellers.

At the completion of the roll call of delegates the chair asked if all who wished had voted. There being no response, the ballot was ordered closed.

The tellers having counted the ballots, reported the following result:

Colorado Springs	144
Pittsburg	107
Total vote cast	251

Colorado Springs was declared selected as the place for the next meeting.

Delegate Snyder (Colorado Springs), on behalf of the Colorado Springs delegation, citizens, and the Union Printers' Home, thanked the convention for its kind consideration.

The convention resumed discussion on report of appeals committee.

Delegate Barnes (Chattanooga) spoke at length against the substitute, and favored the report of the appeals committee.

Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood expressed surprise at the position assumed by Delegate Smith and his colleagues from Philadelphia. Some of the representatives of Philadelphia Union, and Delegate Smith in particular, had for months been circulating the statement that proof of the perfidy of the members of the executive council would be furnished at this convention. Yet now, when face to face with the slandered officials, they failed to offer any evidence whatever in support of the charges made by Delegate Smith, and instead sought to evade the issue through subterfuge and attempts to hide behind the technicalities of the law, as construed by them. Mr. Bramwood also denied the statement made by Delegate Steele (Washington, D. C.) that vengeance was the motive, and maintained there was a principle involved—that of rendering justice according to the law and the facts presented.

At this point Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood yielded the floor to Delegate Steele (Washington, D. C.), who desired permission to explain that the officers were not meant in his remarks, but the various members who had made that boast. He considered the record of the International Typographical Union officers as being absolutely clean, and expressed himself as especially pleased with the record of Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood.

Secretary-Treasurer Bramwood thanked Delegate Steele for his complimentary references to him, and then proceeded to discuss the case at length. He stated at the outset that he had ever been a firm believer in criticism and a consistent advocate of the freedom of the press; but he contended that denunciatory statements and charges of the character under discussion did not come under the head of criticism, but rather under that of slander, and asserted that upholding the freedom of the press did not mean that writers and editors were granted unbridled license to abuse and vilify their fellow men. He admitted that he felt very keenly the aspersions that had been cast upon his character as a union man and official by Delegate Smith, and challenged the production of any evidence, direct or indirect, oral or documentary, in support of the charge that he had been in collusion with rats in Philadelphia or elsewhere. The secretary asserted that while he had at different times been subjected to venomous attacks on other points, none had previously questioned his fidelity to union principles in all that the term implied. His reputation as a unionist had been unsullied for thirty-three years, and it remained for Shelby Smith to cast the first slur. Mr. Bramwood quoted the denunciatory statements regarding the members of the executive council, published by Mr. Smith in the Trades Union News, and held that one who consorted with rats, as charged in that article and its flaring headlines, was worse than a rat, and deserved the loathing and contempt of all unionists and the severest punishment that could be administered. These charges were either true or false. If true, the members of the executive council should be summarily dismissed in disgrace and forever placed beyond the pale of organized labor. If false, that fact should be established, and the slanderer who had thus deliberately vilified union members and officials should be punished in such a way as would demonstrate to him the enormity of his offense and tend to convince him of the error of his ways. Mr. Bramwood again challenged the production of an atom of evidence to support the charges, and, looking directly at Mr. Smith, continued: "I want to say, with all the vehemence in my power, that when you made these statements you knew they were false and malicious, and yet you endeavored to rob union men of their good name." Mr. Bramwood further declined to allow the Philadelphia delegates to blind the eyes of the convention to the real situation, and briefly discussed the dispute with the organization committee of No. 2 and Philadelphia Union. He contended that while the Smith case grew out of the Philadelphia situation, yet it stood by itself. Even though it might be held that the council had acted ill-advisedly and even unjustly in the Philadelphia case—if the local union was right and the council wrong—the speaker said the members of the council had undoubtedly exercised their best judgment in the premises and administered the law as they construed it, and their action on this point did not warrant the charges of "again stabbing No. 2 in the back," of "rendering aid and succor to the rats in their fight against the union," of "being in league with the rat employers and rat printers in Philadelphia," etc. He also drew attention to the insinuations of Mr. Smith, in his testimony before the trial board of No. 2 and the papers submitted to the appeals committee, that the official acts of the members of the council were dominated or controlled by an outlaw organization. He indignantly resented these insinuations, and challenged the production of any evidence tending to substantiate this veiled attempt to becloud his freedom and independence of action as a union man and as a union official. The secretary stated that it was for the members of the appeals committee and the delegates assembled to repudiate the intimations of unfairness on their part that had been made by Delegate Smith and some of his colleagues. He then concluded his remarks by holding aloft the copy of the Trades Union News containing the charges made by Mr. Smith, and reading the glaring headlines.

Delegate Throssell (Newark) upheld the report of the committee, and said that attacks had also been made on himself and other members of the International Typographical Union by Mr. Smith. He was going to vote for Smith's expulsion. No member, no matter how insignificant, was safe from the attacks of such editors.

Delegate Black (Sioux Falls) said he was an administration man first, last, and all the time, and he heartily favored the expulsion of Delegate Smith because of his unwarranted charges.

Delegate Bandlow (Cleveland) spoke in favor of the substitute. He was not desirous of removing the stigma from Mr. Smith, nor did he believe the statements about the executive council to be true. They were unwarranted, unwise and immoderate. But he believed the report as submitted, with the penalty in the substitute, would be remembered by Mr. Smith.

President Lynch then took the floor and again drew attention to the concluding statement in the report of the Philadelphia trial committee: "In conclusion we hope this long-range discussion will close, and if Mahomet will not come to the mountain, the mountain may go to Mahomet and settle the matter face to face at Toronto." He said that the "mountain" did not show any disposition to go to Mahomet, and that therefore Mahomet would have to come to the mountain. As the other side proposed to quote Shakespeare, and the Immortal Bard appeared to be of some importance in settling this latter-day discussion, he would quote some himself:

"Good name, in man and woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls.
Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine—'tis his—and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name
Robs me of that which not enricheth him,
And makes me poor indeed."

The president said the Philadelphia Trade Union News was on its last legs. The Philadelphia reorganization committee subsidized it from the International money grant, so that the paper could be used as the mouthpiece of No. 2. When the difference arose between No. 2's committee and the council, the editor of the News announced that the local committee had muzzled him. Shortly afterward he declared that the muzzle was off, and the abuse and vilification of the council then began. It is claimed that this was simply the exercise of the liberty of the press, but the president declared that it was license, and not liberty. President Lynch said he had no quarrel with the editors of the reputable labor press; he knew the obstacles that the labor press was confronted with, and the apathy and indifference characterizing the wage earners as far as support for the labor press was concerned. The reputable labor press was one of the strongest pillars of the trade-union movement, and he desired to emphatically differentiate between the reputable labor press and the craft-labor papers indulging in slander and abuse. President Lynch also said that he did not object to criticism of his official policy or acts, but there should be discrimination between license and liberty. He then took up the charges made by the Trades Union News and discussed them paragraph by paragraph, showing that there was no foundation for them, and that they were pure fiction. Had the executive council failed to defend itself, then the parties behind the charges would have cited the provisions of section 81 of the general laws and would have made claim that the council was afraid to proceed under the law. At some length the speaker pointed out that two so-called labor journals—the Philadelphia Trade Union News and a western paper—were doing more injury to the eight-hour cause than publications admittedly printed in behalf of the employers' association. Slander printed in the eastern paper was copied in the western paper, and vice versa. Gleefully they rolled their balls of mud and tossed them back and forth. President Lynch said he had been accused in the Philadelphia Trades Union News of saying in Chicago that he would recommend to the Toronto convention the postponement or modification of the eight-hour demand, and that this statement was immediately copied in the western paper. And this at a time when the International situation was peculiarly delicate owing to the defection of one large union from the eight-hour cause. This was only a sample of the misrepresentation. "If they can discredit us, they will," he said; "their object is to weaken us in the eyes of the membership, and indirectly they attack the eight-hour movement, desiring its failure in the belief that its collapse will ruin the officers' prestige. They hope for our political death in the forthcoming campaign, on which they have fastened their greedy, lustful eyes. If we take certain action, they roast, and roast, and roast. Lacking that basis they outline action which they say we propose to take, and then they roast, and roast, and roast. There may be a hereafter in which these journalistic vipers will expiate their journalistic sins, and if justice is there meted out to them they will continue to roast, and roast, and roast. I realize what this denunciation means, and it is a year before I can reply. All of the slander they can now concoct will be aimed at me. It may be that this sea of filth will overwhelm me, but the stand that I now take will at least protect those who follow. I defy these papers, and will continue my work for organized labor in the manner I have carried it on in the past, and I will not act on the suggestions, nor seek the advice, of these two papers—the underminers of the trade-union movement. Slander is their source of livelihood. Their misguided subscribers, used by them as dupes, read this slander and pass it on. As slander is the source from which they draw their sustenance, I have warrant for the assertion that it will continue, and with redoubled force, because the editors of these papers MUST LIVE."

Continuation of the debate was deferred till the afternoon session.

Chairman Stevenson, of the arrangements committee, announced that the cars for the trip of the ladies around the city would leave the Rossin House at 2:30, and that the attendants at the convention would be photographed at 5 o'clock on the steps of the municipal building.

The convention adjourned until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

LABOR TEMPLE, TORONTO, CANADA,
Thursday, August 17, 1905.

Vice-President Hays called the meeting to order at 2:10.

Recommendation was made that the credentials of Francis W. Neilan, of New London, No. 159, although irregular in date of election, be received and the delegate declared seated.

The recommendation was adopted.

The discussion of the report of the committee on appeals was resumed.

Delegate Smith (Philadelphia) made a personal explanation of his position while before the committee, entering into a minute description of the details of what transpired between himself and the committee, before and during the sessions. He maintained that no defense of the Smith case could be made unless the Philadelphia situation was considered in connection with it. The evidence in the Smith case would necessarily be fragmentary if considered alone. The executive council had appealed to passion and prejudice in their arguments, and pleaded the ridiculous position they would be placed in if the committee's report was not adopted. He contradicted President Lynch's construction of the item published in the Trades Union News relating to his speech at the meeting of Chicago Union. Mr. Smith then read a statement in writing as follows:

I confess that I am not able to produce evidence to substantiate the statements made in the Trades Union News of February 9, concerning the executive council of the International Typographical Union in the construction placed upon them by the council and the committee on appeals—a construction never intended to be conveyed. I deeply regret their publication, and shall request the publication of this statement in the Trades Union News regardless of the action of this convention.

Chairman Draper, of the appeals committee, gave a detailed account of the procedure of the appeals committee in the case at issue, and emphatically claimed that the course of the committee and its report had been dictated by the spirit of American and British fair play. He strongly resented the intimation that the committee had sought to please the executive council in rendering its verdict, and referred to his long connection with the labor movement in Canada and the trust reposed in him by his fellow unionists. He maintained that the verdict rendered by the committee was a just one, and expressed the belief that good results would follow its approval by the convention. Mr. Draper said, in conclusion, that the duty of the appeals committee had been a most unpleasant one, but discipline must be maintained and the laws of the organization impartially enforced.

Delegate Berger (Milwaukee) said Mr. Smith had apologized—it came hard, but should have been made earlier. Labor editors sometimes published such things for a good purpose, and that may have been Mr. Smith's intention. He supported the substitute of Delegate White, in the belief that the sentence of expulsion was too severe and that a lighter penalty would prove effective.

Delegate Nock (Birmingham) supported the report of the committee. He said there was no middle ground. It had been demonstrated that Delegate Smith's statements were false and malicious, and the convention should enforce the laws of the International Typographical Union and punish the offender.

Delegate Harris (Washington, Ind.) called for the previous question, and twenty-five delegates supported the motion.

The motion for the previous question prevailed.

The chair placed the substitute of Delegate White before the convention, as follows:

Moved, as a substitute for the recommendations of the committee on appeals, a vote of censure for the unwise and immoderate language of Shelby Smith in the Trades Union News of February 9, 1905.

The vote being taken, the substitute was declared lost. A division being called for, the count of hands showed 30 ayes and 163 nays. The substitute was therefore again declared lost.

The chair stated the question was now on the adoption of the report of the committee on appeals.

Delegate White (San Francisco) moved to divide the question into three parts. The motion was lost.

The question now recurred on the adoption of the report of the committee.

Delegate Steele (Washington) moved for a roll call vote. There being twenty-five seconds, the motion was declared carried.

The roll call showed the following vote:

AYES.

Delegate Miller (Indianapolis German-American), a member of the executive council, was excused from voting.

The chair announced the result of the vote as 209 ayes and 34 nays, and declared the report of the committee adopted and the provisions in force.

Delegate Shelby Smith then vacated his seat on the floor of the convention and left the hall.

President Lynch again took the chair.

Delegate Hayes (Cleveland) moved that Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, be accorded the privileges of the floor.

President Lynch ruled that, if no objection was made, the report of the eight-hour committee would be taken up before President Gompers addressed the convention. There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Delegate Hayes (Cleveland), chairman of the eight-hour committee, read the report, which was as follows:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EIGHT-HOUR DAY.

TORONTO, ONT., August 17, 1905.

To the Officers and Delegates of the Fifty-First Session of the International Typographical Union:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN—Your committee on the eight-hour day begs leave to submit the following report:

In the first instance the committee is of the opinion that, owing to the near approach of the date upon which it has been determined by our referendum that the eight-hour day shall be inaugurated, a review of the history of the eight-hour movement is desirable, in order that the delegates to this convention may thoroughly understand the steps that have been taken, and that they be familiar with all phases of the subject. The committee has been to some labor to prepare this data, and it is of the opinion that the report it herewith submits will be of value, not only to this convention, but to the membership at large.

At the forty-eighth session of the International Typographical Union, held in Cincinnati, August 11-17, 1902, the following was adopted:

That the executive council of the International Typographical Union and the first vice-president are directed to act as a committee for the purpose of devising and putting into effect plans for the establishment of an eight-hour day throughout the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union at as early a date as practicable.

That local unions be required to act in conjunction with the said committee in furthering its plans, and that they be enjoined from making contracts extending beyond October 1, 1905, which require their members to work more than eight hours per day.

That the said committtee bring the matter before the National Typothetæ, to the end that the eight-hour day may be put into operation without friction.

That should the committee deem it necessary to add to its numbers, it shall be empowered to do so.

The report of the president to the Cincinnati session, treating of the eight-hour day in book and job rooms, said:

Various methods have been suggested whereby the eight-hour day can be generally put into effect in book and job rooms, and all of these have merit. One of these suggestions which particularly appeals to our members as feasible, and also just to the employers, is that the working time shall be reduced fifteen minutes each year for four years, or until the eight-hour day is an accomplished fact. * * * That the eight-hour day will eventually be established as the maximum for our entire membership goes without challenge. We trust that it may come peaceably, but in any event, come it must.

The Cincinnati convention also directed that "Local unions, in forming new scales, make an effort to secure the eight-hour day."

In circular No. 1, the International eight-hour committee made the following recommendations:

1. That in the making of new scales or contracts local unions endeavor to incorporate the suggestion contained in the president's annual report and made a part of this circular—that the working time in book and job rooms be reduced fifteen minutes each year for four years. This suggestion to apply in case agreements, embracing better terms, can not be negotiated.
2. That an eight-hour committee of not less than five members shall be appointed at once.
3. Every movement, to be successful, must be properly financed. It is recommended, therefore, that local unions and eight-hour committees give consideration to the establishment of an eight-hour fund. If needed, it is vital that the money shall be on hand.

Circular No. 2 again made reference to the request that local eight-hour committees should be appointed, and asked for the names of members making up these committees. It was again pointed out that Every movement, to be successful, must be properly financed. It is recommended, therefore, that local unions and eight-hour committees give consideration to the establishment of an eight-hour fund. If needed, it is vital that the money shall be on hand."

The instructions enacted by the Cincinnati convention were printed in black type at the beginning of circular No. 2:

That the local unions be required to act in conjunction with the said committee in furthering its plans, and that they be enjoined from making contracts extending beyond October 1, 1905, which require their members to work more than eight hours per day.

Circular No. 3 informed the membership that since the eight-hour-day agitation was launched many locals have provided in contracts for the gradual shortening of the hours, and the inauguration of the eight-hour day on October 1, 1905. Continuing, this circular said:

In the making of new contracts in your jurisdiction, effort should be put forth to secure the eight-hour day at once, if possible; if not, the gradual reduction of the hours, or the eight-hour day on a specified date not later than October 1, 1905. * * * Local eight-hour committees must be guided largely by local conditions. In a sense the achievement of the shorter workday is a local question. If opportunity presents itself, make the most of it. Hold frequent committee meetings, and discuss ways and means to achieve the desired end. That which may seem an impossibility now, will become a reality through energetic, constant and intelligent effort.

Circular No. 4 asked for local data.

Circular No. 5 gave certain statistical information that was gathered as a result of the local data asked for in circular No. 4. The report of the eight-hour committee at the Washington convention, which was adopted by that gathering, is also made a part of Circular No. 5. The proposition receiving the sanction of the committee was as follows:

Whereas, Many unions have secured agreements with employers for the inauguration of an eight-hour workday in the book and job offices; therefore, be it

Resolved, That subordinate unions, in entering into such agreements, are instructed to secure the eight-hour workday in preference to the forty-eight-hour week, or any plan that permits of the time gained being deducted from any one day, to the end that the spirit of the shorter workday movement may be observed, and more work distributed among the book and job men not regularly employed.

It was also adopted:

That the committee on eight-hour day be instructed to notify local unions which have not already obtained the eight-hour day or made contracts binding them to its provisional institution, that it is the sense of the International Typographical Union that they make effort on January 1, 1905, to obtain the eight-hour day according to plans deemed most expedient by such local unions in their several localities.

Continuing, the committee said:

Your committee congratulates the president and the executive council on the large number of unions that have secured, or partially secured, the eight-hour day during the past year through their efforts, and urges upon all local unions and eight-hour committees to put forth the greatest efforts during the coming year.

From the data furnished the committee we find that a large number of local unions failed to report their status on the eight-hour day after blanks had been sent them requesting such information, and your committee respectfully urges all local unions to take a more active interest and lend greater support to the executive officers.

Your committee recommends and urges all delegates in attendance at this convention, on return to their respective unions, to incorporate in their reports a statement of the progress of the eight-hour day during the past year, and to use their best endeavors to have their local committee "wake up," and those not having such committee to immediately appoint one, for it is only by persistent effort and keeping constantly at it that we can hope to achieve the desired aim.

Circular No. 6 stated that frequently a local committee wrote the International committee that the local union which it represented was situated in a jurisdiction too large or too small for an immediate attempt for the eight-hour day. Attention was drawn to the fact that a large union, San Francisco Typographical Union No. 21, and a small union, Paducah Typographical Union No. 134, had arranged for and enforced the eight-hour day. It was pointed out that

The result achieved by these two unions, and by more than eighty other typographical unions, can be brought about by every typographical union that does not at present enforce the eight-hour day in book and job rooms.

Circular No. 7 gave that portion of the report of President Lynch to the St. Louis convention dealing with the eight-hour campaign and the progress that had been made, together with excerpts from the reports of officers to the convention of the United Typothetæ of America, previously held in the city of St. Louis, Mo.

We quote herewith the following resolutions adopted by the United Typothetæ at its St. Louis convention, together with the letter of transmission to our representatives:

St. Louis, June 23, 1904.

Messrs. Lynch, Bramwood and Miller, Committee from International Typographical Union:

Gentlemen—In accordance with your request, expressed in the conference yesterday, that we should obtain from the convention a statement of its attitude upon the proposed eight-hour day, we placed the matter before the convention, and also the telegram addressed to you from Indianapolis, and beg to submit in reply thereto the following resolutions, which passed unanimously.

Whereas, The International Typographical Union has asked the United Typothetæ of America to declare its position upon the proposed eight-hour day; and,

Whereas, Under existing conditions any attempt to reduce the hours of labor in the printing trade would be disastrous to the employer and employe alike; be it

Resolved, That the United Typothetæ of America declares that it is opposed to any reduction of the fifty-four-hour week; and, be it further

Resolved, That the United Typothetæ of America will resist any attempt on the part of the International Typographical Union to reduce the present hours of labor.

Yours very truly,
William Green.
George H. Ellis.
Harry P. Pears.
Thomas E. Donnelly.
F. C. Nunemacher.

It was pointed out in the report of the president that

The recently oft-repeated assertion that the eight-hour day in book and job rooms is a question for adjudication between the International Typographical Union and the United Typothetæ of America was put to the test in St. Louis on June 22 and 23. The annual convention of the typothetæ was held in the Exposition City the week of the 20th. Prior to this gathering, the International president addressed a letter to the typothetæ secretary reciting the action taken by our Cincinnati convention on the eight-hour proposition, and continuing: "It has been frequently intimated by local associations of the typothetæ that the eight-hour day was an issue that should be adjusted between the International Typographical Union and the United Typothetæ of America, and that these local associations were willing to accept and put into effect any conclusion that might be arrived at by the higher bodies. So often, indeed, has this intimation been made, and in several instances accepted by our local unions, that the eight-hour committee for the International Typographical Union is prepared and anxious to demonstrate the effectiveness of the suggestion. Therefore, our eight-hour committee, or a majority of that committee, will be in St. Louis during your eighteenth annual convention, which, I understand, will be held during the week commencing Monday, June 20, 1904, in the convention hall of the Century building, Ninth and Olive streets. Our committee will at that time, or at such time during the week as may be designated by your convention, be pleased to meet a committee representing your association, for the purpose of discussing the eight-hour day, and, if possible, arriving at a conclusion that may be submitted to the United Typothetæ of America and the International Typographical Union for consideration and possible ratification."

In accordance with our request, the typothetæ convention instructed a committee to meet with our International representatives, and conferences were held on June 22 and 23. At the first meeting the employers asked us to make a proposition for the inauguration of the shorter workday, which they would present to their convention. This was declined, our committee requesting that before any discussion as to detail the typothetæ should declare its position on the shorter workday proposition. If this attitude was favorable, we said the two committees could then take up and endeavor to reach an agreement as to the date on which the reduction or partial reduction in hours should take place. On the other hand, if the attitude of the United Typothetæ was unfavorable to a curtailment of the present working time, then we wanted to know that, and in such a way that there would remain no room for misunderstanding. In other words, if the employers should give us a negative reply, we wanted it on the main question, and not on a proposition from us for the inauguration of the shorter workday on a certain date, which might leave local associations free to assert that the United Typothetæ had not declared itself against an eight-hour day, but only against its initiation on the date which our committee had named. This was finally agreed to, and on the 23d we were given a copy of the resolutions adopted by the typothetæ convention, squarely setting forth the position of the United Typothetæ of America on the request made by the International Typographical Union for an agreement under which the eight-hour day would become effective in book and job rooms. It was just the answer we expected, and we were in no wise disappointed. Indeed, we believed that we had reason for congratulating ourselves in that the atmosphere had been thoroughly cleared, and henceforth we would know exactly where we stood. There can be no further shifting of the problem to other shoulders by either local unions or local employers. It is a clean-cut, well-defined, pressing condition.

We continue to quote from the report of the president of the St. Louis convention, as we believe that that report, taken in connection with the resolutions adopted by the St. Louis convention of the United Typothetæ of America makes ridiculous some recent statements by the Typothetæ, and also clearly sets forth the attitude of that association toward our eight-hour day at the time our St. Louis convention met.

Recently I made reference in my JOURNAL notes to "Circular No. 6," issued from the headquarters of the United Typothetæ of America, and which contained this statement: "The efforts of the International Typographical Union to inaugurate a shorter workday have been met by the earnest opposition of the United Typothetæ of America, and every effort possible is being made to advise cities where agitation is carried on to turn a deaf ear to any such suggestion, and, if necessary, fight it." On this the following comment was made: "Some of our members have inclined to the belief that conferences should be sought with the officers of the United Typothetæ of America relative to the eight-hour day, and the above quotation may bring about a change in this regard. The typothetæ intends to oppose the eight-hour day just so long as opposition is feasible. When the employing book and job printers become convinced that we are determined in our efforts to secure the shorter workday, then will it be possible to confer with prospect for success. The agitation for the nine-hour day extended over many years before it crystallized and had result. Success came when the membership was aroused."

Under the caption "Some Additional Evidence," the following was also printed in my department: "In an address delivered at New Haven, January 19th, before the Connecticut State Typothetæ, by the secretary of the United Typothetæ of America, that official is reported to have said: "The length of the workday is not of so much importance as the returns received. We are endeavoring to suppress all agitation started by the International Typographical Union. If the hours are reduced the expenses of the business are added to by fifteen per cent. There is a movement in Congress to frame an eight-hour day, which is a dangerous one. We are opposing it because it is unwise, and we are petitioning our members to have their senators oppose the bill. We are also antagonizing the anti-injunction bill. We stand for the 'open' office, although we agree that the union men are the best workmen that we can secure." Could there be a clearer outline of the attitude of the associated employing printers toward the agitation for a shorter workday? Yet we are told to confer with the United Typothetæ of America! Yes, when we have aroused the union printers of the country, when we have imbued them with eight-hour enthusiasm, when we have solidified and crystallized the eight-hour demand, when there is no room for doubt as to our attitude, then we will confer. And then will a conference be successful. Nevertheless the agitation for the conference continued. It has been held. We have the result. And we repeat, "When the employing book and job printers become convinced that we are determined in our efforts to secure the shorter workday, then will it be possible to confer with prospect for success."

The president, in referring to the Syracuse agreement, said in his report to the St. Louis convention:

In some localities employers insist that we are bound by the nine-hour agreement. On this point, a typothetæ circular says: "It must not be forgotten that the United Typothetæ of America has an agreement with the International Typographical as well as the other unions connected with the printing trades for a fifty-four-hour week, entered into at Syracuse in 1898, and that the terms of this agreement have never been changed, and must remain in force until formal notice of withdrawal or request for an alteration of its requirements has been submitted to the United Typothetæ of America."

A reading of the 1898 agreement referred to will demonstrate conclusively the lack of basis for the statement made in the official circular. It only specified the dates on which the nine and one-half and nine-hour day became effective.

The number of unions having the eight-hour day, those having arranged for the same, the unions then working less than nine hours but having sent in no data for the shorter workday, and unions then working less than nine hours having the eight-hour day arranged for, were given in Circular No. 7.

Circular No. 8 set forth the action taken by the St. Louis convention, and which was then before the referendum for its consideration.

Circular No. 9 again touched on the St. Louis plan, which had received a majority in the referendum of 14,085.

Your committee reproduces herewith entirely the report of the eight-hour committee to the St. Louis convention, which was later submitted to the referendum, and, as has been pointed out, adopted by that body.

Your committee on the eight-hour day has carefully considered that portion of the report of President Lynch captioned "The Eight-Hour Day," and which we are informed is intended as the report of the International eight-hour committee, and has also had in review the circulars thus far issued by the International eight-hour committee, seven in number. We have also had before us President Lynch, who has explained fully and in detail the various steps taken by the committee, the work performed and the general object in view.

After a careful review of the eight-hour movement and the documents indicated, we desire to report to the convention as follows:

First—We endorse without reservation the work and methods of the International eight-hour committee. We believe in this connection that the committee has thoroughly covered the ground and has put into effect every method that thus far has given promise of advancement to the eight-hour cause.

Second—We believe with President Lynch that "The eight-hour-day subject will not grow old until the inauguration of the eight-hour day is itself an event of the past rather than something that must yet be brought about."

Third—We regret that the eight-hour day in book and job rooms is not a question at the present time for adjudication between the International Typographical Union and the United Typothetæ of America, but in view of the action taken by the United Typothetæ of America in convention assembled at St. Louis, in which it is asserted "That the United Typothetæ of America declares it is opposed to any reduction of the fifty-four-hour week," and "that the United Typothetæ of America will resist any attempt on the part of the International Typographical Union to reduce the present hours of labor," no other conclusion is possible. That an agreement on peaceable lines is not now possible is solely the fault of the associated employers, and this contention is borne out by the action of their last convention. Further, we dispute the statement of the typothetæ that a reduction in the hours of labor would be disastrous to the employer. We maintain that the eight-hour day is the logical workday, that it is sufficient for the needs of the trade, and we give emphatic endorsement to the doctrine that the introduction of labor-saving machinery is not for the benefit of the employer alone, but should also result in better working conditions for the employe in the way of reduction in the hours of toil and increased remuneration.

Fourth—The claim advanced by the typothetæ that it has an agreement with the International Typographical Union for a fifty-four-hour week which precludes any attempt on the part of our organization for a shorter workday or week, is not borne out by the terms of the Syracuse agreement, and we believe it is made at this time simply in furtherance of the intention to construct as many obstacles to the eight-hour day as is possible.

Fifth—We congratulate the International eight-hour committee on the large number of unions that have thus far succeeded in inaugurating the eight-hour day, or that have made arrangements under which the eight-hour day will shortly come into effect. In view of the fact that it took more than twenty years to bring about the nine-hour day, we have especial cause for jubilation over the progress that has thus far has been made toward the logical and inevitable eight-hour workday.

Sixth—We endorse the statement made by President Lynch, and we desire to impress it on the delegates to this convention and through them on the membership at large, that when the employing book and job printers become convinced that we are determined in our efforts to secure the shorter workday, then it will be possible to confer with the United Typothetæ of America with prospect for success.

After weighing carefully the various plans and methods that have been suggested to your committee, the committee recommends to the convention the adoption of the following preamble and resolution, which, when referred to the referendum and adopted by it, will place the International Typographical Union squarely on record on the eight-hour-day proposition, and indicate beyond question the date on which the eight-hour day shall become effective in all union establishments:

Whereas, In the movement for an eight-hour day for the book and job members of the Typographical Union, authorized by our Cincinnati convention, the international eight-hour committee has sought an agreement with the United Typothetæ of America, under which the eight-hour day could be made effective on a mutually satisfactory plan, and with the minimum embarrassment to the interest of our employers; and

Whereas, The overtures for peace thus made were refused and declined, and replied to with a threat, combined with a practical declaration of war should any effort be made to achieve the shorter workday, as witness the language of the resolutions adopted by the late typothetæ convention; and

Whereas, We reaffirm and again demand the eight-hour day for our book and job members;

Whereas, Your committee having carefully considered Propositions Nos. 35, 61, 62, 63, 98, 103 and 129, submit in lieu thereof the following:

Resolved, That we again declare our entire willingness to negotiate with the United Typothetæ for an agreement under which the eight-hour day will become operative, and so instruct our eight-hour committee.

Resolved, That an assessment of one-half of one (1) per cent on all moneys earned be levied upon the membership of the International Typographical Union for the purpose of a defense fund. Such fund to be held and expended by the subordinate union, except in those cases where no trouble is experienced in putting in operation the eight-hour day, and in such unions one-half of the assessment to be subject to call of the International officers for use in the furtherance of the eight-hour day as deemed in their judgment necessary.

Resolved, That on January 1, 1906, the eight-hour day shall become effective in all union establishments under the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, where existing contracts do not prevent, and in each instance where the eight-hour day is refused work shall cease.

In conclusion, your committee desires to urge upon this convention, and the membership at large, the advisability and necessity of adopting the resolutions herein set forth, and preparing in every way possible for effective action if resistance to the eight-hour day develops on or prior to January 1, 1906.

At the convention of the American Federation of Labor, held in San Francisco in November, 1904, President Gompers, in his report to the gathering, took occasion to say (see president's report):

The American Federation of Labor has been of incalculable benefit to a large number of international unions and local unions in the introduction and enforcement of the eight-hour workday, as attested by the large number of our fellows who now work under that rule. Inasmuch as the International Typographical Union has taken the initiative of its own accord in the matter of introducing and enforcing the eight-hour workday, I submit for your consideration and recommend that this movement of the International Typographical Union receive the sincere and hearty endorsement and co-operation of this convention of the American Federation of Labor, and of every union member, as well as every wage earner and those who sympathize with practical, evolutionary, economic progress.

It is not now known whether there will be any contest against the eight-hour day; whether any antagonistic action will be taken by the employers to the men. We do know, however, that at the last convention of the employing printers of the United States, organized under the name of the typothetæ, a resolution was adopted declaring against that movement. In any event, it seems clear to me that every action should be taken by this convention and by our organization generally, not only to pledge the support of the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated unions to the International Typographical Union in its effort to enforce the eight-hour day, but that a special committee be appointed by this convention to give the subject matter consideration; that the committee should consult with the officers and representatives of the International Typographical Union during the convention and report thereto before adjournment; that either that committee or another committee be authorized to be appointed for the purpose of co-operating with the executive council of the American Federation of Labor and the officers of the Typographical Union, so that the best possible aid can be rendered to our fellow workers in the great movement that they have undertaken, and in which they have the hopes, wishes, prayers and co-operation of every one interested in the welfare of the human family and the progress and civilization of our people.

Of course, in the effort to help one particular organization, especially in the laudable purpose it has mapped out for itself to achieve, we are not circumscribed or limited in our effort to help any and all of our fellow workmen who are in a position to make any effort for the advancement or promotion of their interests. We shall, therefore, welcome not only the initiative of our fellow unionists to obtain improved conditions, and particularly the improved conditions that come from a shorter workday, but we shall be glad to help in the initiation of any movement that will contribute in any way toward the protection, the promotion of the conditions and interests of our fellow workmen, and to render them every assistance within our power.

Your committee finds that the special committee to which was referred that part of the report of the president of the American Federation of Labor, treating of our eight-hour movement, made the following report, adopted unanimously by the convention and quoted in full in the report of the International president to this convention, and again quoted in full in this report:

We have had before us the president of the International Typographical Union, and we find that the movement for the eight-hour day for the book and job printers of the United States and Canada was inaugurated at the Cincinnati convention of the International Typographical Union, held in 1902, that it was further considered at the Washington convention, held in 1903, and that at the St. Louis convention, held in August of this year, it was decided that the eight-hour day should be enforced on January 1, 1906, and that for the financial support of this movement an assessment of one-half of one per cent should be levied on the earnings of all the members of the International Typographical Union.

This plan was submitted to a referendum vote, as provided by the laws of the International Typographical Union, and President Lynch informs your committee that the proposition received a majority of more than fourteen thousand votes. Therefore the assessment will become effective on January 1, 1905, and on January 1, 1906, effort will be made to put the eight-hour day into effect.

We are also informed that there is an association of commercial printers entitled the United Typothetæ of America, the employers' association. That the officers of the International Typographical Union have made effort to secure an agreement with the United Typothetæ under which the eight-hour day for book and job printers would become effective, and that the employers' association has thus far refused to enter into such an agreement. We are furthermore informed that the United Typothetæ of America is at present accumulating a defense fund in order that the eight-hour day enforcement may be combated. It is hoped by the employers to gather together at least $500,000. In view of the above your committee would recommend:

First—That the American Federation of Labor approve and endorse the movement under way by the International Typographical Union for an eight-hour day for the book and job printers of the United States and Canada, and pledge to the support of this movement both moral and financial assistance.

Second—That if at any time after January 1, 1906, the International Typographical Union desires the financial support of the American Federation of Labor, and if, after investigation by the executive council, such financial support is found necessary in order to insure victory to the printers, the executive council shall levy the constitutional assessment on affiliated bodies, this assessment to continue for such length of time as in the judgment of the executive council may be necessary.

Third—Your committee recommends that a committee of five members be appointed to act with the executive council in furthering the eight-hour day for the book and job printers.

And we desire to conclude this report by extending to the International Typographical Union the hearty well wishes of the American Federation of Labor for the success of the printers' eight-hour project.

Circular No. 11 urged the necessity for organization work, and asserted that the eight-hour day could be accomplished without friction if the proper organization effort was put forth.

Circular No. 12 gave the list of eight-hour unions on May 1, 1905.

Circular No. 13 gave the list of eight-hour unions on June 1, 1905.

Circular No. 14 sets forth the correspondence and facts in the St. Louis case.

Circular No. 15 gave the eight-hour unions on July 1, 1905.

Returning now to the report of the president to this convention, containing also the report of the International eight-hour committee, and that section of the report covering the eight-hour campaign, we desire to say, in entire agreement with the president, that there is but one subject before the International Typographical Union—the establishment of the principle of not more than eight hours' work for all members of the organization. We coincide with his statement,

All other problems, all other questions, all other propositions are incident to the great economic advancement that we are attempting, and which has met with success in many instances. Achieving the eight-hour day, betterments will follow naturally. Higher wages, if we are to accept the history of other organizations enjoying the eight-hour day, are sure to succeed its general introduction.

We find from the report of the president that there were issued during the fiscal year 10,000 copies of Eight-Hour Circular No. 8, 10,000 copies of Eight-Hour Circular No. 9, 35,000 copies of Eight-Hour Circular No. 10, 20,000 copies of Eight-Hour Circular No. 11, 3,000 copies of Eight-Hour Circular No. 12, and 18,000 circulars under the following titles: "Golden Nuggets," "Boost" and "Organize!" Attached to the latter were blanks showing the plan used by Chicago Typographical Union to obtain the names and addresses of non-union printers in the jurisdiction of No. 16 and the adjacent territory, and it is stated that this plan had been adopted by many locals. Total number of circulars distributed was 96,000, making 23,375 packages. One thousand nine hundred and sixty-seven boxes of eight-hour buttons, containing from 15 to 1,000 buttons, a total of 50,000, were also mailed to secretaries and presidents of local unions, eight-hour committeemen and chairmen of chapels. Ten thousand eight-hour buttons of special design were furnished to our Canadian locals.

Under the auspices of the United Typothetæ of America, mass meetings of employing printers have been held in St. Paul, intended to cover the northwest; Kansas City, intended to cover the southwest; Atlanta, for the southeast; Boston, for the New England states; Philadelphia, for the central states, and Milwaukee, for the central northwestern states. It is stated by the president that

At these meetings our eight-hour campaign is the sole topic for discussion, and resolutions are adopted pledging the attendants to oppose the introduction of the eight-hour day. As far as your president is aware, the main argument at the meetings is that the eight-hour day is impractical, and that it will ruin the printing business.

We agree with the president that we can not coincide with this view, and we are one with him in the belief that the eight-hour day will stimulate the printing business, and in the end will be of value to the employers as well as to the employe. It is significant, as stated by the president in his report, that in some instances the attendants at these meetings have returned to their home cities and signed eight-hour contracts with our local unions.

There is another statement contained in the president's report that is of extreme importance, and its significance should be carefully sought by this convention:

The executive committee of the United Typothetæ of America, at a meeting in Kansas City on April 11, the day succeeding the mass meeting of employers in that city, changed the arrangements for the 1905 typothetæ convention, and in this respect nullified the action taken at the St. Louis typothetæ session last year. The 1905 convention will be held in Niagara Falls, New York, the week of September 4. The St. Louis selection was Atlantic City, New Jersey, in June.

If, as the president intimates, the employers are led to believe that some action will be taken at this convention that will prevent the eight-hour day from becoming effective on January 1, then the importance of this gathering becomes at once doubly apparent. We trust with the president that our deliberations will give small comfort to the associations of employing printers who have announced their opposition to our eight-hour day.

Referring to the mass meetings of employing printers, we desire to quote that portion of the president's report in which he sets forth what he believes to be the objects of these meetings:

The organization of the employing printers is not the only object of these mass meetings, held at central points. It is realized by those in charge of the employers' campaign that in the ranks of all unions there is an element that always looks with apprehension on every forward movement. When storm clouds appear, it is this element that begins the cry for "peace at any price." Then there is the obstructionist and the member whose activity is measured by the strength and continuity of the criticism of others that is his chief characteristic. To overawe the timid and supply the critic with fresh ammunition is the main object of these "mass meetings." Only when our membership, by a majority of more than fourteen thousand votes, gave voice to the almost unanimous demand for a shorter workday in the book and job trade did the employers realize the strength and determination behind the eight-hour movement, and only then was it decided that mass meetings were required. The further action of the federation convention in San Francisco, pledging us monetary support if necessary, again alarmed the typothetæ. They saw that the negative position taken at their last convention was not having the expected effect, and they know that the demand of twenty-three thousand of their employes can not be smothered with resolutions. Then was the "mass meeting" idea brought to the front. It is for the timid member and the professional critic that these mass meetings are held, and behind them is the hope that our ranks may be broken and thus our object defeated. The answer rests with those who have all to gain—our members.

The Six-City conference, held at International headquarters in April, was timely and effective, and we endorsed the conclusions reached by that conference. We note that the conference referred to the mass meetings of employers alluded to in this report, and in this connection said:

We greatly regret the hostile activity of the United Typothetæ of America and other associations of employing printers in calling meetings for the purpose of arousing opposition to and denunciation of the eight-hour workday, and we fear that if this antagonistic course is continued the friendly relations now existing between the employers' organization and the International Typographical Union will be disrupted. We believe that the dignity and business interests of the organizations of the printing trade will be best served by conference and conciliation.

We also considered the section of the president's report covering the Detroit conference, and while that conference was without immediate result, we note that the following was adopted just prior to adjournment:

It is the sense of this body that the officers of the International Union and the officers of the United Typothetæ of America get together some time between now and January 1, 1906, in an endeavor to arrive at an amicable adjustment of this difference.

And we especially take cognizance of the concluding statement of the president's review of the eight-hour campaign that

The executive council of the International Typographical Union has been, and is now, ready and willing to meet the executive officers of the United Typothetæ for the purpose of endeavoring to reach an amicable adjustment of the eight-hour question, but all overtures to that end have so far failed to elicit a favorable response from the officials of the United Typothetæ.

We desire to report to this convention that on August 14, 1905, your eight-hour committee held a conference with a committee representing the United Typothetæ of America, composed of President Ellis, of Boston, Secretary Macintyre, of New York, and Messrs. Greene, of New York, Donnelly, of Chicago, and Nunemacher, of Louisville, members of the executive board of the United Typothetæ of America, and after a thorough discussion of the eight-hour question received the following proposition from the representatives of the United Typothetæ:

Mr. Max S. Hayes, Rossin House, City:

DEAR SIR—As agreed at the joint committee meeting held today, I herewith send you the suggestions as outlined.

The committee from the United Typothetæ of America suggest to the eight-hour committee from the International Typographical Union that they recommend to the International Typographical Union convention, now in session, that it vote in favor of a reconsideration of the referendum vote taken last fall on the eight-hour day, and authorize a new referendum vote to be taken with the object of rescinding the resolution to make the eight-hour day effective January 1, 1906; or if the convention is unwilling to vote affirmatively on the above, that the convention shall empower the executive council to call for such referendum vote if at any time between now and January 1, 1906, the executive council shall consider it advisable. Sincerely yours, JOHN MACINTYRE, Secretary.

We especially endorse the idea of thoroughly organizing the so-called country printers, and we urge it on the membership so that on January 1, 1906, the jurisdiction may be thoroughly organized and our International union in condition to meet any warfare that may be forced upon it by employers resisting the general introduction of the shorter workday.

In this matter of organization we may well take a lesson out of the book of the typothetæ. For the past year they have strenuously made effort to bring within their ranks publishers of country newspapers, whom they had previously not only studiously ignored, but into whose job printing patronage they had continuously made sad inroads. They have succeeded in some instances by reducing their admission fees, but this bait has always failed with the country editor who fails to understand why he should lend himself to pull typothetæ chestnuts from the fire. However, it is our duty in this emergency to organize the country printers, and where they are not numerous enough in a town to obtain a charter they can, with little persuasion and by generous inducements, be prevailed upon to assume membership in unions contiguous to their respective towns. To this end your committee would suggest that they be permitted to affiliate with the local unions of their choice nearest their towns of residence. This plan is already in successful operation in some places, and we recommend the project to all the local unions in the International jurisdiction.

From the foregoing review of the procedure and documents in the eight-hour campaign, it becomes at once evident that the International Typographical Union has, from the inception of the idea, held itself in readiness to confer with the United Typothetæ of America, to the end that a peaceful settlement of the demand involved might be reached and that there might be the minimum disturbance of the conditions prevailing in the printing trade. It is also apparent that the United Typothetæ, on the other hand, has steadfastly opposed any reduction of the fifty-four-hour week, and has on every occasion, through its officers, circulars and public press, made known that opposition. As far as your committee is aware, the typothetæ has never modified the position taken at its St. Louis convention, and, while its officers have seemingly been willing to confer, they have avoided acceptance of opportunities for conference, and at the employers' mass meetings they have uniformly advised aggressive resistance and warfare if necessary in order to prevent the general introduction of the eight-hour workday. If, therefore, trouble does occur, the typothetæ will be alone responsible for the rupture of present relations.

Taking into consideration the number of unions that have obtained or have arranged for the eight-hour day, the magnificent condition of the International treasury and of local treasuries, the gradual accumulation of a large fund through the one-half of one per cent assessment, the moral and financial support accorded by the American Federation of Labor in the action taken at its San Francisco convention and quoted herein, the unanimous support of other international unions, the healthy and growing sentiment among our own membership in favor of the eight-hour day, we believe that the International Typographical Union could not be in better position nor could there be better prospect for success for the movement.

As to the action that shall be taken by this convention, your committee is of the opinion that any change in the present program would of necessity have to be referred to the referendum. The eight-hour proposition endorsed by the referendum provides:

That on January 1, 1906, the eight-hour day shall become effective in all union establishments in the jurisdiction of the International Typographical Union, where existing contracts do not prevent, and in each instance where the eight-hour day is refused work shall cease.

There is no room for doubt as to the meaning of this provision. If an agreement between the International Typographical Union and the United Typothetæ of America is not reached prior to January 1, 1906, and if resistance to the introduction of the shorter workday is met with on that date, it devolves on all the members of the International Typographical Union working in union establishments that decline to accede to the eight-hour day to at once cease work. In other words, and in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the position of the International Typographical Union, no union printer can, after January 1, work in a union office more than eight hours per day, forty-eight hours per week, except in emergency and under overtime rates.

We believe that this convention should clothe the International eight-hour committee with power to negotiate with representatives of the United Typothetæ of America if opportunity for negotiation occurs prior to January 1, and we so recommend, in order that the declaration of the referendum

That we again declare our entire willingness to negotiate with the United Typothetæ of America for an agreement under which the eight-hour day will become operative, and so instruct our eight-hour committee, may not be impaired.

We further recommend that the executive council be empowered to protect unions, where the local or national typothetæ precipitate trouble, by requesting unions in contiguous territory to order strikes whenever the council may deem necessary for the protection of the unions involved.

We find that it is the apparent intention in some localities where job offices are owned by publishers of newspapers, to grant the eight-hour day in the newspaper department but not in the job department; therefore your committee would recommend that, where a newspaper and job office is being conducted at present by the same individual, firm or corporation, on a nine-hour basis, no settlement for the eight-hour day shall be made, that does not provide that it shall become effective in both departments.

We urge the delegates attending this convention, on their return to their unions, to at once bring this report before these bodies; to urge upon their unions the value of organization work by the appointment of special committees to forward such purpose whenever necessary, and also ask these unions to provide, if action has not already been taken, for the collection of a fund, in addition to that accruing under the one-half of one per cent assessment, so that on January 1 every gap may be closed and ammunition gathered with which to conduct warfare, if warfare is necessary.

Your committee, after thoroughly considering all of the facts recited in this report, after carefully scrutinizing all of the documents issued in connection with the eight-hour campaign, after interviewing the International officers and delegates to this convention, after in every way familiarizing itself with the vast subject submitted to it for consideration, finds not a single flaw in the methods and policy that have thus far been pursued by the International eight-hour committee, and we recommend that the continuance of the campaign and the further steps that are to be taken in order to secure the shorter workday be again committed to the International committee, with assurances of the full confidence of the delegates to the fifty-first session of the International Typographical Union.

Your committee would also recommend that the secretary-treasurer be instructed to incorporate in the book of laws the propositions providing for the establishment of the eight-hour day on January 1, 1906.

Concluding the report, your committee desires to reiterate the declaration of the International president that

We do not want the eight-hour day by reason of charity or philanthropy. We do not want it in order that our physical or mental well-being may be improved. We refuse to abandon our eight-hour demand because we may under present conditions be more fortunately situated than other artisans. We want the eight-hour workday because we are convinced that it suffices for the work there is to do, the work that is to be done, the demand of society for the product of the press. We propose to sell to the employer eight hours out of twenty-four, and we will do as we please with the remaining sixteen.

Yours for eight hours, fraternally,

MAX S. HAYES, Chairman.
ELMER THROSSELL, Secretary.
H. L. WHITE.

GEORGE CRAMMOND.

President Lynch then introduced Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Gompers congratulated the International Typographical Union on its prosperous outlook, and referred to the coming eight-hour struggle. He complimented the organization on the masterly comprehensiveness of the report of the eight-hour committee, and said if not appreciated today it would be by those who came after us. He had watched with interest the growth of the International Typographical Union, and believed the trade should be in possession of the enjoyments of the shorter day. He referred to the address of President Ellis, of the United Typothetæ, and criticized some of the statements made therein. One of them was that the increased labor cost of introducing the nine-hour day was 33 per cent, and the increase in the eight-hour day would be 18 to 25 per cent. Mr. Ellis had asked the convention to recede from its eight-hour position because of the increased labor cost to the employer, and the threatened financial ruin, with no possible advantage to the printers. The introduction of the eight-hour day has never ruined any industry. It would be ruinous to the International Typographical Union to change its attitude on the shorter day.

The principle—the thesis of shorter hours—has been justified by the results in different industries. He pledged his personal and official support. Godspeed the movement—the uplifting of the fellow man to an appreciation of his rights and duties.

The chair again announced that delegates desiring corrections in the minutes should present the changes to the secretary from day to day.

After announcements of committee meetings the convention adjourned till 9 o'clock Friday morning.

President Lynch announced the report of the committee on eight-hour day as the first business in order, and said the report was before the convention for consideration.

Delegate Cahill (St. Paul) moved that the report of the eight-hour-day committee be adopted, and the secretary-treasurer be herewith authorized to have the same issued in pamphlet form and distributed to the members of subordinate unions at the earliest possible moment.

Digitized by Google

Delegate Hayes (Cleveland), chairman of the eight-hour committee, reviewed at length the history of the eight-hour movement, and discussed the address made before the convention by President Ellis, of the United Typothetæ of America.

Delegate Donnell (Cincinnati) moved that Delegate Hayes (Cleveland) prepare a synopsis of his address, and that it be made part of the records in connection with the eight-hour-day committee's report.

The motion was adopted.

The address of Delegate Hayes was as follows:

While the delegates are undoubtedly anxious to finish the work of this convention, considerable of which remains to be transacted, yet I believe that we should give further consideration to some facts that of necessity could not be incorporated in the committee's report, especially as the address of President Ellis, of the United Typothetæ of America, has been made a part of the record and might influence unthinking and careless members and cause them to become lukewarm toward the progressive movement in which we are enlisted.

The salient features of President Ellis' address, directed against the eight-hour day, were his cries of impraticability, and calamity and general ruination for the printing business if the shorter workday is enforced. His position is that of making assertions without presenting evidence to establish the facts. Not an iota of testimony, not a scrap of data, has been furnished to substantiate the statements made. The employing printers gave expression to similar sentiments when it was proposed to reduce the working hours from ten to nine per day. Yet that reform has been accomplished, and who will charge that it has proven impractical and that devastation and ruin has been spread through the printing trade? Neither is the assumption that production will be restricted based upon sound reasoning, as governmental statistics and our own knowledge of printing affairs demonstrate the fact that production was greatly stimulated when the working time was reduced from ten or more hours to nine hours per day. It is fallacious to assert that the output of printing will be reduced when avenues of employment are opened to two or three thousand idle printers, which is the mission of the International Typographical Union at present. On the contrary, those workers will become larger consumers, and thus benefit the whole of society.

This eight-hour movement is not a new one. J. Thorold Rogers tells us in his celebrated historical work, "Six Centuries of Work and Wages," that the eight-hour day prevailed in the last part of the fifteenth and the early part of the sixteenth centuries. That period is described as the golden age, and so prosperous had the people become that the privileged classes, fearful that their reign would be endangered, adopted coercive measures to keep the workers in subjection. The ruling class gradually lengthened the hours of toil, reduced wages and increased prices, and a long period of exploitation and suffering, darkness and chaos was the result.

It was not until 1824 that the anti-combination laws were repealed, after Robert Owens, the pioneer co-operator collectivist, had made a proposition to the British government to organize the industries of the country upon a basis that would require the labor of the men, women and children not longer than eight hours per day to provide for the well-being of all. Gradually the working time was reduced in succeeding years from sixteen to fourteen and twelve, and finally to ten per day. In 1888 the gas workers and general laborers, unskilled men, by the way, at one swoop cut the hours of toil from twelve to eight, and since that year every trade in Great Britain has been benefited by the reduction of the hours of toil.

In Australia, known universally as the eight-hour land, the movement for the shorter workday began in 1856. Although defeated in several disastrous strikes, the trade unions persevered in their efforts, and, supplemented with their political power, made steady gains. As I pointed out the other day, the Australian workingmen not only strike and boycott in shops, factories and mills when necessary, but they have seceded from both old political parties and also strike at the ballot box and in the legislative halls, and it is to their everlasting credit that when their labor party obtained possession of the national government, John Christian Watson, a journeyman printer, became premier for a brief time, until both old parties combined and ousted the labor cabinet from office. The laborites are also in control of a number of Australian states, and the printers are among the most conspicuous of the lawmakers.

It is singular, indeed, that the spokesman of the so-called open shop—the National Association of Manufacturers, of which the more or less notorious David M. Parry is at the head, and with which the United Typothetæ appears to be in sympathy—are unable to furnish us with any proofs of the impracticability and unjustness of the eight-hour workday here at home, but depend upon alleged facts imported from Australia, which are now being circulated through their press and which are intended to show that the eight-hour day and the Saturday half-holiday, are proving ruinous to that country. Yet all the governmental statistics, the British Board of Trade reports, as well as the accounts contained in Australian newspapers, demonstrate beyond the shadow of doubt that the claims made by certain American employers regarding industrial conditions in the antipodes are absolutely without foundation. These stories are circulated for a purpose—to discourage the workers of America from following the example of their brethren beyond the seas in combining industrially and politically.

As Mr. Gompers pointed out yesterday, the workers of continental Europe are making steady progress in reducing the working time and securing greater benefits for themselves. Perhaps you noticed in the St. Petersburg dispatches only recently that the printers of Russia were playing a leading part in the great strikes and demanding the eight-hour day. I know for a certainty that the shorter workday movement has also taken root in Japan, South Africa, and even in South America. Do the members of the typothetæ believe that we, the American workingmen—who are sometimes flattered with being more intelligent than the toilers of other countries—are going to lag at the tail-end of the procession? Certainly the printers will refuse to lock arms with the Chinese in walking for the industrial cake.

In our own country—on this North American continent—despite all obstacles, the eight-hour movement has been making steady progress since 1886, in which year the German-American Typographia (in job offices as well as newspapers), the cigarmakers and a number of smaller trades established the eight-hour workday. Subsequently the miners, carpenters, plumbers, bricklayers and other trades quite generally enforced the eight-hour day, so that now fully a million trade unionists, at the most conservative estimate, and including 25,000 printers, can sing the refrain: Eight hours for work, eight hours for sleep, and eight hours for recreation.

Why should we work any longer than bankers or lawyers or office holders or any professionals and politicians? It is true, paradoxical though it may seem, that the eight-hour day would prove beneficial to proprietors of job and book plants as well as employes, as stated in the committee's report. Quite naturally the front offices will close an hour earlier under the new system, which means one hour less figure juggling and business worry and one hour more real life and enjoyment for the employers. We are really doing Messrs. Ellis, Green, and the other members of the typothetæ a great favor, and they ought to appreciate that fact, for, after all, life should not be a mere sordid grab for dollars. There is an ethical side to this question. Man has a social as well as a physical nature, and while he must preserve his animal existence he must not do so at the expense of his social relations. If he becomes a mere drudge, our civilization is endangered, progress halts, retrogression begins, and slavery and chaos naturally follow.
